It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES.

ALBANY, Tuesday, June 4, 1867.

Pursuant to chapter 194, of the Laws of 1867, being an Act to provide for a Convention to revise and amend the Constitution, passed March 29, 1867, the Delegates duly elected thereto assembled at the Capitol in the city of Albany.

At eleven o'clock, A. M., the Convention was called to order by Hon. FRANCIS C. BARLOW, Secretary of State.

Rev. W. B. SPRAGUE, D.D., of Albany, addressed the throne of Grace in prayer, in words as follows:

Almighty and all gracious Father, we bow before Thee as the God of all the Nations of the earth. Thou liftest up one and puttest down another, and all are alike under Thy control. We recognize Thy gracious providence in the ordering of our lot, ever since our existence as a Nation commenced. We thank Thee that here, while yet this was savage ground, a seed was sown which has sprung up and expanded into a mighty tree, that has sent forth its boughs to the ends of the earth, and whose leaves we believe will be for the healing of the Nations. We thank Thee, that though Thou hast in retribution for our aggravated sins, sometimes inflicted upon us grievous National calamities, yet Thou hast in Thine own best time delivered us out of them, so we are now in the full enjoyment of our liberties and our institutions. We thank Thee specially for the favor with which Thou hast regarded this State in which our lot is cast; and we thank Thee for all the means of intellectual, moral and Christian culture, which we have here enjoyed. We thank Thee for all the intelligence, order and social elevation, which here prevail. We thank Thee for the good influence this State has exerted, not merely upon the sister States of the Union, but upon other Nations of the globe. We thank Thee for the wisdom of our fathers in which originated the Constitution under which we live, and for the wisdom of their successors by which it has been, from time to time, improved; and for the wisdom of the present generation, which aspires still to amend and, if it may be, to perfect the work of those who have gone before them. And now, we desire gratefully to acknowledge Thine hand in all the propitious circumstances which attend this occasion. We invoke Thy blessing upon this large deliberative assembly, who are assembled for one of the most important purposes which can occupy mortals. We ask, first of all, that Thou would impress them deeply with a sense of the importance of the object which has convened them together, and grant that they may rightly understand their duty and have grace and strength given them faithfully to discharge it; and that they may discharge their duty successfully, wilt Thou grant to them to-day a fresh baptism of the spirit of christian patriotism and good will toward each other; let them realize their responsibility, not only to those whose interests they are immediately charged with, but toward that God who has placed them in this important position. Grant, most merciful Father, that every discussion may be conducted with candor and courtesy and unity, that every measure may be adopted with wisdom, and that the result of all those deliberations may be to add to the stability of our institutions, and also to intensify our influence as a State, and to bring us into more intimate relations with the great Ruler of the world. Now grant that all the members of this Convention may be under Thy gracious care, during their residence in the midst of us, and wilt Thou watch over and preserve their families during the period of their separation from them; and when they shall have accomplished the object of their meeting, may they be returned safely to their homes, rejoicing in Thy goodness—rejoicing in the approval of a good conscience—rejoicing in the approbation of their contemporaries—rejoicing in the assurance that their memories shall be embalmed by a grateful posterity. All these blessings, together with the forgiveness of our sins, we ask in the name of Jesus, our Redeemer—Amen.

HON. ERASTUS CLARK, Deputy Secretary of State, then proceeded to call the roll of the Convention. All the delegates responded except the following:

Mr. FOLGER moved that the Convention do now proceed to elect a president of the Convention, and that two tellers be appointed by the chair to count the votes.

Mr. STRONG—I would prefer, as there is but one candidate, that he should be elected by acclamation.

The CHAIR—The statute requires that the president shall be elected by ballot.

Mr. STRONG—I withdraw my motion.

Mr. J. BROOKS—Before we proceed to an election by ballot for the President of this Convention, I am requested by some of my fellow-members to say a few words. The minority of the members of this body assembled this morning for consultation, and acting upon the wise precedent which the Legislature of this State established at its last session, deemed it wise to present no particular candidate to this body. This Convention has assembled for an important object—namely—to revise the organic law of this State. Looking to the proceedings of the Legislature, we have seen with great approbation that that body enacted a law which secured the election of sixteen Republican and sixteen Democratic members throughout the State at large, and thereby gave an admonition, if they did not establish a precedent, which seemed to justify us, or at least to suggest to us that this Constitutional Convention, about to assemble for the formation of our great organic law, should not be organized for party purposes or for party organization; and though there were precedents to the contrary in the history of the State, yet that action of a Legislature opposed to us in political feeling, was deemed so wise that we have acquiesced in it, and have presented no particular candidate to be voted for by the minority, leaving each member to vote for whomsoever he may please. We have deeply regretted that others have deemed it wise to take a contrary course; and though it is very natural and proper, and no matter of complaint by us that the majority of this body should select its own men for officers, yet, it is matter of regret to us that in a Constitutional Convention, which has met to form the organic law that shall govern this State, the presiding officer should go into the chair so bound down by party ties and party obligations as not to feel himself absolved from the party that created him, and respect the views of the minority represented on the floor of this house. And we have apprehended with fear, and we certainly have a perfect right to fear, from what we have read in this morning's papers of the action of a body that met elsewhere, that the action of this Convention in selecting a presiding officer will be that of a mere party organization, and deprive us in the minority of those equitable and just rights which the minority ought always to have, not only in a legislative body, but more especially in a body like this, whose action will establish for future time the great organic law of this State. And we have the more regretted it, not only that they have elected all the other officers, but particularly one officer in the same manner, who is to be—I will not say the recording angel of this body—but who is to take down every word we utter for the future consideration of those who may come after us, and who wish to consult the Constitution we may frame. We have thought the stenographer of this body, if not the recording angel, should in the spirit of equity and justice make a record which will be free to all and just to all. And though we have no doubt that the officer they have selected will do his duty in justice to all, from his high professional reputation, yet we have deeply regretted that his selection by a party should seem to place him under any party obligations whatsoever, that would make his record more favorable to one side than it would be to the other, in a minority in this body. I have deemed it proper to make these few brief remarks prior to the ballots that the minority in this body will give, not at all in censure or condemnation of the majority, but in explanation of the course that we have taken, and as a justification of that course to our people throughout this State.

The motion of Mr. Folger was then put to the vote of the Convention, and was declared carried.

The Chair appointed as tellers, Mr. Curtis of Richmond, and Mr. Cassidy of Albany.

The Convention proceeded to vote for President and the Chair announced the result as follows:

William A. Wheeler having received a majority of the votes of the Convention, the Chair announced that he was duly elected President of the Convention, and appointed Messrs. Harris and Murphy a committee to conduct the President elect to the chair.

On taking his seat the President said:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION:—With a grateful appreciation of your kind partiality, I enter with unfeigned diffidence upon the discharge of the duties to which, by your ballots, you have assigned me, encouraged, nevertheless, by the conviction that honest efforts faithfully and impartially to administer the trust, will secure to me a just degree of forbearance and support. We are, in the history of our State, the fifth body convened at the command of its sovereign people for the especial consideration of its fundamental law. We are to review, and seek better to adapt to the demands of our time, the work of our predecessors, embracing as well men who carried the direct inspiration of the Revolution into their labors, as many others of a later period whose names gild our historic page, and to all of whose combined patriotism and wisdom we are indebted for the imperial and priceless heritage we enjoy. To remold the organic law of the first Commonwealth of the world, Empire in name and Empire in fact, in which law are to rest the guarantees and safeguards of the rights, the interests and the welfare of our present and future millions of people, is a task challenging our best efforts and our highest wisdom. Of the work confided to us, I will not detain you to speak in specific detail. Prominent however is the devising of means to secure the full benefits of that system of public works so closely interwoven with our growth and prosperity, which has stimulated as well our own as the agriculture of the great West, which has created cities and villages, and made vast contributions to our internal and foreign commerce—the regulation and government of our State institutions and multifarious corporations, municipal and other—a wise, just and economic adjustment of State finance—the conferring of such legislative powers as shall insure honest and general legislation, and an improved system of Judiciary which shall supply efficient remedy and prompt redress for every violation of the rights of person or property. But, gentlemen, let us not forget that it is not in these things alone, that the true life of a State consists. It consists rather, as has been aptly said elsewhere, in that public spirit which is the soul of Commonwealths, without which empire has no glory, and the wealth of nations is a source of corruption and decay. I mean that public spirit best illustrated in our recent great conflict, by the sublime national enthusiasm, the matchless patience, the heroic strength, and the unstinted sacrifice of blood and treasure, by all of which we rescued from the toils and grasp of treason our imperiled nationality. A State will be great, prosperous and stable in the degree in which it possesses this spirit. Its germ is free, equal, conscious, intelligent and enfranchised manhood. To develop and foster such manhood is the highest civil duty which can engage the patriotic statesman. We owe it to the inspiration of the age in which we live—we owe it to the cause of universal civil liberty—we owe it to the struggling liberalism of the old world—we owe it to the memories of the myriads of our martyred dead who sleep their last sleep upon countless battle-fields, to make proclamation, by the sovereign majesty of this great State, that every man within the limits of its broad domain, of whatever race or color, or however poor, helpless or lowly he may be, in virtue of his MANHOOD, is entitled to the full enjoyment of every right appertaining to the most exalted citizenship. This done, we have only to secure the means of free, universal education—thus keeping power and intelligence hand in hand—to realize the highest ideals of popular Government. Such, gentlemen, is the mission to which we are called. We ought, rising above the low grounds of partisanship, to inspire our work with an earnest, whole-souled patriotism, enlivened, regenerated and sanctified by all the trials of the fiery crucible through which we have just passed. It is our exalted privilege to initiate the movement of bringing our State up to the full standard of the theories of a true Republican Government. In the progress of the march to that destiny to which the God of Nations is unmistakably leading us, we have reached a higher plane of our national life. The duty is laid upon us of reaping from the great struggle through which we have made this advance, such fruits, such influence and such power as shall carry us to the highest attainable points of enlightened and Christian civilization. In this beneficent work, New York should maintain her supremacy among her sister commonwealths, leading in the march of human liberty and human progress, as she led in marshaling the armies which won them for all nations, kindreds, tongues and peoples who take shelter under the folds of the banner of the Republic. Let us, whose action is so vitally to affect the future of our State, trusting to that Superior Power so signally manifested in our National behalf in the battling years from which we have just emerged, and with confirmed faith in a Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," be true to our trust, true to ourselves, and true to truth. So shall we faithfully meet and wisely discharge the obligations of our day and generation, and advance the growing grandeur of the towering State, whose citizenship is our highest, proud-est boast. Again thanking you gentlemen, for your kind consideration, I await your further pleasure.

Mr. HARRIS offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That Luther Caldwell be and he is hereby appointed Secretary of the Convention.

Which was adopted.

Mr. CALDWELL thereupon took the Constitutional oath of office which was administered by the President.

Mr. FOLGER offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That Edward F. Underhill be and he is hereby appointed Stenographer to the Constitutional Convention.

Which was adopted.

Mr. ELY offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That Samuel C. Pierce be and he is hereby appointed Sergeant-at-Arms of this Convention.

Which was adopted.

Mr. ARCHER offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That John H. Kemper be and he is hereby appointed Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms of this Convention.

Which was adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That until the adoption of permanent rules for the regulation of the proceedings of the Convention, the rules of the Assembly of this State be followed as far as they may be applicable; and that a select committee of five be appointed by the President to report a code of rules suited to the wants of the Convention.

Which was adopted.

MR. BELL offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That the Secretary be requested to confer with the regular clergy of this city, and request them to make such arrangements, that the daily sessions of this Convention may be opened by prayer.

Which was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That a committee of two members from each judicial district be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be to consider and report the best practical mode of proceeding to revise the constitution, which was adopted.

MR. SILVESTER—The Legislature in the act which it passed to provide for this Convention to revise and amend the Constitution, provided for the election of certain officers by the Convention, and of the appointment of certain other officers by the President and Secretary. There seems in the act which was passed by the Legislature to be no provision for the appointment of a postmaster for the Convention. Every person familiar with the proceedings of any deliberative body is aware that they have found it necessary for the correct transaction of business to have a postmaster. It will be necessary for us very often to have conference with our constituents, to receive communications from them and send communications to them, and for that purpose a postmaster of this body would be very essential. Undoubtedly the Legislature omitted to provide for the election and appointment of a postmaster through inadvertence.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would remind the gentleman that there is no question before the convention.

MR. SILVESTER—I propose to introduce the resolution and to preface it with a few remarks showing the pertinency of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT—If the gentleman will first offer his resolution and base his remarks upon it, it will be a little more in order.

MR. SILVESTER then offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Peter J. Hotailing, of Columbia, be and hereby is, appointed Postmaster for this Convention.

MR. GREELEY—I trust this resolution will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman from Columbia has the floor.

MR. SILVESTER—I ask that the body of the memorial that I sent up to the Clerk's desk may be read.

The Secretary read the memorial as follows:—

"The undersigned, members of the Legislature of 1867, hereby testify to the efficiency and strict attention to the duties of his office of Assistant Postmaster to the Assembly, of Mr. Peter J. Hotailing, and we sincerely recommend him to the Constitutional Convention as a suitable person to perform the duties of Postmaster to that body."

MR. SILVESTER—The recommendation of the Legislature bears date subsequently to the act passed to provide for the Convention, showing that the Legislature intended that this Convention should have the benefit of these labors of a Postmaster, although in the act itself they had omitted to provide for the election and appointment of such an officer. Mr. Hotailing seems to have performed these duties to the satisfaction of the Legislature, and is eminently competent to perform the duties of this body, he having had the experience of a postmaster.

MR. FOLGER—I merely rise to notice a remark made by the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] that the omission to provide for a postmaster was through the inadvertence of the Legislature. That subject, sir, was considered in the Committee on Judiciary and in the Committee of Conference upon the bill which has called this body into existence, and it was considered when we provided for a sergeant-at-arms, assistant sergeant-at-arms and eight door-keepers, that we provided for a sufficient force to protect this body from invasion from abroad, and ample force to conduct into and out of it, all the mail matter we might reasonably send to or receive from our constituents. Theoretically, in the Senate of this State, there is no postmaster; but practically, the deputy sergeant-at-arms always officiates in that capacity, and supplies every want for an office of that description. Just so in preparing this bill, there was no inadvertence; we thought the deputy sergeant-at-arms might very well, without taking a great deal of time from duties which would necessarily call him elsewhere, conduct the postal department of this Convention as has been done in the Senate. Because, we can readily perceive, that there is quite a difference in the matter of detail of the proceedings of this Convention and the proceedings of the Legislature. Here we deal with generalities for the whole State, and not for special localities, and there will not be so much need of correspondence between us and those we may leave at home, as there would be if we sat here passing one thousand bills, as was done last year. For that reason the committee, and I think the Legislature, thought, that the officers in the bill were amply sufficient to carry out all the duties of this Convention, and the deputy sergeant-at-arms might very well act as postmaster to this body. Then, in addition to that, there is another consideration, and that is, that the Comptroller will not pay this officer, if he should be elected. I know that he will not pay any money, if it is not provided for in any law, and the law provides for no such office. When the postmaster, if he should be elected, applies to him for payment, he will say: "Where is the act that will allow me to draw my warrant for this upon the Treasurer?" and it will not be found.

MR. SILVESTER—In respect to the observation that the Comptroller will not pay the postmaster if elected, I would merely answer in reply, that the Convention of 1846, I believe, elected several officers who had not been provided for in the act, and a subsequent Legislature provided for the payment of those officers. I suppose the same rule could be adopted in this case; and this gentleman, if he be elected, or any gentleman elected or appointed Postmaster, would run the risk of being paid by the Legislature. I did not suppose it was necessary to protect us from invasion from abroad. I do not want any further legislation with that view, but it was rather to further invasion by the people and to get suggestions of their views.

MR. GREELEY—I trust that this Convention will not commence its labors by violating the laws of the State, in regard to the officers provided for. Certainly eight door-keepers must be four too many, and two sergeants-at-arms at least one too many, and we could spare one of these officers who could act as postmaster. I trust that this resolution will not pass.

MR. STRATTON offered the following amendment to the resolution offered by Mr. Silvester:

Resolved, That the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms be and he is hereby instructed to discharge the duties of Postmaster of Convention.

Which was adopted.

MR. SHERMAN offered the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Stratton: "And that the Sergeant-at-arms detail from among the messengers a sufficient number to act as assistants and messengers to the Postmaster."

Which was adopted.

The question was taken on the resolution offered by Mr. Silvester, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

MR. FOLGER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the Convention adjourns this day, it adjourn until 4 o'clock P. M., and that there be a session beginning at that hour for the purpose of drawing for seats in such manner as shall be determined.

Which was adopted.

MR. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That until otherwise determined, this Convention will meet in this Assembly Chamber daily at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Which was adopted.

The Constitutional oath of office was then administered by the President to Samuel C. Pierce, Sergeant at Arms, John H. Kemper, assistant Sergeant at Arms, and Edward F. Underhill, Stenographer to the Convention.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to offer the following resolution of inquiry, which if it is held to be too soon, I will withdraw it. I will read the resolution and then make a few remarks.

Resolved, That the Comptroller be requested to prepare and communicate to this Convention a tabular statement showing:

1. The original cost of the several canals of this State, including that of any enlargement or extension thereof.
2. The aggregate cost of each canal as aforesaid, including the superintendence, repairs and legal interest on the cost of construction up to the close of the last fiscal year.
3. The aggregate receipts or income of each canal computed in like manner.
4. The net cost (or profit) of each canal up to the close of the last fiscal year.
5. The annual receipts or income of the State from each canal, with the annual cost of superintendence and repair, respectively of such canals up to the close of the last fiscal year.

The gentleman from New York, (Mr. Brooks) who has addressed this Convention I think rather out of season, made some remarks as to party aspects of organization, which I wish to say a word about in speaking to this resolution. I offered this in endeavoring to get the clearest and fullest statement possible with regard to our canals, being determined to act here with the most entire independence of party upon this as upon every other question, with a single view to the best interests of the whole people of the State. I was among the gentlemen who met here last evening to consult and consider the proper mode of organization of this Convention. I did so as I could not have done otherwise, simply because I believed from observing the facts all around me throughout the last two or three years, that the Democratic party of this State did not consider it wise,—or perhaps I should say timely—now to enter upon the work of revising the Constitution of our State. They had a perfect right so to believe. I met them at the polls acting in this spirit, and I found them in the press acting in this spirit, and, in my judgment, if there had been a Democratic majority in the Legislature last winter, no Convention would now be assembled, or this year held. I regard as imposed on the Republican majority of this Convention the duty of revising the Constitution. I apprehend when we meet at the polls, no matter what the Constitution shall be, it will be boldly confronted by the general opposition of the party which is not in the majority in this Convention. I think with reference to that fact, that the action of this Convention—the Constitution as we shall frame it—will be met with a political party opposition, no matter what it shall contain. I deem it necessary and proper that the political majority in this Convention shall take upon themselves the labor and responsibility of organization, and, if I may say so, of directing its action.

Mr. ALVORD—I believe, sir, I am correctly informed, when I state that, under the law by which we are organized, a manual will be laid upon our desks which will contain in substance, and I believe in form, an entire answer to the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester. (Mr. Greeley). Each and every requisite of that resolution is answered in that manual, which will be laid upon our table in a very few days. I trust the gentleman will consent that his resolution shall lie on the table. It strikes me that the passage of this resolution, under these circumstances, must necessarily increase the expense to the State, and for that reason also I trust the gentleman will consent that his resolution lie on the table. I wish to say a few words more. I do not think with the gentleman from Westchester, (Mr. Greeley) that the Democratic party acting either here, through their representatives upon this floor, or as part and parcel of the people of the State of New York, will be inclined under any and every circumstance to go against the adoption of a Constitution which shall be made by this body. I believe, if we go in the right spirit to work, and frame a Constitution to subserve the great interests of the people of the State of New York, that the Democratic party represented here will vote in favor of that Constitution, and that the Party at the polls will respond to the action of their representatives. I move, sir, that for the present, the resolution of the gentleman from New York do lie on the table.

Mr. TILDEN—Will the gentleman withdraw his motion for a moment, in order that I may make a single observation?

Mr. ALVORD—As I do not wish to stifle debate, I will withdraw it.

Mr. TILDEN—Mr. President: The observations which my friend, the delegate from Westchester, (Mr. Greeley), has deemed it proper to make to this Convention, seem to require that, in behalf of those like myself—(and I speak for myself, and for a few others whose opinions on this subject I know) we should be allowed to say, as we do say, that we have met here upon this occasion under the sworn duty which we have assumed, to discharge that duty in good faith, and to the best of our ability. And, sir, I do not hesitate to say that it would not be good faith for men to come here determined before hand to vote against whatever the wisdom and deliberation of this Convention might finally determine to adopt. If I were disposed, as I am not at this period of the discussion, to retort, I might be inclined to say, that if the gentleman knows there is to be put into this Constitution what we ought not to or cannot support, then we would be warranted in coming to the conclusion he has stated. Not otherwise, sir. Whether it be wise or otherwise that this body should assemble—whether it is the most opportune and auspicious occasion in which the people of the State of New York should assemble in their original sovereignty to form a new fundamental law—upon that question undoubtedly there have been very grave doubts entertained. Very wide differences of opinion, if this be the most fitting and auspicious occasion to undertake this work, have been entertained. But it is enough that it is undertaken, and it is our duty here, acting in a spirit of the largest good faith, to endeavor to make that work as perfect as it is possible for this body to make it. If, then, it fails to be such as we can give our support to, we shall undoubtedly express our opposition to the conclusions and the labors of this Convention, in a way that is not only our right, but our duty to do. Mr. President, I see around me a large number of men, not of my own political associations, in whose integrity, in whose honor, and in whose sense of public duty, I have the greatest confidence. I do not think that we ought, any of us to act—I do not think that those gentlemen ought to act—I do not think that those even who have been most despairing of good results in reference to the proceedings of this Convention ought to act upon any presumption beforehand that this Convention is to be a failure. If we think so let us adjourn tomorrow and go home. If, on the other hand, we are to make a fair trial—if we are to make an experiment in good faith, to improve the organic law of the State—let us not begin with any mutual misconception of each others motives. Let us not assume that the majority of this Convention have determined before hand to put anything into it that will secure our opposition, and let them not suppose that we are determined to make this opposition whatever they may put in. Sir, I think it extremely probable that there are many questions here upon which party lines as they now exist in this State will not be distinctly drawn. I think there will be many questions upon which gentlemen will act with independence, with candor, and with wisdom, and I simply make these observations for the purpose that there should be no misunderstanding and no misconception of the position which I, for one, occupy, and I know of many others who think with me on these questions.

The PRESIDENT—The resolution giving rise to debate will lie on the table under the rules.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I rise to say that the gentleman who has charge of the manual states that one volume is printed, and is ready to be laid on the table of members.

The PRESIDENT.—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. E. A. Brown), that there is no question before the Convention.

Mr. GOULD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to prepare in bill-form a copy of the present State Constitution, to be printed with open spaces for interlineation and memoranda and with such comparative notes and references as may be found practicable.

Mr. GOULD—My object in introducing the resolution I will now state. On going to the office of the Secretary of State I saw and examined the manual as prepared. I found Dr. Hough, the Secretary of the commission appointed under the law, had for his own private information prepared a document such as is called for by the resolution. On looking it over, it seemed to me most admirably calculated to facilitate the business of this Convention. It has under the sections of our present Constitution all the corresponding provisions of all other Constitutions of the States. Such examinations and comparisons will frequently have to be made, and it struck me that it would facilitate the labors of the Convention to have such a document. I am informed that under the law this cannot be printed in the Manual unless it have the special sanction by resolution of this body, and I have, therefore, offered the resolution with that view.

The question was taken on Mr. Gould's resolution and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOLGER—I wish to offer an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester, (Mr. Greeley) which may lie over with the original, under the rule.

Mr. GREELEY—I wish it understood that I will accept all amendments.

The CLERK read the amendment offered by Mr. Folger, as follows:

Add thereto the following: "And a table which will show with how much each so-called lateral canal should be credited for its contributions to the revenues of this State, which, in the yearly official tables and reports, are credited to the Erie canal."

Mr. HATCH offered the following amendment to the resolution offered by Mr. Greeley:

Add "and also the amount of outstanding canal debt and when due, and when the same would be paid, taking as a basis of calculation the future average of our toll receipts for the last seven years."

The amendment laid over under the rule.

Mr. LARREMORE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the privileges of the floor of this Convention be and the same are hereby extended to the members of the former State Conventions who may be temporarily in this city.

Which was adopted.

On motion of Mr. WEED, the Convention took a recess till four o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at four o'clock.

The CLERK read the resolution under which the Convention had taken a recess.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the drawing for seats, assigned as the business of the present session, be adopted according to the mode usually practiced in the Assembly, viz.:

1. Folded ballots to be prepared, each containing the name of a member.
2. These ballots to be examined and compared with the official list by a Committee of two, to be appointed for that purpose by the President.
3. The ballots to be placed in a box, and thoroughly shaken in presence of the Convention.
4. The members then to retire outside the bar.
5. A person other than a member or officer to be designated by the President to draw the ballots.
6. Each ballot as drawn to be handed to the President, and to be opened by him; then handed to the Clerk who shall announce the name drawn.
7. The person whose name shall be drawn, to select his seat and to occupy it till the completion of the drawing, under penalty of forfeiture if vacated.
8. The drawing to continue in this manner till concluded.

Mr. CONGER—It may not be expedient at this time to suggest any modification of the resolution, which has doubtless been prepared in accordance with the wishes of the majority of this Convention, but it seems to me, and I desire to draw the attention of the gentlemen present to the fact, that we are not constituted as the Assembly, that we are not here to-day representing Assembly districts, but in obedience to the high behests of the Legislature of the State we are here as the representatives of the various Senatorial districts. It seems to me, therefore, proper, that some regard should be had, in the drawing of seats, to the manner in which this body is constituted, and that instead of drawing the seats as individual rights, we should draw seats to represent the Senatorial districts here represented. And this would add vastly to the convenience of the gentlemen representing one district. Had the old rule prevailed in the construction of this body, then every gentleman here present would be representing an Assembly district, and as such would have a paramount right to his seat as an individual representative of an individual district. But if I understand the meaning and purpose of the law by which we come together here, we represent, four, five, six or eight of us, as the case may be, one single Senatorial district. I would, therefore, respectfully suggest, and move as an amendment, in order to try the temper and sense of the Convention on this subject, in reference to the manner in which we are constituted as a body, that the seats be drawn so as to represent Senatorial Districts, and that the gentlemen who are entitled to, and do represent, Senatorial Districts, take the number of seats which belong to them as of right. I don't know how this proposition may strike other gentlemen, but for myself I would be pleased to be associated with all the gentlemen representing my Senatorial District. I have no predilections as to their political opinions whatever. The gentleman who this morning spoke for Westchester, (Mr. Greeley) is my associate in the representation of that District—the Ninth Senatorial District. The Delegates at large have been so distributed, that in New York many gentlemen represent the Senatorial Districts there. In the case of the Ninth Senatorial District, besides those selected by the people—four in number—there are gentlemen here as Delegates at Large, representing that district, and I should like for purposes of conference and for the convenience of the discussion of local interests, to have these gentlemen brought together in such a way that it would be more convenient for them to consult together. With entire respect to the gentleman who offers this resolution, and I trust, with due delicacy, as representing those who have been described here this morning, as in the minority, I still feel with great confidence that this Convention will remember its constitution and the manner in which it is constituted, and that those gentlemen do not stand here in their individual rights as representing mere localities, but unitedly, Senatorial Districts. I submit my proposition in the shape of an amendment.

The CLERK read the amendment as follows:

That the drawing of seats be for each Senatorial District represented in this Convention, and that the members of such district select their seats according to their discretion.

Mr. SHERMAN—The plan I have offered seems to me as fair as any that could be adopted, and it is one that is equally practicable, while the one which the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has suggested seems to me not to be practicable. And the one I have offered is as fair to the minority as it is to the majority. If the gentleman, however, can offer one which is at the same time to be fair and practicable, I shall be very glad to hear and to adopt it in the place of my own.

Mr. GREELEY—It seems to me the proposition would be just as fair to allow the Senatorial districts to draw in the same manner, and then allow the gentlemen here present each of them to take their seats upon that drawing. It would shorten the balloting very much, as we should have but thirty-two ballots to be drawn. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is certainly fair and practicable, and we should get through much sooner, and in that way we could allow gentlemen to take their seats together or separate as they may choose.

Mr. WEED—May I ask the gentleman from Westchester (Mr. Greeley) what district he represents?

Mr. GREELEY—I say that I would take my chance with the gentleman from the Ninth Senatorial district.

Mr. WEED—There are no representatives from the Senatorial districts, except the four especially elected. Because I happen to live in a Senatorial district, or because a gentleman happens to live in a Senatorial district, and is elected upon the ticket at large, he is not the Delegate of that Senatorial district, nor has the special charge of that Senatorial district upon his hands. It seems to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] is perfectly impracticable. Under the plan suggested in the original resolution, each member here when his name is drawn will be authorized to choose his seat in that part of the house that suits him best. The room is not so large but that, during the deliberations, the members from any Senatorial District can consult with each other.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I hope the original resolution may prevail. I know it would be agreeable in a social point of view, that gentlemen who come from the same locality and who are acquaintances, should be seated together, but I doubt whether the influence of such coteries and associations would be beneficial upon the deliberations of this body. We have seen this morning that in the minds of some, there is a disposition to make party decisions, while other minds seem to be measurably free from it. I believe we shall be more likely to keep ourselves aloof from such considerations if we commingle with each other freely without reference to our previous politics or previous locations. I think it is the case in every Senatorial district that the gentlemen from that Senatorial district are all of the same politics—I mean those elected from the Senatorial districts—with one exception throughout the entire State. We find there is one gentleman from the city of New York who seems to have been elected, of different politics than that of the other three members, from that district. In other cases you will put the four men agreeing in politics side by side. And these men have none of the results produced upon their minds which would be produced if men of different politics were thrown side by side, hap-hazard. I do not believe in coming into this Convention with a feeling that it is undesirable that we mingle together, men who have been Democrats, or who have been Republicans, to exchange ideas with each other. I trust that if there is any mode by which this clanishness can be prevented in this Convention, that mode may be adopted. I am as pleasantly situated in my associations as any man can be or would like to be, certainly as much so as any man coming from any other part of the State, but I don't believe it is best for me or my friends that we should isolate ourselves in this Convention, and sit together as a clan, instead of being separate.

Mr. TILDEN—There seems to be some misapprehension on the part of the delegates in reference to the original proposition of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman]; it is not that seats be assigned according to drawing, but by the choice of the individual drawn. I confess it seems to me that the original proposition is the best. It will give me great pleasure to have a seat among the delegates that come from my own locality, but I think it is very well that we should be all shaken up together, and "commingled," as my friend says. I think we are not any of us here to represent geographical districts in any peculiar and exclusive sense. I don't think there is anything in the circumstance that we are some of us elected from certain Senatorial districts instead of Assembly districts to determine us to depart from the method adopted in the Convention of 1846, and in the Assembly since. On the whole, I cannot say I have any special preference for, or objection to, the proposition of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], but I think the other system is preferable, besides having the force of usage and prescription in its favor. But this proposition is not complete, as it does not include the cases of Delegates at large, and will not be unless it be amended so that Delegates at Large can be assumed to be representatives of the particular Senatorial districts in which they happen to reside. With that amendment it would be adequate to the purpose. There would then, perhaps, be some confusion in regard to four or five delegates from the Senatorial districts in assigning them their seats. The other is the simpler and most direct mode or the one most usual, and in my judgment on the whole matter, better adapted to the purpose.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. Conger and was declared to be lost.

The question then recurred on the original resolution of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. WEED moved that delegates residing in a Senatorial district be authorized to draw seats for any delegate from that district who might be absent at the drawing, which was carried.

The Chair appointed, under the resolution of Mr. Sherman, Mr. Frank and Mr. Weed to compare the ballots prepared with the list of delegates.

Mr. S. W. FULLERTON, a delegate to the Convention, appeared and took the Constitutional oath.

Mr. FRANK announced that himself and colleague had compared the ballots with the list of delegates, and had found the same to be correct.

Delegates then withdrew without the bar of the Convention, when the drawing of seats was proceeded with to its completion.

On motion of Mr. AXTELL, the Convention adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, June 5, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. T. F. MORROW.

The journal of the previous day was read and approved.

Mr. A. D. RUSSELL, a delegate, appeared in the Convention and took the constitutional oath of office, which was administered by the President.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to cause the removal of the temporary partitions on the south side of the Assembly Chamber, connecting with the room of the sergeant-at-arms and cloak room, in order to furnish additional light and air to that portion of the chamber.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT offered the following amendment:

And to extend the railing constituting the bar of the house, to the pillar next the chimney.

Which was adopted.

The question then recurred on the resolution of Mr. Francis, as amended, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President to inquire upon what terms full, verbatim, reports of the debates and proceedings of this Convention may be published in two or more daily papers of this city.

Which was adopted.

Mr. TAPPAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Convention be and he is hereby directed to supply each member of the Convention with a copy of the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1846, and to apply to the Comptroller for the payment of the expense thereof.

Mr. CORBITT—I would like to ascertain, Mr. President, if it is possible, how many members of the Convention have already copies of the proceedings of the Convention of 1846. I am informed by my colleagues that most of us have copies.

Mr. FOLGER moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Which was carried.

Mr. POND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a Committee of five be appointed by the chair to inquire and report upon the expediency of adjourning this Convention to Saratoga.

Mr. BICKFORD moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. POND—Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT—The resolution giving rise to debate, it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. ANDREWS—Mr. PRESIDENT: It devolves upon me to make formal announcement to this Convention, of the decease, last evening, of one of the members of this body, by a sudden and wholly unexpected event. And thus it is, that death already, within our limited circle, has asserted its dominion over the race; and, sir, I am so oppressed with the suddenness and appalling character of the event to which I have referred, that I am utterly unable properly to express to this Convention the feelings which it suggests. I make this announcement, sir, as one of the colleagues of the deceased, with whom I have always been on intimate personal, and intimate professional relations, and whom I accompanied to this city, well knowing that he deeply felt the responsibility resting upon him, in common with the other members of this Convention in respect to the important work which has been confided to it. In the very vigor of his life, and in the prime of his manhood, this delegate has been stricken down in death, and his presence no longer will be seen or felt among us. He was a native of the county of Onondaga, which sent him accredited to this Convention. He had lived there during his whole life up to this time, and has ever been trusted and honored by the citizens of his native county, not only in respect to the local positions which he has held, but in respect to wider fields of public trust, to which he has been assigned. He was first elected as Surrogate of the county of Onondaga, and with diligence and fidelity discharged the duties of that position. He was afterwards, two years ago, assigned to a wider sphere of public action, having been sent to represent his own Assembly District in the Legislature of the State. He came here without experience, but a knowledge of his professional character gave him a position upon one of the most important Committees of the House,—that of the Judiciary,—and by circumstances which prevented the personal attention during a great share of the session of the chief of that Committee, upon him was devolved during the first term of his legislative experience to a considerable extent the molding and shaping of the legislation of the State. He was returned again the last winter as a representative of his district to the Assembly of this State, and the rare intelligence and the industry which he had previously brought to the positions which had been assigned him the first year, properly led to his designation as the chairman of the Committee upon the Judiciary. And, sir, there are many gentlemen here present who can testify to his wisdom, to his industry, and to his intelligence as the chief and leading member of that committee during the last year. I do not propose, sir, to enter at length into any statements in reference to the character of the deceased. I can say that, while he was not distinguished for brilliant qualities, he had those substantial traits of character which ever gave him influence and position in the community where he was known, and those will be the sincerest mourners at his grave who have known him longest and best, and who have been enabled by their knowledge thus derived of him, to place upon his character that just estimate to which it was entitled. But that career which had opened so auspiciously for him, has been suddenly terminated, and, it seems to me that this event may not be without its proper lesson upon those of this body who remain. Our work is left, although he shall take no share in its responsibilities, and we may perhaps be led to greater soberness and earnestness, in the performance of the important work which has been assigned to this body. And moreover we may be all led to cherish still more sacredly than we ever have before the principle that our liberties, our lives, and our property are due and owing to the constant recognition, under all circumstances, of the supremacy of the law. I forbear to continue these remarks. I have said what I have been able to say in justice to a friend, in justice to a public spirited and high-minded citizen, and I leave it to other members of this Convention to indicate such course of action as shall be deemed appropriate by it under these circumstances.

Mr. ALVORD—I have, sir, for a long time been in the habit of occasionally coming from my native county as its representative, upon the floor of the Legislature of this State, at this city, but never, sir, through the whole history of my life, have I been called upon until now, to speak upon an occasion like this, and I deeply feel the great weight that rests upon me; because, more than a colleague, more than with me, a native of my native county, I have lost an honored and a dear personal friend. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, without any consciousness of the effort that was made to destroy his life, he sank at once, without an exclamation, into the arms of death. Sir, we are about to bear his remains from here back to the county that gave him birth; we are about to bear them to the arms of that family, who have surrounded him in the past, and who have looked up to him with confidence and with hope and with love; and it is necessary also for me to say to this Convention that we bear him not only to those who are attached to him by blood, but we bear him to a family of mourners of almost the entire population of the city of his residence and of the county of his birth. Deservedly high, sir, he stood in the estimation of the people of that county; deservedly high he stood in the estimation of all who ever approached him, and I trust in the God that rules over us, that the warning which has been given by his sudden departure from amongst us, will teach us that "in the midst of life we are in death," and will so impress upon our minds the necessity of doing what shall remain for us to do in this world, that we shall do it diligently and well. Mr. Hiscock, sir, was born in the town of Pompey, in the county of Onondaga, in the year 1824. The son of a farmer, commencing in early life, under the necessities that crowded around the family, as a laborer in the field, but soon emerging from that position, anxious and desirous to permit his intellect to grow and expand, he stood outside of the family circle, and with his own hands, and with the work of his own brain, brought himself to the position which he occupied but yesterday. Sir, upon him had leaned those brothers of his, younger than him in years, and he had brought them up alongside with him, also to the position of eminence and honor in our midst. He has been eminently sir, from the beginning, to the end of his career, a self made man, working out with his own intellect and with his own arm, all positions which have been given him. I cannot add upon this occasion anything more than what has been said by my colleague in reference to Mr. Hiscock, and I leave with him also, to the body of this Convention, such course as they shall deem proper to take upon this occasion.

Mr. WEED — To receive the tidings of the death of a friend, stricken down under any circumstances, is sad and appalling; but to have that friend stricken down, as it were, by your side, in health, in the full vigor of manhood, is terrible. Last evening the deceased was for a few moments before his death, in intimate, friendly conversation with myself, in the full vigor of his manhood, and in full health and strength, when in a moment the ball of the assassin laid him low. As has been well said by his associates, and those who have known him intimately from his boyhood, the effect upon a friend is such that words will not come at his bidding; but, as a friend, and, as one who, though living in a distant part of the State, has been for the last two years intimately connected with him, I deem it my duty at this time to bear my tribute—my poor tribute—to his memory. He, for the two past years, has been a member of that body of the Legislature of this State that has held its sessions in this Hall, and I too have had the honor of a seat here during those two years. Differing widely upon many questions that came before that body, still, from the first until the last, our relations have been intimate and of the most friendly and kindly character, and I here, at this time, bear tribute to his ability, his honorable deportment, his noble heart and his kind and gentlemanly ways. I deeply regret that this sudden act should have taken from this body one who would have been a valuable member in it. As the substantial head for the past two years of the law Committee of the Assembly of the State of New York, his duties there were arduous and responsible, but by his untiring industry and his ability he performed them satisfactorily to that body, and I believe satisfactorily to himself and his friends. As I have already said, not only my legislative relations with the deceased have been of the most friendly character, but my personal relations have also been equally friendly, and I fully concur in the sympathy expressed by those who have been fortunate enough to have lived in the same community with him for all, or nearly all, his life. I, Mr. President, one with the passions and frailties that mankind is heir to, do not at this time feel to judge harshly of him, who, in violation of the laws of God and man, has seen fit to strike from existence our friend. The laws of man say, that man shall not be the judge of his own real or supposed wrongs; the laws of God say, "Vengeance is mine." He who last night shot down our friend violated both. We do not and can not ever know the thoughts and secrets of the heart of our friend; his life is closed, his heart is still, his manly form will soon be placed beneath the sod forever. We do not know the passion, the frenzy of him who struck the fatal blow, but we do know, and I feel it my duty here to say, that I believe that I know, that none but a coward heart would have planned, and none but a murderous hand would have inflicted, upon an unwarned victim, the blow such as was struck upon this our friend. I, with the colleagues of him who has departed, leave it for this body to take such action upon this matter, as they may see fit.

Mr. FOLGER offered the following resolutions: Resolved, That this Convention assembling this day in sorrow for the sudden and violent death of one of its members, the Hon. L. Harris Hiscock, will, as a mark of respect for the dead, when it adjourn, adjourn until Tuesday, the 11th inst., at 11 o'clock A. M.

Resolved, That a committee of eight be appointed by the Chair, to accompany his remains to the place of his late residence, and to represent this body at the place of sepulchre.

Resolved, That the officers and members of this body do wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, and that the flag upon the capitol be held at half-mast until after the burial.

Mr. GREELEY—The long adjournment which is provided for in the resolution is the only part to which I object. The rest I wish to have passed unanimously. I simply desire to have that part proposing a long adjournment stricken out, which will leave the remainder to be passed by a unanimous vote. I trust we will have our committees appointed before we make such adjournment.

The PRESIDENT — Will the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] reduce his amendment to writing?

Mr. GREELEY—I simply ask for a division of the question—to leave out the part providing for a long adjournment, and take a vote upon the rest.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope, Mr. President, there will be no division upon the question. I think that the appalling tragedy which has just taken place must so impress itself on the minds of every member of this Convention that the interval of time which is suggested by the resolution that has been submitted will produce no delay in the proper deliberations of this body, and will result, individually, to the good of each of its members. I think there will be no unnecessary delay, because the President of this body is already charged with the appointment of the respective Committees of this Convention, and during the interval of time between now and Tuesday next, those committees can be as well prepared, or will be properly prepared and considered by the President of this body. Sir, there is a great deal to be done, I know, in this convention. I hope it will be done with that deliberation, consideration, and care, which become the objects which have convened us together. I believe in a proper diligence in business. I believe in doing what we do, wisely and well. I do not think that either the necessities of our constituents, or the public interests at large, will suffer by the adoption of the resolution as it has been submitted by the gentleman from Ontario. [Mr. Folger.]

Mr. GREELEY.—The fact is exactly opposite from what the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E.

Brooks] supposes. The President of this Convention is not authorized to appoint committees; we do not know what committees we are to have; we have simply provided for a general committee to divide the labors of the Convention. That Committee is to be appointed to lay out the work for the Convention before the President will be in a position to consider what Committees are to be appointed. I therefore say that we are not ready to make this long adjournment now. If we had the labors of the Convention divided and the number and character of the Committees settled now, so that the President could take upon himself to appoint the Committees, I should feel that the proposed adjournment would not be a public calamity, but to adjourn at this stage of the proceedings, I think, would be. I have therefore asked for a division of the question, and that the question be taken first upon the resolution of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], except this portion which provides for an adjournment of nearly a week. I think I have a right to the division.

THE PRESIDENT—The chair recognises the right of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] to call for a division.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND offered the following amendment to the resolutions:

"Insert after the word 'Hiscock' the words, 'stricken down by the hands of an assassin.'"

MR. RATHBUN—Mr. President, whatever our individual opinion may be upon this subject, is one thing. What we, as individuals, think upon this subject, we have the right to think, but I do believe, sir, that it is politic or proper for this Convention to decide upon a question which belongs to the courts of law, and not to the Convention. We forget that when this Convention, by the amendment, attempts to determine whether this was an assassination, that to do so would be transcending the duties which belong to it. We should recollect that this very act is an admonition to us to leave the law to determine the question.

MR. WEED—I regret exceedingly that any amendment has been offered to the resolutions. I regret that any supposed necessities for hurrying business should have caused this discussion at this time. I trust the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] will withdraw his amendment, so as to relieve the Convention upon that matter. As the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has spoken with reference to the business of the Convention as a reason why an earlier day should be fixed for the reassembling of the Convention after the proposed adjournment, I trust the Convention will pardon me for making a brief answer to the statement. As I understand the doings of this Convention, the Committee to be appointed by the President, (which was voted for yesterday) will report to this Convention what Committees it shall have. That Committee has not yet been appointed for want of time, and it is a very important part of the duty of the Convention. If this adjournment is made till Tuesday, it will be none too long for that Committee to digest and determine its plans, and when they report to the Convention, it will save the time of delegates by the care which the Committee have given, in determining upon the plans they are to report. I, therefore, trust the division will be voted down and the resolutions as they were offered by the gentleman from Ontario, will be passed unanimously.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—Mr. President, I offered the amendment presented by myself, partly in justice to my own feelings and partly from a remark which fell from one of the gentlemen, the precise tenor of which I am unable now to remember; but with a view of having it understood that this Convention was willing to call the assassination of one of its members by the real name that it ought to bear. I am one of those that believe in the enforcement of the laws, and for myself, no markish sensibility will prevent me, or ever has prevented me, from desiring to see those who commit the largest crimes meet with the punishment which is their just due. Since this horrid tragedy has come to my ears this morning, I have fancied to myself the gradual fading out of the horror of crime in the public mind, and that perhaps this man, if convicted, may, through the philosophers and philanthropists of the world, be placed in a situation where, instead of being considered an assassin, be esteemed a hero. But gentlemen whose wishes and feelings I am not at liberty to disregard, have solicited me to withdraw my amendment, and in deference to the feelings of others, and in no deference to my own judgment as to what this Convention owes to itself, I withdraw the amendment.

MR. FOLGER—If the committee will grant permission to withdraw my resolutions I will do so, and so amend the first that it shall provide that the Convention do now adjourn, which will obviate any objection to their immediate adoption. My reason for providing for an adjournment to a day so late, was this: I had supposed that the President of the Convention would be ready this morning to announce the Committee of Sixteen, and the Committee on Rules; I had supposed that those Committees would sit during the interval, and that they would apprise the President to what conclusion they had come, so that he would know about how many committees the Convention would probably have on the coming in of their report, and that he, in the interval of our session, would be able to arrange in his mind the places of the several members of this body upon those committees. I knew that it had always been the custom of Legislative bodies to have an adjournment for a day or more, and sometimes for three days, to allow an opportunity for the presiding officer to make up the committees, and I had supposed that my resolution would chime in with that custom, and could do no more in its adoption than what would be done otherwise if the occasion for this resolution had not arisen. But, I was under a misapprehension, as I learn that the President is not ready to announce those Committees. I, therefore, vary the phraseology, either by my own hand or by that of the Secretary, in the particulars I have stated.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified in words as follows:

Resolved, That this Convention assembling this day in sorrow for the sudden and violent death of one of its members, the Hon. L. Harris Hiscock, as a mark of respect for the dead do now adjourn.

Resolved, That a committee of eight be appointed by the Chair to accompany his remains to the place of his last residence so as to represent this body at the sepulture thereof.

Resolved, That the officers and members of this body do wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, and that the flag upon the Capitol be held at half-mast until after the burial.

The question was then taken on the resolutions as modified, and they were declared to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT announced the following as the committee of eight provided for by the resolution:

Messrs. Folger, Opdyke, Tucker, Tappen, Merrill, Veeder, Hatch and Bell.

Mr. BALLARD—Asked leave of absence for Mr. GOODRICH, of Tompkins, for ten days, which was granted.

In pursuance of the resolution adopted, the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, June 6, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. A. A. FARR.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. CURTIS—I have a communication from the President of the Young Men's Association of this city, which I am requested to lay before the Convention.

The communication was read in words as follows:

ROOMS YOUNG MEN'S ASSOCIATION,
ALBANY, June 6, 1867.

HON. WM. A. WHEELER, President of the Constitutional Convention.

SIR—The Executive Committee of the Young Men's Association, of Albany, has instructed me to extend the freedom of their rooms to the members of the Constitutional Convention during their residence in the city. The principal newspapers of the country will always be found on the files. Such books of reference as may be required, may be obtained upon application to the Librarian.

Hoping the gentlemen of the Convention will avail themselves of such courtesies as we may be able to extend, I remain, with sentiments of much respect, Your obedient servant,

EDWARD DE FOREST, President.

Mr. CURTIS moved that the invitation be accepted.

Which was carried.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution: Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next, June 11th inst., at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. GREELEY—I pray that this Convention may not adjourn until we have received the report from the very important Committee which has just been announced from the chair. I think I am assured by the Chairman of that Committee that it need not be a very long work, although a very important one. Now, Mr. President, if this Convention should adjourn over to-day until to-morrow morning, that Committee might then be able to report. We may wish to revise their action. I have great confidence in that Committee, but still it is quite probable that this Convention may choose to exert a supervisory discretion or power over the action of that most important Committee. The moment we shall have received and acted upon that report I am perfectly willing to adjourn for as many days as the Chair shall deem necessary to enable him to make up the committees of the Convention; but until we have provided for those committees,—until we have clothed the Chair with the power to make certain committees, under the direction, not of a committee, but of this Convention,—it is entirely improper for this Convention to adjourn. I move, therefore, that this proposition do for the present lie upon the table.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Greeley to lay the resolution of Mr. Francis on the table, it was declared carried, by the following vote:

Ayes.—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Artell, Baxter, Barker, Beadle, Bickford, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. O. Brown, Conger, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Field, Fowler, Frank, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hale, Hammond, Hitchcock, Hutchins, Kinney, Landon, Lapham, Law, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Lindington, Mattice, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, More, Murphy, Paige, Parker, Prindle, Pond, Prosser, Root, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seaver, Sermon, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Strong, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Verplanck, Wake-man, Wales, Wickham and Williams.—Gl.

Notes.—Messrs. N. M. Allen, Archer, Armstrong, Ballard, Barnard, Beals, Beckwith, Bergen, E. Brooks, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Cheritree, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Callahan, Comstock, Cooke, Curtis, Daly, T. W. Dwight, Ferry, Flagler, Francis, Gerry, Grant, Hadley, Hand, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Houston, Huntington, Ketcham, Krum, Larremore, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Masten, McDonald, Morris, Opdyke, Potter, Reynolds, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, Ramsey, A. D. Russell, L. W. Russell, Silvester, Sherman, Tilden, Van Cott and Young.—58.

Mr. W. C. BROWN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the privileges of the House be extended to the judges of the Court of Appeals. Which was adopted.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of this Convention appoint a committee of one from each judicial district for the purpose of examining and reporting to this Convention whether, in their opinion, under the provisions of the 2d section of the 13th article of the existing Constitution, this body is constitutionally called.

Mr. GREELEY moved that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Which was carried.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish a copy in pamphlet form of the law of the Legislature under which the delegates to this Convention were elected, to such members as shall desire the same; provided that a sufficient number of copies of the edition already printed are already on hand.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. E. P. BROOKS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State Engineer and Surveyor be requested to make an estimate of the cost and expenses of enlarging the locks on the Chemung canal, and on the Chemung Canal feeder to the size of the locks on the Erie canal, and to submit such estimate to this Convention at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. BROOKS—I merely wish to explain to the Convention, with regard to this resolution, that the information called for can be obtained without any expense to the State at all, as it is already in the department, and can be furnished without any extra expense.

Mr. HATCH—Will the gentleman add to his resolution this amendment; and also furnish a table of the cost of construction, maintenance and repair of said canal?

The amendment was accepted and the question being taken on the resolution as amended, it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention take up the existing Constitution of the State, in Committee of the Whole, and consider the same by sections, with the view of determining the sense of the Convention, as to which of its provisions shall remain unaltered, and which need revision or amendment; and that those sections only which give rise to debate shall be regarded as subjects of reference to committees.

Mr. LOEW moved that the resolution lie upon the table until the Committee of Sixteen have made their report to the Convention.

Which was carried.

Mr. SPENCER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee to consist of six members, elected by Senatorial Districts, and three members at large, to be appointed by the President, prepare and report to the Convention such proposed revision and amendment of the present Constitution, or any part thereof, as the same may seem to require, and that any revision or amendment proposed by any member prior to the final report of the committee be referred to such committee to report from time to time as they may deem expedient.

Mr. SPENCER—I would suggest the reference of that resolution to the committee of sixteen.

Which reference was ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select Committee on Rules be authorized to have printed such report as they may agree to, so that the same may be laid upon the tables of members at to-morrow's session, if practicable.

The question was then put on the resolution and it was declared adopted.

Mr. KETCHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns this day, it adjourn to meet on Monday, June 10, at 11 o'clock.

Mr. GREELEY moved that the resolution lie upon the table.

Which was carried.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the whole subject of a revision of the Constitution be referred to a select committee of sixteen, viz.: two from each Judicial District of the State, who shall report for the consideration of the Convention, such amendments or such proposed new Constitution as they shall be able to agree upon; the report, when made, to be referred to a Committee of the whole Convention for consideration in detail.

Mr. SHERMAN moved that the resolution be referred to the select committee of sixteen.

Which was carried.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Mr. President: My name was announced as a member of the committee to present rules for the government of the deliberations of the Convention, and I see that it is desirable that that committee should meet almost immediately. I have an engagement to-day at four o'clock, that involves the convenience of a great many other persons in such a way as to render it very difficult for me to attend to the immediate duties of that committee, and I therefore ask to be excused from serving on that committee and that some other gentleman be appointed in my place.

No objection being made, Mr. Townsend was excused.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire now to call up my resolution asking for certain information for the benefit of this Convention with regard to our canals; and I desire to say, that if any part of that information is contained in any report about to be made, it will of course cost nothing. I wish to know the facts called for in that resolution, and I cannot act intelligently with regard to canals, until I can see clearly from a statement before me, what each of our canals has cost, and what it is costing to-day. That is the purpose of my resolution. What has each canal cost the people of this State, and how much is it costing for its continuance to-day, and what is it paying? On the other hand I gave notice that I would accept all amendments looking to the same great end,—that is, to make us acquainted with the facts concerning these canals. I ask the Convention to take up and pass that resolution, with all the amendments which have been or may be proposed, looking to the same purpose; and if there be any part of the information I wish, which is already afforded, it will cost but a trifle to transfer it from the documents in which it is contained.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I submit to the mover of this resolution [Mr. Greeley] that it should be submitted to the Auditor of the Canal Department to furnish the information called for, instead of the State Comptroller. It is very doubtful whether the information can be furnished from his office, because it is no part of his official duty. I understand, Mr. President, from the Auditor of the Canal Department, that the information called for in the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is prepared and will be laid upon the table within a few days' time. I therefore propose, as a proviso, at the end of the several suggestions to the resolutions submitted by the gentleman, "and provided such information is not already prepared by the Canal department for the Convention." And, if the gentleman will accept this suggestion to obtain the information from the Auditor of the Canal Department, instead of the State Comptroller, and make it a part of the original resolution, it will not be necessary to offer the amendment suggested.

Mr. GREELEY—The Comptroller is the financial officer of the State. I would rather have information from him than from any one else, and I, for one, prefer to have it upon the responsibility of the Comptroller.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Then I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "State Comptroller," and inserting the words: "The Auditor of the Canal Department."

Mr. HATCH—It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it would be better to defer any action on this resolution for the present, and see whether this manual which is talked about furnishes the requisite information. Now, if the manual does not give us the information which we require, myself and other members of this Convention, would desire to further amend these resolutions in order to secure what further information is important. We want the information not on any part of the subject, but information in respect to every canal in the State, the cost of its construction and maintenance, and we want to know, too, whether the surplus revenues of the canals of the State would justify their improvement, or their enlargement. I am in favor of the improvement and enlargement of any canal which shows a surplus revenue. I think, sir, under these circumstances we had better defer any action on this resolution for two or three days.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman name a different period?

Mr. HATCH—I move to lay it on the table until Tuesday next.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Hatch and it was declared carried.

Mr. E. BROOKS moved that the Convention do now adjourn.

The motion, on request of Mr. Conger, was withdrawn.

Mr. CONGER—I will move a reconsideration of the vote by which the house refused to adjourn, under the resolution, until Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT—Did the gentleman vote with the majority?

Mr. CONGER—Yes sir. I understand now it is quite impossible, as might be expected perhaps, that the Committee of Sixteen, several of whom are absent from the city, should meet in such a way as to present any order of business upon which we could act. The consequence will be, if we meet here to-morrow, the session will be quite futile in any valuable result. It is for that reason, sir, and under information which I deem to be very reliable, that the Committee are not able either to state or to report so as to give satisfactory results to the Convention. I, therefore, move a reconsideration of that vote.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask this House to consider well this proposition before adopting it. If the committee is not full, it will be more likely to agree sooner. If there are but ten members present, they would sooner give a report than if there were sixteen. If the Chairman would ask this Convention to adjourn over for two or three days, I would agree to it. Unless the Chairman of the Committee asks for time, I shall believe, as I have been well assured, that we may expect a report from that Committee to-morrow morning; therefore, I trust this resolution will not pass.

Mr. HARRIS—It is true, Mr. President, that I could make a report myself to-morrow morning; but, on conferring hastily with several members of the Committee, I am persuaded that we shall be unable to submit a report that will be satisfactory to ourselves, as early as to-morrow morning. From the experience I have had in reference to such matters, I am persuaded it will take more time, and require more deliberation, than we can devote to it between this and to-morrow morning. I think, therefore, that the Convention can hardly expect a report from this committee to-morrow morning.

Mr. FERRY—The committee with almost entire unanimity are agreed in regard to this matter. If we, by staying here, can facilitate business by which this report can be made, I, for one, would be in favor of staying. If the report cannot be made, I suppose we stay here substantially for no purpose, and I prefer an adjournment in that event. From the statement of the Chairman of the Convention I suppose that is the position of the committee.

Mr. FRANCIS—It was after consultation with members, including the member from Albany [Mr. Harris] that I offered the resolution upon the suggestion of those whom I supposed understood the business that is necessary to be done, before it would be possible for us to make any progress here.

Mr. STRONG—The opposition I have to make to this amendment is, that it is very unequal to the different delegates. Some of them are unable to go home, and of necessity will have to remain here. As I understand it, when the Legislature passed the bill in reference to the Convention, it did not contemplate that we should adjourn for more than three days, therefore it would deprive us of our compensation if we adjourn over, beyond that time. It would be very unfair to those who cannot reach their homes within the time mentioned in this resolution. It is for that reason, if for no other, that I oppose it. But we can have considerable business to transact if we wait from day to day, independent of the business that will come from this committee. And I think, therefore, that we had better remain where we are, since it would be justice at any rate to those who can not go to their homes.

Mr. HAND—I suggest that there will be only three working days, which is all that is called for.

Mr. HALE—In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong], I propose to offer an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis], providing that the adjournment be until Monday. That, I think, will meet the objection made by the gentleman from Suffolk, [Mr. Strong].

The PRESIDENT—The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis] was lost.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CONGER—I should presume that that is hardly practicable.

The PRESIDENT—In the opinion of the Chair the motion is not practicable.

The question was then put on the motion to reconsider, and it was declared carried.

Mr. HALE—I move to amend by substituting Monday at 4 P. M., in place of Tuesday next, June 11th, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. FRANCIS—I accept the amendment.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "adjourn," the word "to-morrow." It would be impossible for many of us to arrive here in time to attend the session on Monday.

Mr. HAND—Can we have the information from the President? There seems to be some misapprehension whether an adjournment until Tuesday will be more than three days.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I further move to amend that we shall meet on Tuesday next at 11 A. M., instead of Monday at 4 P. M.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Verplanck to amend and it was declared lost.

Mr. ROBERTSON—Is an amendment in order now?

The PRESIDENT—Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTSON—Then I move to amend by making the time to which we adjourn Monday at 6 o'clock instead of at 4 o'clock. My reason for offering the amendment is, that the train arriving at quarter past five o'clock will not reach here in time for delegates residing along the river to be in attendance upon the session. To attend at 4 P. M. would involve the necessity of a very early departure from the city or other places on the river.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Robertson, and it was declared adopted.

The question then recurred on the resolution of Mr. Francis, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BICKFORD—Offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee of sixteen appointed in pursuance of the resolution introduced on the 4th inst., by Mr. Harris, whose duty it is to consider and report the best practicable mode of proceeding to revise the Constitution, be instructed also to inquire and report as to the expediency (with a view to a short session) of confining the labors of the Convention to a few of the most urgent reforms needed in the Constitution, and of submitting each proposed amendment separately; and, if they shall be of opinion that it is expedient to undertake a general revision of the Constitution that they set forth in their report the reasons for such opinions.

Mr. VERPLANCK moved that the resolution lie on the table.

Which was carried.

On motion of Mr. LOEW the Convention adjourned.

MONDAY, JUNE 10, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment,

Prayer was offered by Rev. A. A. FARR.

The journal of the last session was read by the Secretary.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—When I had the honor, on Thursday, of submitting a resolution to the Convention, the Chair omitted to state what I intended it should hear, that the resolution, being one which would undoubtedly give rise to debate, I consented that it lie over under the rules. But the gentleman from Westchester (Mr. Greeley), making the motion as he did, that the resolution lie on the table, there was not time for the suggestion. I would now like to have the journal amended, so that it will appear that the resolution was laid on the table with the consent of the mover. The Convention will remember, in confirmation of my statement, that there was not a dissenting vote to the motion of the gentleman from Westchester.

There being no objection, the correction stated was ordered.

Mr. LAPHAM—The resolution offered by myself on Thursday, was laid upon the table until the committee of sixteen should make a report. It was a special direction and I see that the Journal does not contain it.

There being no objection, the correction stated was ordered.

Mr. Amasa J. Parker, a delegate, appeared in the Convention, and was administered the Constitutional oath of office by the President, and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, JUNE 11, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment. Prayer was offered by Rev. J. T. PECK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary, and was approved.

Messrs. Francis Kernan and John E. Develin, Delegates duly elected, appeared in the Convention, were administered the Constitutional Oath of office, and took their seats.

Cornelius S. Underwood, Henry A. Gladden and Edward W. Simmons, Assistant Secretaries, Ferdinand DeWigne, Librarian, and James Armstrong, James Tanner, C. V. Schram, David L. Shields, Herman Ruleson, Eugene L. Demers, John Pewit, and William McManus, Door keepers, were administered the Constitutional oath of office, by the President.

The PRESIDENT announced the appointment of Mr. Baker as a member of the Committee on rules in place of Mr. M. I. Townsend who had been excused from serving at his own request.

Mr. SHERMAN from the select Committee on Rules, submitted the report of the Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN—Before the report is read, I desire to state that the rules as agreed upon, are with a single exception, the unanimous report of the Committee, the one exception is that of the previous question. The rules are mainly those of the Assembly, with only such changes as are necessary to adapt them to the different class of business to be performed here. The rules of the Assembly, as far as my observation extends, are the best calculated for the fair transaction of business, of any rules in this country. I propose that the rules should be read at length, and then if it be the pleasure of the Convention, it proceed at once to consider them by sections. I would state further that, a copy of the rules, as they were originally drafted, will be found upon the files of each member. Some changes have been made by the Committee which will be apparent to members, on reading.

The SECRETARY then read the report in words as follows:

Rule 19. The same rules shall be observed in Committee of the Whole as in the Convention, as far as applicable, except that the previous question shall not apply nor shall the yeas and nays be taken on a division.

Rule 20. A motion to rise and report progress shall be in order at any stage, and shall be decided without debate.

Rule 21. Subjects shall be taken up in Committee of the Whole in the order in which they shall stand on the General Orders, unless the Committee, by a two-thirds vote, shall, in any case, otherwise direct. The paper under consideration shall be first read at length, unless the Committee shall otherwise order, and shall then be read and considered by sections. All amendments made in Committee of the Whole shall be reported to the Convention for action.

Rule 22. If at any time, in the Committee of the Whole, it shall appear that no quorum be present, the Committee shall immediately rise, and the Chairman shall report the fact to the Convention.

CHAPTER IX.

On Motions and their Precedence.

Rule 23.—When a question shall be under consideration, no motion shall be received except as herein specified, and motions shall have precedence in the order stated, viz. —

1. For an adjournment.
2. For a recess.
3. A call of the Convention.
4. For the previous question.
5. To lay on the table.
6. To postpone indefinitely.
7. To postpone to a day certain.
8. To commit to a Committee of the Whole.
9. To commit to a Standing Committee.
10. To commit to a Select Committee.
11. To amend.

Rule 24. The motion to adjourn for the day, for a recess, for the previous question and to lay on the table, shall be decided without amendment or debate. The respective motions to postpone or commit shall preclude debate on the main question.

Rule 25. Every motion or resolution shall, after presentation, be first stated by the President, or on his order read by the Clerk, before debate, and again, if desired by any member, immediately before putting the question. And every resolution and amendment shall be reduced to writing if the President or any member desire it.

Rule 26. After a proposition shall have been stated by the President, it shall be deemed to be in the possession of the Convention, but may be withdrawn at any time before it shall be decided or amended.

Rule 27. The motions to adjourn or take a recess shall be always in order when made by a member entitled to the floor.

Rule 28. No motion for a reconsideration of any vote shall be in order unless made on the same day or the next following legislative day on which the question proposed to be reconsidered shall have taken place; nor unless moved by one who shall have voted in the majority. After a motion for a reconsideration shall have been put and lost, it shall not be renewed without the unanimous consent of the Convention.

Rule 29. The previous question shall be, "Shall the main question be now put;" and if determined in the affirmative, no further debate or amendment shall be in order, and the main question shall be on the passage of the resolution or other matter under consideration; but when amendments shall be pending, the question shall be first taken on the amendments in their order; and when amendments shall have been recommended by the Committee of the Whole, and not acted on by the Convention, the question shall be taken upon such amendments in like order.

CHAPTER X.

Of Resolutions.

Rule 30.—The following classes of resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, after which they may be called up as of course, under their appropriate order of business:

1. Resolutions containing calls for information from any of the Executive Departments, from State, county or municipal officers, or from any incorporate bodies.

2. Resolutions giving rise to debate, except such as shall relate to the disposition of business immediately before the Convention, to the business of the day on which they may be offered, or to adjournments or recesses.

Rule 31. All resolutions for the printing of an extra number of documents, shall be referred, as of course, to the Standing Committee on Printing, for their report thereon before final action by the Convention.

Rule 32. All resolutions authorizing or contemplating expenditures for the purposes of the Convention, shall be referred to the Standing Committee on Contingent Expenses, for their report thereon before final action by the Convention.

CHAPTER XI.

Miscellaneous Provisions.

Rule 33. The privileges of admission to the floor of the Convention shall be confined to the following descriptions of persons, viz.:

1. The Governor and Lieutenant-Governor.
2. The Heads of the State Executive Departments, and their Deputies.
3. Ex-Governors of the State.
4. Members of the United States Congress.
5. Officers of the Convention.
6. Reporters of the press, duly assigned as such by the President of the Convention.
7. Officers or ex-officers of the United States army or navy who have received the thanks of Congress.

Rule 34. In cases of the absence of a quorum at any session of the Convention, the members present may take such measures as they may deem necessary to secure the presence of a quorum, and may inflict such censure as they may deem just, on those who on being called on for that purpose shall render no sufficient excuse for their absence.

Rule 35. If any question contain several distinct propositions, it shall be divided by the President, at the request of any member, provided each subdivision if left to itself, shall form a substantive proposition; but the motion to strike out and insert shall be indivisible.

Rule 36. The yeas and nays shall be taken and recorded in the journal on any question when demanded by one-fifth of the members present, except in cases where such a division shall have been already ordered on a pending question.

Rule 37. The journal of each day's proceedings shall be printed so that it shall be laid on the desks of members within two days after its approval.

Rule 38. Files of all documents ordered to be printed, shall be prepared and kept by the sergeant-at-arms, and one copy shall be placed upon the desk of each member of the Convention; one copy shall be supplied also to the secretary, one to each of his assistants, one to the stenographer, one to the librarian and one to each reporter of the press.

Rule 39. A similar allowance for stationery, as is provided for the use of the members, shall be made to each officer of the Convention, except messengers, and a similar allowance shall also be made to each reporter.

Rule 40. No standing rule of the Convention shall be suspended, amended or rescinded, unless one day's notice of the motion therefor shall have been given; nor shall any amendment or repeal be then made, except by the vote of a majority of all the members elected to the Convention. But such notice shall not be required on the last day's session. The notice and motion for a suspension, shall each state specifically the number of the rule and the object of the proposed suspension, and every suspension on such notice and motion, shall be held to apply only to the particular object or objects specified therein.

Rule 41. All questions relating to the priority of business, that is, the priority of one subject matter over another under the same order of business, the postponement of any special order, or the suspension of any rule, shall be decided without debate.

Rule 42. There shall be printed, as of course, and without any special order, 800 copies of all reports of committees on the subject of Constitutional revision, and of all reports and communications made in pursuance of the order or request of the Convention; and 800 copies of the journal; which numbers shall be denominated the usual number.

Rule 43. The Governor and each head of the State Executive departments, shall be furnished by the printer with a copy of the official documents of the Convention out of the usual number printed.

Rule 44. The sergeant-at-arms shall receive from the printer all matter printed for the use of the Convention, and shall keep a record of the time of the reception of each document, and the number of copies received, and shall cause a copy of each to be placed on the desks of the members, officers and reporters entitled to receive them, immediately after their reception by him.

Rule 45. There shall be bound, out of the usual number printed, three hundred copies of the journal and three hundred copies of the reports and documents of the Convention, to be distributed as follows, viz.: To each member of the Convention, one copy; State Library, five copies; the library of the Senate, sixteen copies; the library of the Assembly, fifty copies; the Counties and Public offices, sixty copies.

Rule 46. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms shall perform the duties of Postmaster of the Convention, and as such shall receive, distribute and dispatch such mail matter as shall be deposited in his office, addressed to or by members of the Convention; and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall assign to the service of the Acting Postmaster such number of the messengers as he may need to aid him in the performance of his duties.

Mr. SHERMAN—I now move that the rules be read separately, and except where a separate vote shall be demanded, or they be amended, that they be considered as adopted without a formal vote.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I think we can hardly pass upon these rules by a casual reading of them. I understood the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Sherman] to say, they were substantially the rules of the Assembly, but in hastily running them over I find several very important variations of those rules. I suggest, therefore, that they can hardly be considered now.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. DEVELIN—I move that the consideration of the report be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN—I have no objection whatever to the postponement if the Convention desire it.

The question being put upon the motion of Mr. Develin, it was declared to be carried.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee of Sixteen, appointed to consider and report upon the best practical mode of proceeding to the revision of the Constitution, made the following REPORT:

The Committee appointed to consider and report to the Convention the best practicable mode of proceeding with the revision of the Constitution, respectfully report

That, while, in their opinion there are some, perhaps many parts of the Constitution which need no alteration, yet, as the whole fabric of the fundamental law of the State has been committed to this Convention with instructions to examine it and propose for the consideration of the people such amendments as it may be thought to require, the Committee have deemed it their duty to recommend the examination of all the provisions of the Constitution by appropriate committees.

They therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That committees be appointed to consider and report on each of the following subjects, and that the several parts of the Constitution which relate to those subjects respectively be referred to such committees.

1. On the Preamble and the Bill of Rights.

2. On the Legislature, its organization and the number, apportionment, election, tenure of office, and compensation of its members.

3. On the powers and duties of the Legislature except as to matters otherwise referred.

4. On the right of suffrage and the qualifications to hold office.

5. On the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, their election, tenure of office, compensation, powers and duties, except as otherwise referred.

6. On the Secretary of State, Comptroller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and State Engineer and Surveyor, their election or appointment, tenure of office, compensation, powers and duties.

7. On town and county officers other than judicial, their election or appointment, tenure of office, compensation, powers and duties.

8. On the Judiciary.

9. On the finances of the State, the Canals, except their care and management, the public debt, revenues, expenditures and taxation, and restrictions on the powers of the Legislature in respect thereto.

10. On the Superintendence and Management of the Canals, and the proper officers to be charged therewith, and the mode of their election or appointment.

11. On cities, their organization, government and powers.

12. On counties, towns and villages; their organization, government and powers.

13. On currency, banking and insurance.

14. On corporations other than municipal, banking and insurance.

15. On State Prisons.

16. On the pardoning power.

17. On the militia and military officers.

18. On education and the funds relating thereto.

19. On future amendments and revisions of the Constitution.

The Committee also recommend that the Committee No. 9 on the "Finances of the State" consist of sixteen members; that Committee No. 8, "on the Judiciary" and Committee No. 11 "on Cities," consist of fifteen members each, and that the other Committees consist of seven members each.

The Committee further recommend that the committees, in making their reports, be allowed, at their option, to state briefly in writing the reasons in support of their conclusions.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

IRA HARRIS, Chairman.

Mr. FULLER moved that the report be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Which was lost.

Mr. ALVORD moved that the report lie upon the table and be ordered to be printed.

Which was carried

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That to the permanent committees appointed by this Convention shall be added a standing committee, to be known as the Committee on Industrial Interests, to which shall be referred all matters pertaining to the rights and claims of labor.

Mr. FIELD moved that the resolution be referred to the same committee of the whole having charge of the report.

The PRESIDENT—That has not been referred.
Mr. FIELD—Then I move that it lie on the table and be printed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Field, it was declared carried.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to cause the street bounding this Chamber on the south to be strewn with tan bark or other suitable substance, and that it be kept there during the session of this Convention.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—It is impossible for gentlemen in this part of the House to hear what is going on in the Convention, on account of the noise from that street.

Mr. AXTELL—I understand that the Secretary of the Convention has had some communication with the Mayor of the City with regard to this matter. I have been informed that this will be done without the action of this Convention, or without any request from it.

Mr. TAPPEN—I propose to amend the resolution by making it a resolution of inquiry instead of a resolution of action.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman reduce his resolution to writing so it can be read by the Secretary?

Mr. TAPPEN offered the following amendment: "That the Secretary be instructed to confer with the city authorities for the purpose of covering the pavement in front of the capitol."

Mr. HARRIS—I would suggest to my friend that he had better let this lie upon the table for the present. I am persuaded that the Mayor of the city, the moment his attention is called to the subject, will provide a remedy against the evil spoken of.

The resolution of Mr. C. C. Dwight and the substitute of Mr. Tappen were laid on the table with the consent of the movers.

Mr. POND—I move to amend the amendment and the resolution by striking out all after the word resolved, and inserting the following in lieu thereof:—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] that the subject is not now before the Convention, the resolution by consent having been laid on the table.

Mr. POND—Then I shall offer the resolution as a distinct proposition.

Mr. HARRIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Court of Appeals be requested to furnish this Convention with a statement of the number of appeals now pending in the Court, distinguishing the years in which such appeals were brought. Also, the number of cases which were determined by the Court of Appeals during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865, and 1866, respectively.

Mr. KERNAN—I trust that the gentleman will allow that to be amended so as to state the districts from which the cases came, which can easily be furnished by the Clerk.

Mr. HARRIS—I accept the amendment.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I would like to ask the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], who offered the resolution, whether it will be possible to classify that return so that we can form an idea of the nature of the appeals; what proportion were criminal, what proportion were from corporations, and what in reference to other subjects.

Mr. HARRIS—I would say in reply to the gentleman that I apprehend that it will be impossible for the Clerk of the Court of Appeals to make that discrimination.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would also ask, that the resolution be so modified that information be furnished to the Convention, not only of the causes within the knowledge of the Clerk of the Court of Appeals, but also of all causes that are pending in that Court. I understand there are a great many causes pending in the Court not upon the calendar, of which the clerk may know nothing.

Mr. FIELD—I rise to a question of order, that by the rules under which we are acting, this resolution giving rise to debate must lie over one day.

Mr. HARRIS—I think it will give rise to no further debate.

Mr. BICKFORD—I am informed that the Clerk has got all the information that I asked for.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following amendment to the resolution of Mr. Harris:

And also the amount involved in each case where the matter in dispute is a sum of money.

Mr. STRONG—I think we had better lay this upon the table until to-morrow, in order to give us time to ascertain what facts we really need to have reported by the clerk. There are some facts in addition to those already mentioned, and I suggest that the matter lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman put that in the form of a motion?

Mr. STRONG—I make that motion.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. Strong, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. STRONG—I propose to debate this resolution, and I suppose under the rule it will have to lie over. I wish to make some remarks upon the subject.

The resolution was accordingly laid over.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Chair appoint a Committee of seven whose duty it shall be to examine into and report to this Convention, what offices if any may be abolished without detriment to the public service, and expressly all those created by law since the revision of the Constitution in 1846.

Mr. ALVORD, moved that the resolution lie upon the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. COLAHAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a further Committee of eight be appointed to take into consideration the educational interests of the State.

Mr. SEYMOUR moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. HITCHCOCK offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be requested to procure twenty diagrams of this Chamber for each member, officer and reporter of this Convention, provided they be obtained at a cost not exceeding the cost of those furnished the Assembly last winter.

Mr. LARREMORE moved that that resolution be referred to the appropriate standing Committee, when appointed.

Which was carried.

Mr. GRAVES offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to report to the Convention at as early a day as practicable, whether in their opinion a provision should be incorporated in the Constitution authorizing the women of this State to exercise the elective franchise, when they should ask that right by a majority of all the votes given by citizen females over the age of twenty-one years, at an election called for this purpose, at which the women alone shall have the right to vote.

Mr. LOEW moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. FIELD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be a committee of seven on claims against the State and their adjudication.

Mr. FIELD moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a standing committee of seven be appointed on the subject of the relations of the State to Indian tribes remaining in the same.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to an appropriate Committee, to report to this Convention the policy of making Constitutional provision for the collection of all tolls, dues and taxes, authorized by the laws of this State, after the 1st of January, 1868, in specie or its equivalent, and that thereafter the payments made by this State, and the counties and towns thereof, shall be in like currency, Provided, That thereafter no salary of any office existing on the 1st of January, 1861, shall be greater than the one existing at that date, until otherwise changed by the Legislature.

By consent of the mover, the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That one of the subjects upon which a standing committee shall be appointed shall be the creation, superintendence and visitation of charities, both public and private, especially those which receive pecuniary aid from the State.

Mr. DWIGHT moved that the resolution lie on the table and be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to call up the resolution which I offered in the Convention on the first day of its session, and which was by the Convention ordered to be considered this day, its purpose being to secure information relative to the canals.

The SECRETARY read the resolution referred to, calling upon the Comptroller for the required information; also, the pending amendments of Mr. E. Brooks, to strike out the word "comptroller" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Auditor of the Canal Department," and "provided said information is not already prepared by the Canal Department for the Convention."

Mr. GREELEY—I object, with great respect to the mover of the amendment offered, on these grounds: The comptroller is an officer elected by the people of the State, known to the Constitution and laws of the State as its chief financial officer. The Canal Auditor, I believe, is not an officer known to the Constitution, at any rate is not chosen by the people, and he holds a subordinate position. I desire this very important information on the responsibility of the highest financial officer of the State. I should not wish, with very great respect to the Canal Auditor, that he should be required to furnish us this information. The Comptroller, if he wishes, may apply to the Canal Auditor or any other source for information, but let us have this information given to us on the responsibility of the chief financial officer of the State. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] will not be adopted. I gave notice that I would accept all amendments proposing to enlarge the scope of inquiry. If any gentleman wishes further information in regard to the Canals, I say I accept his amendment, but I will accept none which seems to limit the scope nor to lower, if I may so speak, the plane of the inquiry. If then, there is information provided or providing for us by some officer which will furnish a part of what I want, I do not see that that is any reason for refusing this inquiry or rejecting it. If the Comptroller has this information at his elbow prepared in some other form in answer to some other inquiry, it would be very easy for him to transcribe it and to present it in answer to this inquiry. I am confident all I call for may be given us on two pages of a Convention document. I wish the information presented in such condensed form that we may see the cost, current expenses and current income of the Canals at one view on one page, and then we may see what canals we are to credit with profit to the State, and what canals are chargeable with loss. When we have this information it will be perfectly easy for me, and I doubt not for others, to act upon the subject of the canals intelligently and with clear regard to the financial as well as the more important interests of our constituents. Mr. President, I am exceedingly desirous that this Convention, its deliberations, and the results of those deliberations, shall commend themselves to the favor—the emphatic decided favor—of the people of the State. I believe the Constitution under which we now live and for which I very earnestly electioneered and voted on its adoption, is imperfect in many respects, and that abuses especially with regard to the canals have been developed under its action. I am desirous that the Convention shall so act, with such openness, with such energy, and with such industry as shall commend its doings to the favor of our constituents, and enable its results to be sustained by the emphatic vote of the people of the State. I trust, therefore, that this inquiry will not any longer be denied.

Mr. CHURCH—It seems to me, sir, that neither the Comptroller nor the Auditor of the Canal department is the proper person to direct this resolution to, but that it should be directed to the Commissioners of the Canal fund, who have charge of the finances relating to the canals. At the head of that Commission is the Comptroller, and the Auditor of the Canal department is the Secretary of the Board. By directing it to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, we shall have the benefit of the experience and the knowledge of the Comptroller and also of the Auditor. I would suggest to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] if that is not the proper direction for such a resolution as this.

Mr. E. BROOKS—My reason for offering the amendment, to which the gentleman from Westchester objects, was that it was, in my judgment, in conformity to law, and that the Legislature of this State had so acted in defining the duties of the Canal Auditor and in so separating his bureau from that of the State Comptroller as to make it imperative upon him to furnish such information as is called for by the pending resolution. Now, sir, let me read from the law :

"All the powers and duties of the Chief Clerk of the canal department, and all the powers and duties of the Comptroller in relation to the canals, except his powers and duties as Commissioner of the canal fund, are hereby transferred to, and vested in the said auditor; and the said auditor shall also be secretary of the Commissioners of the Canal fund."

Now, Mr. President, here the law is complete as to the duties of the Canal Auditor furnishing such information as is called for by the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and the various pending amendments. Every body knows from the practice of the office under its present regime, that any information sought for in regard to the administration of the canals of this State is sought for from the Canal Auditor; and, I believe, the State Comptroller is as well convinced as I am that this is not a proper inquiry to make of him; and if this resolution should be adopted by this body, he would either return it to the body making it, with a statement that it was no part of his duty to furnish such information or else hand it over immediately to the Canal Auditor, who is the proper officer to furnish it. The Canal Auditor is as much a state officer, though not elected by the people, as the State Comptroller himself, and he is the proper person to make the inquiry of. Now in regard to the other amendment I submit. I have proposed that this information shall be furnished, provided it is not already prepared by the State officers for the use of the Convention, and if the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will take the trouble to read and analyse the financial report of the Auditor of the Canal Department, of the State of New York, of January 1st, 1867, and submitted to the Legislature, he will find in detail the information which he requires by his resolution. Now, Mr. President, upon another subject. If we commence by making these various inquiries from the State officers to furnish information which is already at our hands, we shall so multiply the labors of the respective heads of the departments and bureaus as to withdraw them from their necessary daily duties. We can get a great deal of the information called for by a little labor and a little inquiry on our own part. And, there is, let me say, from some observation, no greater abuse in legislative bodies or in conventions, than in the constant making of inquiries in regard to information which can be furnished with very little labor on the part of legislators or members of the convention themselves. It was for this reason that I moved the second amendment, "provided that the information is not already prepared for the use of the Convention."

Mr. ALVORD—I agree with the gentleman from Orleans, [Mr. Church] in regard to the facts as to the custody of the finances of the canal department. They are under the law, and they are in fact in the hands of the Auditor. They make no part or parcel of the business of the Comptroller or his office. The finances of the State will be found in the Comptroller's office. If the resolution shall pass as proposed by the gentleman from Westchester, [Mr. Greeley], as has well been said by the gentleman from Richmond, [Mr. E. Brooks], the Comptroller would have to return the resolution back to this body stating that the information called for was not in his bureau. Any information he might give he would have to take second hand from the Auditor in the end. It strikes me it is very proper that the resolution should be directed to the financial officer of the Canal Department, who is the Auditor, and by whom the accounts are kept. In regard to the remarks made by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], I wish to say that I believe that all the information, even to the minutest detail called for by the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester, and by the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Lapham] and all further amendments offered by the gentleman of the Convention, is already prepared, and will make a part of the manual which is to be laid upon the desks of the members of this Convention. I can speak advisedly so far as this, that a large portion of that information in detail, I have seen myself in manuscript form. I am aware of the fact that most of it, if not the entire of it, is to be laid on our desks in that manual. It is quite as well to get the information there as to go to the past reports of the Auditor. It strikes me also that it is eminently proper that this resolution, in the first place, should be directed to the proper officer and that we should then add a proviso that the information is to be furnished if it is not already contained in the forthcoming manual.

Mr. CLINTON—It seems to be, Sir, that there is one rule we are in danger of losing sight of. If that rule is to be observed, I am ignorant at the present time as to whether I ought or ought not to vote for this amendment. I understood the gentlemen from Orleans [Mr. Church.] to state that the information which this resolution asks for lies in the possession of the Auditor in three different capacities, first, as Auditor of the Canal department, second, as Secretary of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and third, as a Secretary of some other canal board. Now, then,

I believe it is not exactly conformable to the dignity of this State Convention ever to call upon a subordinate for information. The inquiry ought to be directed to the head of the department, and this information is so distributed that I do not see how properly the Canal Auditor can answer it, until he has referred to his head—the Commissioners or board of which he is acting as Secretary. Suppose, for instance, our Secretary should be called upon by a resolution of some outside board or body for information. Would he give it? Would he not be required by his duty first to inquire of this body whether it was information he could properly give? Would he not first have to procure our permission? I think if this information is to be derived in this way, we ought not to apply to the Secretary of the board but to the board itself.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I read one of the provisions of the law in making my previous remarks, and I will in a moment read another. In the first place let me say that the Canal Auditor is as much a state officer as the State Comptroller. He is appointed by the Governor of the State, or is nominated by the Governor and is confirmed by the Senate, and one of his powers and duties to which I did not refer is as follows:

"The accounts of receipts and payments on account of the canals and the canal fund and debt, heretofore kept by the Commissioner of the Canal Fund, shall on, and after the first day of October next be kept by said Auditor."

This information is in his precise custody and it is in the custody of no other member of the State Government.

Mr. GREELEY—The Canal Auditor, either is or is not a subordinate of the chief financial officer of this State—the Comptroller—as I understand it. I am not decided whether he is or is not, but I know who is the chief financial officer, and I wish the inquiry to be directed to him. I regard the Canal Auditor law, all the way through, as one of exceedingly doubtful propriety. But no matter about that. I prefer to keep out of that controversy; but I will say I have no doubt that the Comptroller will furnish the information, and I hold him to be the proper officer to furnish it. I do not believe the Constitution ever intended that the most important part of the duties of the chief financial officer of the State should be taken away from him, by law, and conferred upon a subordinate. At all events, I shall insist on the adoption of the original resolution.

Mr. SPENCER—I observe that by the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1846, a similar resolution of inquiry was directed to the Comptroller, and I presume that the information can be obtained from that officer now.

Mr. SILVESTER—Mr. President, I am as much in favor as any gentleman in the Convention, and as desirous of obtaining all the information possible with respect to the State canals—the expenses of operating them, and the expenses connected with improving them. There seems, however, to be some difference of opinion as to which officer of the State is the proper person to whom enquiries shall be addressed. In addition, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], the Legislature provided in the act calling this Convention for the furnishing of a manual to the Convention. One part of that manual has been already laid on our tables; the second part has also been laid upon our tables, and this second part embraces very many statistics—"statistics," as stated on the volume itself, "of the Executive Department, the Secretary of the State and Comptroller's Departments." It says in addition, that "the remainder of the volume will be furnished as soon as possible, and when completed will be bound." The remaining volume will undoubtedly contain all the information which is asked for by the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and amended by several other gentlemen, and until that volume is furnished, and until we are able to see what the contents of that volume will be, and how far it will embrace these subjects it seems to me we are occupying the time and attention of the Convention and multiplying the labors of the state officers unnecessarily, I would move therefore, if in order, that the consideration of this resolution be further postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope that the motion that has just been made will not prevail. I hope also that the amendment which is pending will not prevail. In common with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], I think the chief financial officer of the State, is the person to whom the Convention should look for information upon matters affecting the financial interests of the State. It seems that that was the course pursued by the Convention of 1846, which met to revise the Constitution of our State, and to my mind it is proper that we should go to the same source. The law, portions of which have been read by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], shows that the Legislature in their wisdom saw fit to go to other sources. It does not follow that we should adopt the same course. We are seeking information, and I entirely agree with the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that we should get it from the financial head of the State. Now, a single word in support of the original resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley.] It has been said that we may expect this information—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke], that the question now pending is to postpone the consideration of the question until Tuesday; that motion does not involve the merits.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Silvester to postpone the consideration of the resolution of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

Mr. OPDYKE—The original resolution, Mr. President, was evidently drawn with great care, judgment and skill. I hold it to be of the highest importance. It calls for information which is very extensive and very comprehensive, and which is necessary for us if we desire to act wisely upon the subject of the canals. If the resolution shall be adopted, and presented to the Comptroller, and he is prepared to furnish us with the information in the precise form called for, he has only to say so, and we shall receive it. If he is not, then we desire that he should prepare it in that form and send it here, that we may have it printed for the use of members. I think there should be no serious objection to the resolution.

The President announced the question before the House to be on the amendment of Mr. Brooks, "provided that said information is not already prepared by the Canal Department for the Convention."

Mr. VERPLANCK—How is that to be settled? I should like to know who is to judge whether the book contains the information or not.

Mr. HATCH—I suppose the Convention will undoubtedly decide when the information comes in. I desire to say that a good deal of importance has been attached to the fact that the Convention of 1848 called on the Comptroller for information instead of the Auditor. If my recollection is correct, there was no Auditor then in existence. There was no such department until 1848. Therefore, I deem it very important that the resolution should go to the Auditor who is really the financial officer of the department, and the only officer who can give the requisite information.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Brooks, "providing that such information is not already prepared by the Canal Department for the information of the Convention," and it was declared adopted by the following vote, the ayes and nays being called for.

Ayes—Messrs. Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Daly, Develin, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Ferry, Field, Flagler, Fowler, Fuller, Garvin, Gerry, Graves, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hitchman, Houston, Jarvis, Kernan, Krum, Larremore, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Luddington, Matrice, McDonald, Merrill, Merwin, Monell, More, Murphy, Nelson, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, Potter, President, Rathbun, Robertson, Rolfe, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seaver, Seymour, Silvester, Sheldon, Smith Strong, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Cott, Veeder, Wakeman, Wickham—92.

Nays—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Church, Corbett, Curtis, Duganne, O. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Francis, Greeley, Gross, Hardenburgh, Hatch, Hitchcock, Hutchins, Ketcham, Kinney, Lapham, M. H. Lawrence, Merrill, Miller, Morris, Opdyke, Pond, Prindle, Prosser, Reynolds, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Spencer, Stratton, Tilden, Van Campen, Verplanck, Wales—38.

Mr. CHURCH—I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "Auditor" and inserting in lieu thereof, "the Commissioners of the Canal Fund." Practically it would make no particular difference whether this resolution is directed to the Auditor, the Comptroller, or the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, as the Convention would doubtless, get the required information from either one of them. But since the question has been raised, I submit to the Convention that the only proper and legitimate source for this information, is the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. The Constitution recognizes the Board of Commissioners, consisting of Lieutenant Governor, the Comptroller, the Secretary of State, the Attorney General and the Treasurer, as the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and they are charged, by law, with the superintendence and management of the canal fund, and it is made their duty to manage to the best advantage, all things belonging to that fund and to recommend from time to time to the Legislature, the adoption of such measures as they may think proper for the improvement of the fund, and to report to the Legislature at the opening of every session thereof, the state of the fund. The Canal fund is under the control and management of the Commissioners of that fund, and the accounts are now kept in the office of the Auditor of the Canal Department. Those accounts were formerly kept in the office of the Comptroller, but the control and management, as I said before, are in the hands of the Commissioners and they are the responsible officers to call upon, as it seems to me, for any information in relation to the fund; and therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church.]

Mr. HATCH—We are not inquiring about the canal fund, but we are inquiring about certain details and statistics about canals, their condition, debts, &c. That is the object of this inquiry, and it is a subject which is not in the hands of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and does not belong to any other department except that of the Canal Auditor.

Mr. TILDEN—I understood that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has accepted the amendment.

The PRESIDENT—He was not the mover of the original amendment as the chair understands it.

The question being put on the amendment of Mr. Church to the amendment of Mr. Brooks, to insert the words "Commissioners of the Canal Funds" in lieu of the word "Auditor," it was declared adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—I now accept the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] to insert the Commissioners of the Canal Fund in place of the Comptroller.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Greeley as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. CLARK offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the preamble of the Constitution be so amended as to read as follows: We, the people of the State of New York, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, and humbly acknowledging Him as the ultimate source of all authority and power in civil government, and that states and nations, no less than individuals, are responsible to Him, and subject to His moral laws, in order to secure the blessings of liberty, justice, and good government, to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution.

Which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDONALD offered the following resolution

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms, of this Convention, be authorized to place on the files of each member, a printed copy or pamphlet form of the verbatim Report of the debates of this Convention within two days after such debate or portion of debate shall have been had, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms be also authorized, within the same time, to furnish and forward one such copy of debates, to each Editor (or if there be more than one Editor) then to the Editor-in-chief of every newspaper regularly issued and published within this State to subscribers in intervals of one week, or less. But in case the same person or persons shall be the Editor or Editors of more than one such newspaper, then only one copy of such debate shall be furnished such editor or editors.

Mr. E. BROOKS—moved that the resolution be laid on the table and printed. Which was carried.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules proposed by the Select Committee on that subject be printed, as reported to-day.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move, with the consent of the mover of this resolution, that there be inserted in the proper place,—chap. 6,—the report which has been submitted from the committee of sixteen, which will undoubtedly become a part of the rules of this body, or else let the printing be postponed until the report of this Committee is acted upon. Perhaps it is better to postpone it until the report can be acted upon. I move it be postponed.

Mr. GREELEY—I hope not, Mr. Chairman; let us have something to act upon to-morrow.

The question being then put upon the motion to postpone, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. GREELEY—I now move that the resolution be printed, with the plan of the Committee of sixteen, inserted in the proper place, in the report of the Committee upon rules.

Mr. SHERMAN—I accept that amendment.

Mr. DEVELIN—I make the motion that the consideration of the report of the Committee on rules should be postponed until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin], that this is simply a question of printing.

Mr. DEVELIN—It will be impossible for gentlemen to know what these rules are, unless they see them upon their tables or somewhere else. As they are set down for consideration for to-morrow, I wish to have them upon our tables to-morrow, so that we can know what they are. The rules as reported to-day are different from the printed copies as laid upon the tables of members of this Convention.

Mr. SHERMAN—I will inform the gentleman that the very object of my motion, is that the rules may be printed and laid upon our tables to-morrow morning.

The question then recurred upon the resolution of Mr. Sherman as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. MILLER—I wish to ask leave of absence, for my colleague, Mr. Grant, for six days, as he is detained by important business.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would like to raise the question, whether this motion is necessary.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will leave that for the Convention to establish—to establish its own rules. The Chair does not deem itself possessed of power to grant leave of absence. The question being put, leave of absence was granted.

On motion of Mr. LOEW, the Convention adjourned.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. AMBROSE O'NEIL.

The SECRETARY read the journal of yesterday, which was approved.

The appointment of William Gordon as one of the messengers of the Convention was revoked by the President, on the ground that he is entirely supernumerary.

Mr. NELSON—I would like to have it appear somewhere upon the journal that the oath of office was administered to me yesterday. It might, perhaps, be of importance in drawing my pay, if not otherwise.

There being no objection, the journal was corrected accordingly.

Mr. GREELEY—The journal does not show how the Convention adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church]. That amendment prevailed by striking out the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks]. Then I accepted that amendment, and it became a part of the original resolution. There was no vote taken by the Convention, and the journal does not show how it became a part of the original resolution.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman make any motion?

Mr. GREELEY—I move that the Journal be corrected so as to show how the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] was adopted by the Convention. That amendment as amended was accepted by the mover of the resolution, and there was no second vote taken on it.

Mr. E. BROOKS—The motion of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] was to amend my amendment. That prevailed, and it was out of the power of the gentleman having introduced the original proposition to accept the proposition moved in the third degree by the gentleman from Orleans, [Mr. Church].

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands from the Secretary that the fact is as stated by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks].

Mr. GREELEY—The simple fact is, this Convention decided that the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond should be amended in a particular way. It did not adopt the amendment thus amended. It had still to be adopted by this Convention in some form. It was simply a substitute for his amendment. It was not then a part of the resolution; it was not accepted by the Convention; it was simply a part of the gentleman's amendment, and no vote was taken by the Convention upon adopting it. I stated I would accept that amendment as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church].

The PRESIDENT—The Journal will be corrected if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN moved that the Convention now proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on rules.

Which was carried.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to say as a member of the Committee on rules and orders that the Committee were unanimous in their report with the exception of a single rule—that is, the rule relating to the previous question, from which I as one of the minority dissented. My colleague, also, in the minority, was absent, and therefore gave no opinion upon the subject. I will state, sir, very briefly, my reasons for dissenting from the report in this particular. I do not think it becoming in a State Convention to adopt the previous question, the effect of which is to cut off all debate and to stop deliberation and determination in a becoming manner upon various propositions which may be before this body. The previous question is unknown to bodies which are peculiarly of a deliberative character, like the Convention which is now assembled in this State. It is unknown in the State Senate; it is unknown to the United States Senate, and according to my best judgment, although adopted in a modified degree in the Convention of 1846, it has been very rarely adopted in Conventions of so great importance as the one now assembled. If it be necessary by-and-by to adopt the previous question, I shall have no objection. The moment there is, on the part of the minority in this body, any undue disposition to abuse the freedom of speech, or the freedom of debate, by indulgence in discussion in order to consume time, I shall be, as one of the committee, and as one of the members of this body very ready to adopt the most stringent rules to prevent such abuse. At a later period of this session it may be becoming to adopt such a rule. But there are other rules of great importance trenching upon debate, and which control it. In the first place, we may adopt the half hour or the quarter hour rule, or even limit the discussion to the space of five or ten minutes by-and-by. In the next place it will be discovered, as these rules are read, that they are of the most rigid and stringent character, and as they will be administered by the presiding officer of this body, it will be almost impossible to depart from those strict technicalities, which belong to the immediate subjects which are under consideration. Therefore, I hope at the present stage of this proceeding there will be an indisposition on the part of the majority to adopt this rigid rule. All parliamentary experience has shown this fact, that, whenever there is a disposition to abuse the freedom of speech, it is in the power of the presiding officer, or of any member of the body, to call the member to order, and to confine him strictly and technically to the subject under consideration. Now, sir, as I have said already, in the higher tribunals and deliberative bodies, no such question is known. Whenever in the Senate of the United States, whenever in the British Parliament, or whenever in the State Senate, there is a disposition to crowd the question under discussion, by discussing irrelevant matters, the majority of the body, either through the presiding officer, or any member, can call the member to order, and adopt a rule like this, for instance:—to take the question upon a certain hour of a certain day, or to limit the discussion to fifteen or twenty minutes, as the case may be. Sir, the great idea of a body of this kind, is the freedom of speech—freedom of deliberation; and, in order that we may arrive at wise conclusions upon subjects that may be discussed in this body, it seems at least, in this early period of the session, it is better not to engraft upon our rules the order for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH—I offer the following resolution,—
The PRESIDENT—The Chair will announce that there is a pending question already with regard to this matter. It is the resolution of Mr. Sherman, which was offered yesterday.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move as an amendment to strike out from the report all which refers to the previous question.

Mr. SMITH—That was the amendment I was about to offer.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair submits whether this amendment is hardly germane 'to the resolution from the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman].

Mr. E. BROOKS—I should desire then to present it in the form of a minority report to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN—I would suggest that we should first proceed with a consideration of the rules in the manner I suggested yesterday, and the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks,] can move his amendment when the rule is reached which relates to the previous question, and at the same time, the amendment of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith,] can be properly moved.

Mr. SMITH—There would be no objection is that, if it were not that the previous question to incorporated into several of these rules which would make it necessary to offer three or four, or half a dozen different amendments, whereas one amendment would cover the whole ground, and if satisfactory to the Convention, it would eliminate the previous question from the whole report.

Mr. GRAVES—Since the adjournment of the Convention yesterday, I have examined with some attention the rules adopted by the Convention of 1821. They are concise in their language, and practical in their operation, and I see no good reason why they could not be with propriety adopted for the control of the deliberations of this Convention. For that purpose I offer the following resolution, accompanying it with the proceedings of the Convention of 1821, from which the rules may be read if desired by this Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair considers that the pending question is that of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] and he can only receive an amendment to that resolution.

Mr. RATHBUN—Is not the question whether the Convention will now proceed to consider the report of the Committee on rules?

The PRESIDENT—Yes, and the manner in which they are to be taken up.

Mr. RATHBUN—Then I suppose the only amendment is as to whether we will take up these rules and consider them.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman from Richmond, [Mr. E. Brooks] offer any amendment, or does he offer a minority report?

Mr. E. BROOKS—Yes, sir; I offer it as a minority report, and therefore I move to strike out all in the report that refers to the previous question.

The PRESIDENT—The entry will be made upon the journal, that the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] makes a minority report; and the question now is upon adopting the majority report.

Mr. WEED—May I ask what that motion is?

The PRESIDENT—It is that the Convention now proceed to act upon this report by separate rules.

Mr. WEED—If this is not a divisible question, I think it should be. I ask that we may take the vote separately, first, upon taking up the rules, and then we may decide in what manner we shall consider them.

The PRESIDENT—The rules have already been read.

Mr. WEED—Are they properly then before this body?

The PRESIDENT—They are, and the simple question is, whether they shall be considered by separate rules, or as a whole.

Mr. ROGERS demanded the ayes and noes. Not a sufficient number seconding the call the ayes and noes were not ordered. The question was then put upon the resolution of the gentleman from Oneida, [Mr. Sherman,] as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be read separately, and that, except when a separate vote is demanded, or amendments made, they be considered adopted without a formal vote.

Which was adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—I would suggest that the Secretary read until he come to a rule to which somebody objects.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the first rule reported by the Committee and no objection being made thereto, it was declared adopted.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the second rule.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I suggest that in the 4th subdivision of the second rule, the word "legislative" is inappropriate. I suppose our days are not "legislative" days.

The PRESIDENT—What amendment does the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] propose?

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I propose to strike out the word "legislative."

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. C. C. Dwight, and it was declared lost.

The Secretary then proceeded to the Third Rule.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I think there is an apparent conflict between the first sub-division and the third; one refers to the "communications from individuals and from public bodies," and the other to "communications from State officers." I would add to the first sub-division after "bodies" the words "other than those mentioned in the third sub-division of this rule."

Mr. SHERMAN—There is no objection to the adoption of the amendment that I can see, although it strikes me as surplusage.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—It seems to me, sir, that the words "State officers" includes individuals. The first sub-division says, "and communications from individuals;" the third sub-division says, "communications from State officers." There can be no doubt about it.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. T. W. Dwight, and it was declared lost.

Mr. ROBERTSON—I have two amendments to propose. The first sentence of rule 3 is "The correction of any error that may be found to exist therein." I propose to strike out the words "that may be found to exist," and after "therein" insert "and insertion of omissions therefrom." As it reads now it seems as if it was only to correct misstatements in the journal, and not include anything that was omitted. The second amendment I offer is to strike out the words "messages from the Governor." With all due respect to himself and his office, I think this might be included under communications from State officers, as it would imply that there was some direct relation between us and the Governor, and it would be better not to insert "messages from the Governor" in these rules.

MR. SHERMAN—I do not see how an omission can be regarded as anything but an error; therefore, the first amendment seems to me entirely unnecessary. In regard to the order of business—"messages from the Governor," I will state such a case as this might occur: Communications from Conventions of other States might be addressed to the Governor, and he, would be the proper organ of communication with this body. I have no doubt in the sessions of the Convention many such cases will occur, and for that reason, I think, this order of business should be retained.

The question was then put on the amendments of Mr. Robertson, and they were declared to be lost.

Mr. OPDYKE—Mr. President, I move to amend the second subdivision of this section by substituting the word "communications" for "messages." It seems to me that the word "messages" implies an official relation between the governor and this body, which does not exist. I think the word "communications" more appropriate.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Opdyke, and it was declared to be adopted.

The question was then put on the adoption of rule 3 as amended, and it was declared adopted.

The Secretary then proceeded to read rule 4.

There being no objection thereto, it was declared adopted.

The Secretary then proceeded to read rule 5, and it was declared by the President to be adopted.

The Secretary then read rule 6.

Mr. SHERMAN—"Or the" in the last line but one is a misprint. It should be "and."

The Secretary then proceeded to read rule 7.

Mr. BAKER offered the following amendment to the seventh rule:

"And such request shall not be withdrawn without the unanimous consent of the Convention."

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Baker, and it was declared lost.

Mr. FOLGER—I desire to ask the Chairman of the Committee on Rules, for what reason there is a change made in the time of members being privileged to ask for their excuse. Ordinarily, it is when the roll is being called, when their name is reached.

Mr. SHERMAN—The reason is, that if the request is made before the roll call is commenced it is likely to take much less time than if it were made during the call of the roll. There will be, probably, fewer requests if made before the roll call. At that time many members might ask to be excused, while their names were being called, who would not do it previous to that time. This rule is in accordance with the practice which has prevailed for a number of years in the Assembly of this State, and that is the only recommendation for its adoption. My own personal choice would be to see it stricken out altogether.

Mr. ALVORD—I am not aware that the statement last made by the gentleman is correct. It is not so far as regards my own experience as presiding officer of the Assembly and as a member of it goes. I never had any other rule before me for my action, except that a person was entitled, on the call to give reasons for the excuse, if he should ask for it when his name was reached upon the roll call. For instance, if a person should be out when the roll call was commenced, and should stay but a moment, when he returns he would find himself under the rule announced, bound to vote. He would have no time to make his excuse; or his attention may be called to another direction upon the announcement of the roll call. It seems to me it will take no more time when the roll is being called, when the person's name is reached, to make the excuse than it would at any other time. I, therefore, move as an amendment to restore the rule as it is in the Assembly, by striking out the word "before."

Mr. DEVELIN—I would ask the Chairman of the Committee on Rules whether the time which a person might occupy to give an excuse was not limited by the Assembly rule. Under this rule a person might speak all day giving an excuse. Five minutes was the rule at the last session.

Mr. SHERMAN—There was in the Assembly rule a limit of five minutes, and we have provided for the same thing in a somewhat different way. This rule provides that he shall state concisely, without argument, his excuse. I do not see how any member can occupy a whole day in stating concisely, and without argument, his request to be excused from voting.

Mr. WEED—By rule 7 of the Assembly of last year, from which this is copied, a person could, when his name was called, ask to be excused and then state his reasons. I imagine that the committee upon rules omitted to state—perhaps they may have done so—the words that allowed him to make the explanation at the time his name was called, and with the permission of the Convention I will read the fore part of the rule, showing what words are out: "Any member requesting to be excused from voting, may make, when his name is called, or immediately after the roll shall have been called, and before the result shall be announced, a brief statement of the reasons for making such request, not exceeding five minutes." It seems to me that this rule should be limited to briefly stating the facts—stating the reasons. As long as he states facts and not arguments under this rule he may talk half of the day, if they are reasons why he asks to be excused. It seems to me the position taken by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] is proper that a person may ask to be excused when his name is called. In bodies of this size members may be careless, and before the roll call is commenced many members will not know what the question is and before their name is called they will have ascertained and may have reasons why they desire to be excused; and it is when their names are called in the roll that they should have the right, it seems to me, to briefly state their reasons for asking to be excused. I hope, therefore, the motion of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that the rule may be amended so as to be substantially the same as the 7th rule of Assembly of last year will prevail.

The Secretary then read the amendment of Mr. Alvord as follows:

"Strike out the words 'before the roll call shall be commenced,' and insert in lieu thereof the words 'when his name is called on the roll.'"

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. ALVORD offered the further additional amendment: add at the end thereof the following: "But he shall not use for such purpose more than five minutes of time."

Which was adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN—I think this rule may be still further improved by striking it out altogether. I make that motion.

Mr. GOULD—What will be the effect of that rule?—I should like to understand it? It is plain to me that a member cannot be excused from voting if this rule is stricken out. If this is so I hope it will not be stricken out.

Mr. AROHER—The effect of striking out that rule will be to leave the rules as they were under the old parliamentary practice, by which every member was obliged to vote who was within the bar of the house when the question was stated by the Chair, unless he was personally interested in the result of the action. That has always been the rule so far as my acquaintance extends, until within a few years last past, and I have seen no good resulting from the adoption of this rule. On the contrary, I have seen much valuable time wasted in calling the roll and hearing excuses under this rule.

Mr. VEEDER—I would call the attention of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], who offers this motion to strike out the 7th rule, that that would be inconsistent with the provisions of the 6th rule, which provides that a member shall vote unless he be excused or be personally interested in the question. If there be power in the Convention to excuse a member from voting, there certainly should be some provision when he can make his excuse, and how much time he may be allowed to occupy in presenting that excuse.

Mr. SHERMAN—If my motion should be adopted it would be necessary to go back to the sixth rule and strike out the word "excuse" there.

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer the following amendment.

Mr. VEEDER—I understand the motion to be to strike out the rule. I do not think it is in order to make a motion to amend it.

The PRESIDENT—In the opinion of the Chair it takes precedence.

The Secretary then read the amendment of Mr. Lapham as follows:

"Any member requesting to be excused from voting, may make, when his name is called, or immediately after the roll shall have been called, and before the result shall have been announced, a brief statement of the reasons for making such request, not exceeding five minutes in time, and the question shall then be taken without debate, and such request shall not be withdrawn without the unanimous consent of the Convention."

Mr. TILDEN—It seems to me quite clear that the Assembly rule is much better than any of the amendments that have been proposed. It is simple, distinct, well-expressed and in conformity to all the recent practice of legislative bodies. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Lapham and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I move this as a substitute, in accordance with the remarks of the gentleman from Wayne, [Mr. Archer] which impressed me as exceedingly forcible.

"No member present in the Convention when the yeas and nays are ordered on any question shall leave the house till he shall have voted, and no member so present shall be excused from voting, unless he be personally interested in the decision.

I think that is the right rule, that every member shall vote who is here; that he shall not run out and shall not be excused. It will save time and give us a full vote. I ask this to be substituted for the rule as it now stands.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I ask for the experience of parliamentarians, if it be true as a principle of parliamentary law as stated by the gentleman from Wayne [Mr. Archer], that a legislative body has not the power, if a member asks to be excused from voting, to exercise that power, and grant such excuse? It seems to me that it must be inherent in such a body as this, and any legislative body, to excuse for any cause any of its members from voting upon any question. And the object of such rule must be to limit debates that may arise during the call of the roll and the taking of the vote, and prevent debates upon that question of excuse by confining persons asking to be excused to a simple statement of the reasons upon which the request is based. So that if we have not that rule, if I am correct in my supposition, whenever a member asks to be excused, the debate is open to every member, and without limit any more than it is upon any other question; and the purpose of the rule must be, and the benefits growing out of it must be expected to limit such debate, and to restrict such discussion. I am in favor of substituting the Assembly rules.

Mr. CLINTON—Beyond the excuse of interest in the question pending before the Convention, I can imagine one case in which it would be contrary to my conscience to vote. I wish that liberty preserved. I wish that every vote which I, or any other member may give, shall be conscientiously given, and with a knowledge of what he is doing. Now, the substitute of the gentleman from Westchester, [Mr. Greeley] as I regard it, puts a man in this position: I have not heard a debate. The question is new to me. I come in at the close of the debate. Then, under this substitute if it is adopted, I am asked to say under which King Benzonian—speak or die!—I am unwilling that any vote of mine—or vote of any gentleman here, should be dictated by mere leadership, or by any party considerations. I wish my vote to be intelligent; and if I have not heard an argument and do not understand the subject I will not vote, and the consequence must be, under the rule, that the sergeant-at-arms, I suppose, will take me into custody.

Mr. LOEW—I observe that a great portion of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], is already incorporated in the sixth rule, "Every member who shall be within the bar of the Convention when a question shall be stated from the Chair, shall vote thereon unless he be excused or be personally interested in the question."

Mr. VAN CAMPEN offered the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Greeley.

Insert after the word "voted" the following: "And that the doors and windows of the Chamber be closed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the members of the Convention be kept in close custody whenever the yeas and nays are ordered, and until the call of the roll be completed." [Laughter].

The question being put on the resolution of Mr. Van Campen, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. GREELEY—With very great respect for the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton], who has made the objection to this rule, it seems to me that he has proposed to make the neglect of one duty the justification for the neglect of another duty. We are here to listen to debates. This is a part of our duty. The gentleman says: "I have not heard the debate, and therefore, having refused or neglected to perform one duty, I ask that I may be allowed to neglect another." I think it is the duty of gentlemen to be here and to hear debates on the question. It is the old parliamentary rule, that gentlemen ought to vote, and I think that we ought to abide by it.

Mr. CLINTON—That may be true, yet there are a great variety of duties which are incumbent upon us. We are not merely here as members of the Convention; we have divers other relations. There are duties even superior to my duty to be present here to listen to whatever may fall from the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], or any other gentleman who has the ability to enlighten me. I may have a friend who is sick; an accident may happen to my wife, or something may require me to be absent during the debate, and yet permit me to come in at the close of it. It does not follow that I contemplate any neglect of my duty.

Mr. HALE—I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will not prevail. I submit that it is in violation of that amendment of the Constitution of the United States, the existence of which the gentleman from Westchester is undoubtedly aware, which provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, shall be permitted in this country. I do not propose that any rule shall be adopted by which members of this Convention shall be held in involuntary servitude during the time the roll is being called.

Mr. FULLER—I rise to a question of order. The 6th rule has already been adopted in the Convention. The amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] virtually repeals that rule, and that cannot be done except by reconsideration of the vote by which that rule was adopted.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. ROGERS—I ask if the previous question is in order on this last amendment?

The PRESIDENT—The previous question may be moved.

Mr. ROGERS—Then I move the previous question.

The PRESIDENT—On further consideration the chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rogers], is hardly pertinent, in view of the present state of the question.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. HITCHMAN moved to strike out the word "unanimous" in the 7th rule of the Assembly as adopted by the Convention. Which was carried.

Mr. SHERMAN—I withdraw my motion to strike out so that the question may be taken on the adoption of the rule direct.

The Secretary then read the rule as amended in words as follows:

"Any member requesting to be excused from voting, may make, when his name is called, or immediately after the roll shall have been called, and before the result shall be announced, a brief statement of the reasons for making such request, not exceeding five minutes in time, and the question shall then be taken without debate, and such request shall not be withdrawn without the consent of the Convention."

The question was then put on the adoption of the rule as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BERGEN—I move to insert the following as Rule 8, after Rule 7, in Chapter 3:

"Rule 8. Every member shall be entitled at all times to enter within the bar of the Convention, except when otherwise provided by these rules."

Is the proposed amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT—It is.

Mr. BERGEN—The object of this amendment is to have the doors open in the morning while the Chaplain is making his prayer. I have seen members, and I myself have been stopped and not allowed to enter the Chamber because the Chaplain was engaged at prayers. I do not know that this body is any more pious than the Congress of the United States. Members of Congress are allowed to enter the hall while the Chaplain is engaged at prayer. I don't know that we are any more pious than people are in our churches, and I believe that all churches are allowed to remain open during prayers by the chaplain or parson—at any rate, I have never in my travels found a church door closed while prayers were going on. But here, I say, I have found the doors closed, and by whose authority I do not know. I have found nothing in the rules authorizing it, and my object in offering this rule to be incorporated, is to prevent this practice of closing the doors against members. I may be in error, but I wish to put this matter to the test of the vote of the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—Does the gentleman propose to make this a distinct rule—the Chair so understands.

Mr. BERGEN—Yes sir.

Mr. LAPHAM—I rise to a question of order. The amendment proposed by the member from Kings [Mr. Bergen], does not relate to the conduct of persons or the government of this body. It refers to the duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. BERGEN—It refers to the privileges of members, and it is held to be one of the privileges of members to enter this hall unless excluded by the rules. The doors may be closed upon a call of the House, as it may be done here. But I hold it to be the privilege of a member to come in at any time unless excluded by the rules.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SHERMAN—It strikes me that the rule as proposed by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Bergen], is entirely unnecessary. Members have the right to enter the hall except during the call of the House, and no officer has a right to exclude them.

Mr. BERGEN—By what right then have I been excluded?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair can only say that it is not by its direction, and the Chair is informed that what has been done has been done according to custom by direction of the Clerk.

Mr. RATHBUN—I move that the amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT—It is the opinion of the Chair that that would carry the whole subject with it.

Mr. RATHBUN—This proposes an independent rule, as the previous rules have been adopted, I submit that it is not in the power of the Convention to lay them on the table.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. BERGEN—As I am informed that the doors are to be open during the hour of prayer that is all I desire, and if that is understood I am willing to withdraw the motion for the additional rule.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th rules, and no objection being made thereto, they were declared adopted.

The Secretary then read the 15th rule.

Mr. SHERMAN—This is no part of the report of the Committee, and is not to be considered now, I think.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope the Convention will proceed to consider this now, as it has been inserted here as a portion of the rules, and not improperly, I think. Why not proceed to consider this portion of the rules now?

The PRESIDENT—The chair understands that it constitutes no part of the report of the committee, and it can only be considered by way of amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN—If it is the wish of the Convention to proceed and consider this matter now, I see no objection to it. I simply mentioned that it was no part of the report of the Committee, and not to be considered as such now.

Mr. TILDEN—It occurs to me there is a practical difficulty in considering this question at the present time. The report made by my friend from Albany [Mr. Harris] contains not merely the constitution of these several committees, but an order of reference to these committees. That is not contained in these rules, and could not well be, because it would not be appropriate, as my honorable friend will see if he will observe the first clause: "Standing Committees shall be appointed by the President to consider and report severally upon the following subjects, and such others as may be referred to them." The report which was made yesterday, provides that the several parts of the Constitution relating to these subjects shall be referred to these Committees, and I think it will be needful to amend this rule in order to effect that object. I suggest, therefore, that we better omit the consideration of this report at this time, and proceed with the rules.

The PRESIDENT—It will be omitted as a matter of course. It forms no part of the report, and only can come in by way of an amendment.

Mr. SILVESTER—In the report of the committee on rules yesterday, there were several committees that were named in that report.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that there is no question before the Convention.

Mr. SILVESTER—I wish simply to inquire of the Chair, whether the committees that were reported by the Committee on Rules, and which were contained in their report, are now to be considered by the Convention or not. They reported four committees which are not in the report this morning—the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Committee on Printing, the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and the Committee on Engrossment and Enrollment.

Mr. SHERMAN—There were reported by the Committee on Rules four business committees, which have been accidentally omitted in the printing. They will be found in document No. 2 which was laid before the Convention. They are—the Committee on privileges and elections; printing; contingent expenses, and engrossment and enrollment. These are the only committees reported by the committee on rules.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the 16th rule.

Mr. DEVELIN—May I inquire whether that refers to the report made by my friend from Albany (Mr. Harris), as it says all reports of committees?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair hardly thinks it does.

No objection being made to rule 16th, it was declared adopted.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the 17th and 18th rules, and no objection being made thereto, they were declared adopted.

The Secretary then read the 19th rule.

Mr. SMITH—I move to amend rule 19th by striking out all after the word "except," and to substitute therefore the following:—"That the yeas and nays shall not be taken on a division." The object of that amendment is to get rid entirely of the "previous question" whenever it may be incorporated, or any allusion made to it in any one of the rules, and if the proposition be favorably received by the Convention, it will be only one of a series of motions to strike out, wherever the "previous question" occurs. I offer this amendment for the purpose of testing the sense of the Convention in regard to the necessity and propriety of the adoption by this body of the previous question, and from a conviction that it is not only unnecessary, but that it is unworthy the character and beneath the dignity of this body to adopt it. It is well known to members that that question has been entirely perverted from its original design and use, and has become simply an instrument for the suppression of debate. It was instituted originally by the British Parliament for the purpose of suppressing questions of a delicate character, which related to personages of high standing, and questions, the discussion of which might result in mischievous or unfortunate consequences, and when that question was put, a vote in the negative was always sought, and when that was obtained it suppressed the question, but to this day, in the British Parliament, it is not used for the purpose of suppressing debate. There are some instances in which that may be serviceable; it may be serviceable in cases where there are cliques or rings, who have certain schemes or measures which they want to press through a body, without ventilation or discussion. But Sir, there is no necessity for the rule in this body for that purpose, for it is to be presumed that no such cliques or rings exist here; and if there were such, they should neither receive aid from the rules, nor comfort from the body. It is sometimes perhaps necessary in legislative bodies, where there may be a factious minority, who seek to throw impediments in the way of legislation, but it is not necessary I apprehend in this body to provide for such a case as that; there is no such factious minority here. Some things have been said in regard to majorities, or to the majority and the minority and to parties. I confess, sir, that such language has fallen unpleasantly upon my ear; they have seemed like words of ill omen. For the purpose of revising the organic law of the State, there is in this body no majority and no minority; there are no parties here; we are all republicans, we are all democrats. We came here not for the purpose of framing an organic law for any party, or any sect, or any class, or any interest; but for the people of the State of New York in all their interests, vast and varied as they are, material and moral. I presume that none have come here with the view of influencing this body to do any such thing for a partizan purpose, and if they came with that view it would be the most consummate folly to attempt it, for in a country like ours, young, growing rapidly, and developing, where party issues and questions are changing and shifting like the sands of the shore, any should attempt to frame a constitution for partizan purposes, they might find, in a few revolutions of the political wheel, that they had constructed or an instrument that might serve to crush them. It may be thought by some, that without the use of this question, debates may become tedious and prolix; I do not apprehend that; there are other rules, as has already been suggested by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], which will meet that difficulty. I, sir, came here for the purpose of discussion, and I do not wish to suppress it; I desire to hear all that may be said upon all the grave and important questions that will come before us; and for one, I desire to hear especially from those who may differ from me upon any question which may arise, I desire to have a full and free discussion, and to gather all the information and all the ideas I am able to, from all persons, not only from those within this body but from without; and I have been thankful to those gentlemen outside, who have taken so much interest in this Convention, as to present us with their views upon the questions that may here arise. I do not believe that any previous question will be necessary, and I believe it will be more compatible with the dignity and character of this body to entirely eliminate it from the rules of the Convention.

Mr. SPENCER—I move to postpone the further consideration of this rule until after the Convention shall have acted upon rule 29.

Mr. WEED—I suggest to the gentleman who made this motion, that the question may be taken as well here, whether there is to be a previous question incorporated in the rules, as at any other time. If the gentleman will cast his eye along the report he will see there are other rules that will have to be passed upon or postponed, until the 29th rule is discussed. If this body shall see fit to retain the previous question in this rule, then these others may be passed without any motion being made upon them. If they shall see fit to strike it out, then the other rules may be amended, as a matter of course, as we come to them.

Mr. HALE—It strikes me that the motion of the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer] should prevail, although the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] suggests that the question may as well be taken now, as to whether we shall have the previous question or not, still, as the previous question may be retained, if not in its present form, yet in a modified form, I think it would be the simpler way for us first to decide upon this important proposition, when we consider the rule which directly provides for the previous question. It strikes me that will be the simpler form of getting at it.

Mr. VEEDER—I think the consideration of this previous question should be postponed. The Convention will observe, if we should strike out this provision here, in regard to the previous question, and should still retain subsequently the right to move the previous question, then under that rule it would be the privilege of any member of the Convention to move the previous question in Committee of the Whole. If we strike it out here, still it may be retained as a part of the provision of the rule to move the previous question, and then that rule will allow the previous question to be moved in Committee of the Whole, a provision which never has existed before. I therefore submit, we had better postpone the consideration of this rule now, because if it is retained we shall have to move to restore this provision.

Mr. SHERMAN—It strikes me the best mode of proceeding would be to pass over this rule informally, or to postpone it, and take it up when we come to the previous question in the 4th subdivision of rule 23.

Mr. SPENCER—I have no objection to that, and accept the suggestion of my friend.

No further amendments being made thereto rule 19 was declared to be adopted.

The Secretary then read rule 20, 21 and 22, and there being no objection made thereto, they were declared to be adopted.

Mr. SMITH offered the following amendment to strike out in the 4th sub-division the words "For the previous question."

Mr. AXTELL—I hope the provision will be retained. As to the remarks of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks,] as to what is becoming this body to do, the body itself must decide. If this body shall retain the previous question, it will be becoming, and it will be dignified also. The argument against retaining the previous question, as I understand it, is, that it is not in the rules of the Senate of this State and not in the rules of the Senate of the United States. I call the attention of the Convention to the fact that these are smaller bodies; but in bodies of this size the previous question will be found very convenient, and will contribute to the despatch of business. I know that the British House of Commons and Parliament has been cited as a body in which the previous question is not used for the suppression of debate, but the British House of Commons is not a model so far as the mode of conducting its debates is concerned; not having the previous question, it has altogether a more summary method of suppressing debate, by turning the House of Commons into a bear garden, or menagerie, or something of that kind. I submit that the previous question will contribute to the dignity of this body and will facilitate the despatch of business.

Mr. ARCHER—The majority of the Committee on Rules inserted the provision under consideration believing it was necessary, or that it might become necessary for the despatch of the business for which we are called together. In the Convention of 1846, when I first came here, I entertained the same opinion that has been expressed by some gentleman upon the floor, that the previous question was entirely unnecessary to any such body and would be improper; but the then majority inserted it and it was practiced before the Convention closed. I was obliged to yield and to admit to the friends who told me in the outset that I was wrong, that I was in error with regard to it, and I found that the practical workings of the rule were salutary. We can readily conceive that in a body as large as this, it may become absolutely necessary for us to limit debate. There is such a thing as exhausting a subject, and after all has been said that may be pertinently said upon a subject, it is due to our constituents and to the people of the State that we shut down debate and come to a decision of the subject matter before us. It may be, sir, that without some such stringent rule as provided for in the report of the Committee, that a large number of gentlemen may wish to make speeches to go forth to the State after it is evident to the members of the Convention that not one word more can be said that will influence a vote. And it is for the reason that we thought it might be necessary that a majority, —I am not now speaking of political majorities, or of the majority of one party or the other—but I say, a majority of the members of this Convention having the appropriate business of this body directly in mind, should always have under its control the action of this body, and, therefore, I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LARREMORE—I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks of the gentleman from Wayne, [Mr. Archer,] and I certainly think there is a great distinction between limiting a debate and shutting it off altogether. If we come here to represent our constituents in a State Convention, it is certainly proper, and within the privileges of this house, that each individual member of it should have the right to give free expression to his opinion upon any question that may come before it. I hope therefore, the motion of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] will prevail. This House has control of its own action, and if the privilege is at all abused we can at any time limit the time of the debate so that no member shall abuse his privileges. The gentleman has referred to political majorities. I am sorry he did so, because I have seen nothing in the action of this Convention to awaken any suspicions of that kind. And I think this will be the first act, if we adopt this question and incorporate the previous question into our rules,—It will be the first thing in my judgment looking towards partizanship in the deliberation of this body.

Mr. ARCHER—I beg leave to correct the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Larremore]. I distinctly stated that I had no reference to a political party or a political majority, but I had reference to the majority of the men, irrespective of party, on this floor who had distinctly in mind and first in heart the proper business which has called us together.

Mr. LARREMORE—I misunderstood the gentleman on that subject then.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I agree with my colleague [Mr. Archer] entirely upon his recollections upon this subject. I can very well remember when we were in the Convention of 1846, when it was adopted in the first instance, but little used and when finally we passed the fifteen minutes limitation rule I said that in all my previous legislative experience I had never seen the necessity of voting for the previous question, at any rate I had never seen the necessity existing to such a degree, as to require my vote. But in those bodies with which I have had the honor of being previously associated I found there was a certain and almost fixed ratio or number of floor members, I think in a body of 128 members, it was about 25 gentlemen who would have occasion at various times, lengthily or otherwise, to occupy the attention of the House, and I know from the experience I had in that Convention, that constitutional conventions are in some respects peculiar bodies. I remember on one occasion in the Convention, that I predicted there was no member present of our body but was perfectly competent, and who would not prove himself so, to rise and address the chair at length or briefly, and at last toward the close of the Convention the joke went around as a gentleman would arise for the first time, "there is another one of your men," And I believe one very important question, of striking out a provision we had made, that we thought would be unanimously adopted, which was the constitutional provision, that no person should exercise a franchise who could not read the English language, was done in this way: It was stricken out at a very late period of the session by a gentleman who only spoke upon that occasion, but who spoke so effectively that it was negatived unanimously. And thus, from my experience in that Convention, I was induced for the first time in my public career to vote for the limitation of debate. I should prefer that for the present we should omit this matter of the previous question until we get along a little further, and then if we find it necessary at any time to restrict the debate, we can do so, and if necessary adopt the previous question.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I have a word or two to say, in addition to what I have already said upon this subject. I regret exceedingly in the formation of this Committee, that a division of the Committee became necessary, in the way it did (although it was perfectly fair and just on the part of the Chairman), yet the division became necessary, and there were three who were in favor of this proposition, and two who were in the minority, were opposed to it. I do not believe, as I have already said, that, at this stage of the session of this Convention, such a harsh measure as this, is necessary. I do not believe that, on the part of the minority of this body, it is necessary to make any such distinctions, or that there is any purpose or desire to abuse the privileges of debate, or to trespass upon the time of this body, or to do anything unbecoming the members of this Convention; nor do I believe there is any purpose on the part of the so-called majority, so to control or regulate, or to infringe upon the rights of debate, as to oppress the minority. But I can conceive, as every gentleman of legislative experience must conceive, of a certain state of proceedings, where the previous question will operate very greatly to the public disadvantage. The effect of it is not merely to cut off debate, but to cut off amendments and propositions of the most important character, which any gentleman may be ready to submit, and which it will be impossible to submit under a previous question. It is not, therefore, merely in its effect to curtail debate, but to prevent it, and to cut off all such deliberate and enlightened propositions as may be in the possession of the members of the Convention themselves. Therefore I hope, Mr. President, that, at this stage of the proceedings, it will not be deemed necessary to adopt this harsh and stringent rule. It is very true, as has been said, there is no pr vious question in the British Parliament, and the British House of Commons has been characterized by one gentleman on the other side of the House as a sort of bear garden; but, sir, with all respect to the deliberations of the Senate of the United States of America, and with all proper disrespect to the debates upon the other side of the Atlantic, let me say that a subject in the British House of Commons is as thoroughly and intelligibly discussed as in any deliberative body in the world. It is not a question of mere forensic eloquence, not a question where speeches are made for home consumption and for Buncombe, but where members address themselves, as they ought to address themselves in a body like this, directly to the subject under consideration. The previous question had its origin in Great Britain over 250 years ago. It never was intended to abridge debate. But after it had been in operation for over 150 years, then it was that it was improved and used, as has been expressed by Mr. Jefferson and others, in order to prevent injurious and personal discussion. Let me very briefly read what Mr. Jefferson says upon this subject: "A proper occasion for the previous question, is when a subject is brought forward of a delicate nature, as to high personages, &c., the discussion of which may call for observations which may lead to injurious consequences." This was the original previous question, but the previous question in our day and time, in public bodies like the Assembly and like the House of Representatives in Washington, is to cut off important debate, and, as I have said already, here there are various substitutes for that; such as to put the question upon a certain day named, and upon an hour named in that day; or such as postponing the question, if need be, and where the presiding officer will limit the discussion to the precise and technical object which is under consideration; or such as laying it upon the table, which cuts off all debate. Now, sir, when the presiding officer of this body holds a member to his strict performance of what properly is under discussion, there can be no great abuse of the question. Certainly, in a body like this, before we have been ten days in session, and where the rules of the body are always under the control of the body itself, it is not, in my judgment, necessary to adopt this measure. As I have said, Sir, if at a later period of the session, it becomes necessary to introduce this measure, growing out of any abuse in debate, I will not oppose it, and I do not believe that any large number of the Convention will.

Mr. CURTIS—The previous question, Mr. President, has been retained in some form in almost every deliberative assembly, but there seems unquestionably to be some feeling upon this subject, in our revising these rules, on the part of the Convention. The gentleman who preceded me has most truly remarked, that it is a matter in which we are to be instructed by experience, and it seems to me that at the present stage of the discussion it must be evident to the Convention that it will be wiser, for the present, not to insist upon the previous question, for the reason that when the dog days set in and we shall wax more eloquent and more lengthy in our speeches, we may then find, as the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] has suggested, that it may be necessary to impose the previous question in the interests of the people of the State. I hope, therefore, since my friend from Fulton [Mr. Smith] has described this body as one peculiarly fit to exercise this power, and as a body not of designing men, and not being of any political complexion, but as a body rather of sense than otherwise, in whose hands the power may fairly belong, I trust that the previous question will now at least be passed over until a later period.

Mr. HARRIS—The gentleman from Richmond who has just taken his seat has said, and said it much better than I could have done, what it was my purpose to say. I have never been very friendly to the previous question, and yet it has come to be almost a common law in large bodies like this. I think it was fit, and commendable in the committee on rules to present that rule for the consideration of this body, and I concur in the views which have been suggested by the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], and by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], that it would be unwise now, to adopt the previous question in this body. I believe we shall get along very well and comfortably without it. A body constituted as this, I am persuaded, will not encroach at any time upon the liberty of debate, and if we should find hereafter, that it is necessary to cut short debate, we can adopt this rule, or what will be better, we can occasionally fix a limit to the debate, or to the time when the question shall be taken by the Convention, I hope, therefore, we shall not now adopt the previous question as a part of our rules.

Mr. DALY—There is a reason, Mr. President, which applies in the adoption of the previous question in legislative bodies, which does not apply in a body like this. A legislature has a large amount of business before it—a great number of bills to pass in the course of the session, and there are a great many conflicting interests in reference to the measures to be passed upon. And the previous question, as a power in the hands of such bodies, becomes a necessity for the despatch of public business. The business we have to do is comparatively small, and it will not, after it is finished, embrace much more than an ordinary act of the legislature. It requires great deliberation; it requires much discussion, and, I think, it is the experience of every person who has examined the debates of public bodies in this country, although there may be much irrelevant and much discursive matter, yet they have the quality which distinguishes them above the debates of the British Parliament and of nearly every other public body, that every possible view of the question is examined.

We are here to make a fundamental law of the State; the provisions are comparatively few. They will be carefully considered in committee before they will be submitted to us, and it is proper that the greatest latitude of debate should be allowed before they are passed upon. I sympathize most sincerely with the remarks of the gentleman on the other side of the House, with regard to the motives that actuate this body. I have hitherto been a silent spectator of it, and I have witnessed with great gratification the sincere and earnest disposition evinced upon the part of what may be called a majority of this House, to do justice to the minority. It was marked in the first important measure of the President himself; it has been marked by the character of the debate throughout. It is perhaps very unfortunate that our proceedings were opened with a reference to political partialities, prejudices and powers, and it is happy that it has not been followed up. There certainly was no ground for complaint, in my judgment, involved in the complaint made originally, and I might add, perhaps, that there was as little cause for the defense offered to that complaint. I am quite satisfied that I but echo the sentiments of a large number of gentlemen who act with me, in what is called the minority, when I say I am quite satisfied with the fairness and impartiality and disinterestedness that has distinguished this Convention, and which I am satisfied will mark its deliberations throughout. I has been very justly said, Mr. Chairman, if it should ever be necessary for the despatch of public business to apply the previous question, it will be in our power to do so. I therefore, most earnestly hope it will not be made use of at this period. There is not that occasion for imprudent legislation, for haste, or for any of those consequences which are arrested by a resort to the previous question, in a body of this nature, that would be required in a legislative body.

Mr. STRONG—If I was under the impression that the action of this Convention would be a partisan one, I should be very much in favor of striking out this provision, but I have better hopes; and from what has taken place in this Convention, I believe myself that each member will vote for any proposition according to the best of his understanding and without any reference to previous party considerations. I came here at any rate, with a view to support any measure, let it come from what source it may, which I believe to be a proper one and one which if adopted would be for the best interests of this people, and I intend to pursue that course. But if there is any proper way in which it can be done, I am very much in favor of having some power in the Convention to stop debate; if not, it may be interminable. I do not believe, however, there will be any attempt made to stop debate upon party consideration; and if so, that could be prevented if we adopt an amendment providing that the previous question shall not be sustained except upon a vote of two-thirds of the delegates present. If that is done, it would, undoubtedly, effectually prevent any party action. I beg leave to make one or two remarks, with regard to the action of the Democratic party in calling this Convention, and what I suppose will be its action hereafter. It is true, undoubtedly, that there was a considerable portion of the Democratic party who opposed the calling of this Convention, and it may be that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is right, that if there had been a majority of democrats in the Assembly and Senate, the law would not have passed. But it was not because the Democratic party, or any considerable portion of it, was opposed to amending the Constitution; they have always been in favor of that, or at least a very large portion of them, and I have no doubt if they could have been relieved from some apprehensions they had at the time, they would have been as zealous to have this convention called, as perhaps any of the opposite party. The great apprehension of the Democratic party was, that if the convention was called it would go too far; that it would take extreme measures. And they had another apprehension, too, I acknowledge, and that was, that party considerations might have an influence upon the views of members in this convention; but when I came here, I came with the expectation that in that they were mistaken. It is true the Republican party have had a caucus and have selected the officers of the convention. That was to be expected, sir, and I do not blame them for that. It is the rule, I believe, in every body constituted as this is, and in every legislative body, that the majority should control in the selection of the officers. Against that I had no complaint, and I was very well satisfied with the selection they made and very cheerfully voted for the officers which were selected by that caucus.

But there was a resolution adopted, after they had made the nomination of officers, which looked a little toward party action, and to that I was opposed—there was a resolution calling for other caucuses of the Republican party. There could be no object to be accomplished by that, except it was to act upon public measures, because they had already made the selection of officers and there was nothing further to do with regard to that. If caucuses are to be called again, it must necessarily be with a view of controlling the party in voting for some particular measures. I trust, however, that the very honorable gentleman who was Chairman of that meeting and one of the Committee of that caucus, will not find it necessary to call a caucus with a view of considering any such measures. But if he is prevailed upon by pressure from others, or thinks proper to call them, and the idea becomes general that the caucus dictation is to control the action of this Convention, it will seriously jeopardize anything we may do. If there is an impression among the people that the gentlemen of this Convention are acting for the benefit of a particular party rather than for the public benefit of the people of the State, then my impression is that anything that may be adopted here will be rejected. I am rather inclined to move that if the previous question is to control in any case, it shall be by a two-thirds vote; and I would make that motion.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—As I am the person who had the honor in the Republican caucus to move that the officers of the meeting be authorized to call future Conventions, perhaps a word is due from myself in answer to the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong]; and let me say that I made that motion with no reference to the idea that it was possible for the Republican caucus, or any other caucus, to control my vote upon a measure to be adopted by this Convention. I don't so construe the duty of a member of this Convention. I believe it is the duty of every member in voting upon measures here to act according to the dictates of his own conscience, and it was with that reason I desired that Delegates representing Senatorial districts should not sit together. I c sire that every man should act upon his individual judgment. So much in answer to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong]. I am myself, to some degree, inexperienced in official public bodies although somewhat conversant with the action of bodies unofficial; but to my appreciation, there is nothing that this Convention more needs than discussion—than debate. We are living under one of the best Constitutions that God ever gave to man for his government. We have come together to see what changes shall be made in that Constitution. We have come together when the people of this State have, to no very great degree, marked out the form of any changes that shall be made in the Constitution. They have sent us here rather to find out what changes should be made, and in what order, and in what form those changes should be put, and for the purpose of making such changes, we need the views of every man elected to this body, and I would not stifle the expression of any man's views who has the honor of a seat upon this floor. It is to be presumed that every man who has been sent here has come here with the confidence of a portion of the people of this State, and if he desires to express the opinion that he entertains, for anything that I now know, I would give the fullest freedom to the expression of his sentiments. I believe that every gentleman who has come here has been a member of either one or the other of the great political parties of this State, and so far as we are members of these parties, my belief is that no great differences of opinion will prevail in respect to the instructive nature of the statements made. I expect as much benefit from the expression of views of gentlemen who have acted with the Democratic party heretofore, as from gentlemen who have acted with the Republican party. It is not the Democratic party that I fear in this Convention—what is to be feared is hasty action—action not sufficiently considerate, whether it come from one party or the other, and if there is any way to avoid hasty and inconsiderate action I hope it may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT then stated that the pending question was on the amendment of Mr. Strong, which provided that the previous question should not be ordered, except on a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I wish to say a word which I think will relieve this whole matter of any embarrassment. The gentleman from Kings holds an amendment which will cover the difficulty.

THE PRESIDENT—The amendment suggested by the gentleman, not having been offered, the Chair cannot take cognizance of it.

Mr. STRONG—The purpose of my amendment is, that a motion for the previous question cannot be sustained except upon a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting.

Mr. ROGERS—On that I call for the ayes and noes.

Mr. SHERMAN—I would suggest to the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong] that the proper place for his amendment would be under Rule 29. It comes in rather awkwardly at this point.

Mr. ROGERS—On that, Mr. President, I call for the ayes and noes.

Not a sufficient number of members seconding the call, the ayes and noes were not ordered.

Mr. FERRY—I am compelled, Mr. President, to ask what is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT—The question pending before the Convention is the amendment of the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong] to so amend the rule that it shall provide that the previous question shall not be sustained except upon a vote of two-thirds of the delegates present and voting.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. I hope, if we are to have the previous question, we shall have it in the ordinary way, and it may be adopted by the majority; but I am against the previous question, and hope that we shall not have it at all. It will be as much of a tyranny for two-thirds to shut off the right of discussion to one-third, as if one-half should shut it off from the other half. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DEVELIN—Mr. President: I think, upon the reading of the first part of the proposed rule, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Suffolk will be found to be entirely incongruous.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not understand that there is any incongruity.

Mr. DEVELIN—That rule provides for the order of motions.

Mr. SHERMAN—Before the vote is taken, I wish to make a remark having some practical bearing on this subject. It has been stated in this debate that a sufficient substitute for the previous question might be found in bringing the debate to a close at a certain hour. The difficulty is, that a motion of that kind is not a privileged question, and could not be sustained, except by a unanimous vote.

Mr. E. BROOKS—The answer to that is that we are about to adopt a rule by which we can change any rule upon one day's notice.

Mr. SHERMAN—Yes, by the consent of a majority of all the members.

Mr. DEVELIN—Will the President instruct the Secretary to read the entire rule as printed with the heading?

The Secretary proceeded to read the rule as requested.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman from Suffolk send his amendment up in writing?

Mr. ROBERTSON—It is very evident that this amendment, if adopted at all, should be inserted in rule 29, as rule 23 is a mere sketching of the order of proceedings of the convention. I therefore propose, if in order, that we postpone the consideration of rule 23 until after the consideration of rule 29.

Mr. POND—I would suggest that the amendment would properly come in as an amendment to rule 24, and more properly than to rule 29. Rule 24 is this: "Every motion or resolution to adjourn for the day, for the previous question, and to lay on the table, shall be decided without amendment or debate. After that it may be inserted that the previous question shall not be adopted without a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting."

The PRESIDENT—The question will be taken on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Robertson], as amended by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond].

Mr. VEEDER—I do not understand that a motion to postpone is amendable.

The PRESIDENT—A motion to postpone to a definite period—say until after the consideration of Rule 29—is amendable in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. TILDEN—The only proper place in which to consider any motion to regulate the previous question is under Rule 29. That is substantively the provision in respect to this matter, and whether it be decided by the Convention to strike out the Rule, or to retain it in some modified form, or in some regular form, that is the proper place for the consideration of the question. The 24th Rule, as well as the 23d, is a mere regulation of the order of priority in which certain business shall be done, and it does not touch the substance of the question now under discussion. I, therefore, have thought my friend from New York, [Mr. Robertson,] quite right in moving to postpone the consideration of Rule 23, and then when we reach Rule 24 that that should be postponed until the whole matter may come up regularly in the consideration of Rule 29. When we come to consider that, my venerable and excellent friend from Suffolk [Mr. Strong], may propose his amendment regularly as to the mode in which the previous question can be seconded. It will then be for the Convention to decide between the propositions now being debated before it—the one whether the previous question shall be retained, requiring a larger vote than a majority to order it, or the other, whether we shall defer the previous question altogether until experience shall have developed some necessity for its existence. For myself, I do not feel much solicitude as to which course shall be taken. I have no recollection that, in the Convention of 1846, although we had the previous question, we had occasion to resort to it, and certainly, if at all, very rarely. But, inasmuch as there is a facility to amend these rules, almost extreme in its character, I am almost inclined to agree with the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] and with the gentleman from Queens [Mr. S. Townsend] in thinking that we might as well leave the question whether or not we shall have the previous question, to be determined by future experience. If it were the proposition to commit ourselves finally and absolutely to the conclusion that we would not vote in any instance to have the previous question, I should be inclined to a different opinion.

Mr. MERRITT—For the purpose of saving time I think we had better consider Rule 29, and I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ROGERS—I would like to know, Mr. President, what Rule 29 is?

The Secretary proceeded to read Rule 29 as reported by the Committee.

Mr. ROGERS—I object.

The PRESIDENT—Objection being made the question will recur on the motion of the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond] to amend the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Robertson] that the consideration of Rule 23 be postponed until after the consideration of Rule 24.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Pond, and it was declared carried.

Rule 24, as reported by the Committee was then read by the Secretary.

Mr. SMITH moved to amend by striking out the words "or the previous question."

Mr. SPENCER moved to postpone the consideration of Rule 24 until after the Convention should have considered Rule 29, which was carried.

Rules 25 and 26 as reported were read by the Secretary, and there being no objection thereto, they were declared adopted.

Rule 28 was then read by the Secretary.

Mr. STRONG—I move that the following words be stricken out of the rule as read. "Nor unless moved by one who shall have voted in the majority." I am aware that a rule of this kind has existed in Congress for a number of years, and has also existed in the House of Assembly. I have felt by experience the inconvenience of that rule in Congress during two sessions of that body. I have found that persons who were opposed to the action of the majority have nevertheless voted with the majority against their conscientious convictions, for the purpose of being able to move a reconsideration. It seems to me that a motion for a reconsideration should be made by any delegate in the Convention, and that it is the privilege belonging to each delegate which should be exercised by one in the minority as well as one in the majority. I have never discovered any instance in any body to which I have belonged where a member could not be prevailed upon to vote against his opinion, and pretty generally there has been an ability to persuade some one in the majority to vote to move for a reconsideration. I think we had better reserve the privilege to each delegate to the Convention than to have the same thing accomplished by indirect action.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Strong, and it was declared carried by a vote of 63 ayes to 56 noes.

Mr. WEED—I move to further amend by inserting after the word "day," in the third line, the words "on which a session of this Convention shall be held." As the section now reads, under the construction given in this State to a legislative day, a motion made on Saturday can not be reconsidered on Monday. When the word was originally incorporated in the rule it was intended to cover a day upon which the Legislature had a session. But some few years ago the Attorney-General of this State decided that the Sabbath day was a legislative day, because the Legislature in session had a right to sit upon that day, and as will be readily seen, the use of the word originally in the rule, has been so changed that a motion or action of this House on Saturday cannot be reconsidered on Monday if this rule were strictly enforced, because the motion to reconsider was not made on the next preceding legislative day, which was Sunday. I desire to call the attention of every member of this Convention to the object of the rule, it being that at the next session of this Convention, a motion may be made to reconsider any error or inaccuracy in the action of the Convention.

Mr. TILDEN—This rule is doubtless well adapted to the House of Assembly, where there are a great many questions of very great importance to be acted upon. But in a great body of this kind, where there are comparatively few questions, and where it is expedient to allow the widest latitude for discussion and consideration, where there is not sitting another body to be a check upon its proceedings, and where there does exist no veto power on the part of the executive, it is worthy of consideration whether a more liberal rule with regard to the question of reconsideration of our action, should not prevail. In my judgment, the chief danger to be apprehended here will be that we may pass upon questions of grave importance to our constituents, too hastily, too rapidly, with too little consideration. In the Convention of 1846, the rule that prevailed was as follows:

"A motion for reconsideration shall be in order at any time, and may be moved by any member of the Convention, but the question shall not be taken on the motion to reconsider, on the same day on which the decision proposed to be reconsidered shall take place, unless by unanimous consent; and a motion to reconsider being once put and lost, shall not be renewed, nor shall any subject be a second time reconsidered without the consent of the Convention. If the motion to reconsider shall not be made on the same day or the day after that on which the decision proposed to be reconsidered was made, three days' notice of the intention to make the motion shall be given."

You will perceive sir, and the Convention will perceive that this rule is in favor of reconsideration by a single body exercising far greater powers, and acting on fewer subjects than is common with legislative bodies. This subject has attracted my attention so hastily that I have not had much opportunity to consider it, but I am inclined to a more liberal rule on this subject, and for the purpose of bringing it before the attention of the Convention, I will move it as a substitute for the rule I have read for rule 28 now under consideration.

Mr. WEED—For the purpose of bringing the substitute squarely before this body, I withdraw my amendment.

The question was then put on the motion for the substitute of Mr. Tilden, and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the 28th rule as amended by the substitution of the rule offered by Mr. Tilden, and it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then read the 29th rule.

Mr. GERRY offered the following substitute:

"The Convention may at any time, by a vote of a majority of all its members present and voting, limit the time which its members shall respectively occupy in the discussion of any motion or resolution, and the resolution to limit the time of debate, shall be deemed a privileged motion, and shall be decided without amendment or debate."

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Gerry, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD moved to strike out Rule 29 entirely.

Mr. FLAGLER—I would ask the ayes and noes on the question, as I desire to be on the record against it. I think this debate demonstrates the necessity of having the previous question in this body.

A sufficient number seconding the call for the ayes and noes, they were ordered.

Mr. MERRITT—I do not desire to detain gentlemen with any extended remarks; but it seems to have been conceded by the opponents of the previous question that a contingency may arise where it may be necessary. It has also been admitted by a member of the convention of 1846, the eminent gentleman before me [Mr. Tilden] that in that convention its exercise was not necessary. With the spirit prevailing in this convention, I think there is no danger growing out of its incorporation in the rules. Whenever the time for its exercise shall come, it is proper that we should have the power to exercise it. When I say "we" I mean the majority upon any question which comes up; and I do not speak of it in any party sense at all. I am therefore in favor of the adoption of this rule as it now stands, and I may be allowed to express the hope that there will never be any occasion for its exercise.

Mr. STRONG—I believe that the previous vote was, that the amendment which I offered to the 4th sub-division of the rule should be laid over until this time. I move that there be now inserted, immediately after the word "affirmative," on the 2d line of rule 29, the words "by the vote of two-thirds of the members present and voting."

Mr. BICKFORD—I will merely say that my object in moving to strike out the 29th rule is twofold. First, That we may, if we desire, insert some other rule in its place, this being cleared away; and, in the second place, that we may for the present attempt to get along without the previous question, having power at any time we wish, to adopt it, if we find it necessary for the dispatch of business. I suppose the whole of this rule may be spared.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Bickford to strike out the 29th rule, and the motion was declared carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Brooks, A. E. Brown, Burrill, Case, Cassidy, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Clinton, Collahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Daly, Develin, C. C. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Endress, Ferry, Fowler, Garvin, Gould, Graves, Gross, Hale, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Hutchins, Kernan, Kinney, Larremore, Law, A. R. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Masten, Mattioe, Merwin, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. E. Parker, President, Prosser, Reynolds, Robertson, Roy, Rogers, L. W. Russell, Schell, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Silvester, Smith, Spencer, Tappen, Tilden, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Veeder, Wakeman, Wales, Weed, Wickham, Young—85.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Artell, Baker, Ballard, Barker, Bergen, E. P. Brooks, Carpenter, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Farnum, Field, Flagler, Folger, Frank, Fuller, Gerry, Greeley, Hadley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Jarvis, Krum, Landon, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Pond, Prindle, Rathbun, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Stratton, Strong, Tucker, Van Cott, Williams.—53.

Mr. SHERMAN moved the following as a substitute for rule 19.

Rule 19. The same rule shall be observed in Committee of the Whole, as in the Convention, as far as applicable, except that the yeas and nays shall not be taken on a division.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Sherman and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. Smith, to strike out sub-division 4 of Rule 23; which was carried.

Mr. COOKE moved to strike out the words "or the previous question."

Mr. SMITH—There is a motion pending to that effect. I offered such a motion myself.

Mr. COOKE—Then I withdraw the motion.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Smith to strike out the words "for the previous question," in rule 24, and it was declared carried.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 30.

Mr. WEED—I would suggest that rules 19, 23 and 24, having been amended, should be adopted by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—If there is no objection they will be considered as adopted.

Mr. FIELD—I move the following amendment to rule 24.

The PRESIDENT—Rule 24 having been adopted, it is hardly in order to move to adopt it.

Mr. FIELD—The motion was not put.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair hearing no objection to the adoption of the rules, they were considered to be adopted.

Mr. FIELD moved a reconsideration of the decision adopting Rule 24.

Which was lost.

The Secretary then read Rules 30, 31 and 32, and there being no objections thereto they were declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read Rule 33.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following amendment.

Add as the 8th sub-division the following:

"Such person or persons as any member of the Convention may invite, but such privilege shall cease whenever the sofas upon the floor are filled."

Mr. FIELD offered the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Silvester:

"The President may daily issue cards of admission to not more than twenty persons, who shall be entitled to admission within the bar during that day."

Which was lost.

Mr. POND—The Convention adopted a motion the other day extending the privileges of the floor to the Judges of the Court of Appeals. I propose to add to subdivision 8, "the Judges of the Court of Appeals."

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I would move to amend the amendment by adding the ex-Judges of the Court of Appeals.

Mr. POND—I accept the amendment.

The question was put on the amendment offered by Mr. Pond, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LARREMORE—A motion was adopted on the first day's session, extending the privileges of the floor to the members of the two former Constitutional Conventions of this State. I would move that they be included in the subdivision of the rule.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Larremore, and it was declared carried.

Mr. RUMSEY offered the following amendment: Insert at the end of subdivision 7 of rule 33, the words: "By name on a special vote."

Mr. RUMSEY—My object in offering the amendment is this. Congress has returned thanks, by a general vote, to the officers of the army, and without that amendment, all officers of the army would be entitled to the privileges of the floor.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Rumsey, and it was declared carried.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Silvester as subdivision 8, relative to persons entitled to the privileges of the floor, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the rule as amended by adding subdivision 8, providing for the admission of Judges and ex-Judges of the Court of Appeals, and members of the two former Constitutional Conventions of this State, to the privileges of this floor, and it was declared adopted.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the rule as amended on motion of Mr. Rumsey, by adding at the end of subdivision 7 the words, "by name on a special vote," and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following amendment, add as subdivision 9 of Rule 33, the following:

"Ladies; but the privilege of ladies to such admission to cease whenever the sofas upon the floor are filled."

The question was put, on the amendment of Mr. Silvester, and it was declared to be lost.

The question was then put on the adoption of rule 33, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

The President announced the reception of the following communication from the Comptroller:

STATE OF NEW YORK, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, }

HON. WILLIAM A. WHEELER, President of the Constitutional Convention.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a Resolution of the Convention, adopted on the 11th inst., addressed to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and to state in reply, that it will be submitted for their consideration at the earliest day on which the Board can be convened.

Very respectfully yours,

THOMAS HILLHOUSE,

Which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WEED—I ask for an indefinite leave of absence for Mr. Pierpont. At his request I state as a reason that he was engaged as counsel in the Surratt trial in Washington prior to his nomination to this Convention. He supposed that the trial would take place prior to the holding of the Convention, but it was adjourned until now.

No objection being offered the leave of absence was granted.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND moved that the Convention do now adjourn. Which was lost.

Mr. BERGEN moved that the Convention take a recess until four o'clock, which was lost.

Mr. POND—It seems to me that by unanimous consent the balance of this report may be adopted. The committee were unanimous on every part of it except that which refers to the previous question.

Mr. FOLGER—I object.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rules 34 and 35, and there being no objection thereto they were adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 36.

Mr. MORRIS offered the following amendment: Substitute for the words "one-fifth" the word "thirty."

Mr. FIELD moved to amend the amendment by substituting in place of the word "thirty" the word "fifteen."

Which was carried.

The question then recurred on the adoption of Rule 36 as amended and it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 37.

Mr. FIELD moved to amend by striking out the words "within two days," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "next day."

Mr. WEED—I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Orleans, [Mr. Field], as I should like to have the journal put on our files on the second day, but if we get them on in six days under this rule it will be more promptly than I have ever known it to be done.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Field, and it was declared to be adopted.

The question then recurred on the adoption of Rule 37 as amended, and it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 38, and there being no objection it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 39.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rules whether he has examined the question, how far, under the law constituting this convention, we are authorized to pass any such resolution as this, or adopt any such rule.

Mr. SHERMAN—The language of the law as I remember it, is that the Comptroller shall furnish to the convention such file-boards, stationery and other like articles as are furnished for the use of the legislature. Among other articles furnished for the use of the legislature are stationery for the use of officers. The statute of 1853 provides that each officer shall have stationery furnished him.

Mr. CONGER—I apprehend that the chairman of the committee is mistaken in the meaning of the law, which discriminates between stationery that may be allowed to the members to the extent of thirty dollars, and the furnishing of such other matter as is customary for the use of the House of Assembly and its officers. The rule would admit of the confusion of the two allowances, and for the purpose, of testing the sense of the Convention, I move that it be stricken out.

Mr. MERRITT—It strikes me that it would be a very proper subject for a resolution. The power can be exercised but once, and the Secretary who issues the order for stationery would find himself embarrassed except by the positive instructions of the Convention. I think, therefore, it should be a matter of resolution instead of being incorporated in the rules.

Mr. ALVORD—I call the attention of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Sherman] and the Convention to the third section of the law which authorizes our assembling. They will find it is confined to members thereof, and it is very doubtful in my mind whether, either on the passage of the resolution, or by a rule adopted here, the Comptroller would feel himself bound to give stationery to any other persons than members.

Mr. SHERMAN—As the matter will be referred to the Comptroller for him to decide, it is perhaps a subject which can be as well acted upon by resolution as by this rule. I have no objection to strike out the Rule 39, if it is desired.

The question was then put, on the motion to strike out Rule 39, and it was declared carried.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I move to fill the blank occasioned by the striking out of Rule 39 with the words "when a blank is to be filled and different sums or times shall be proposed, the question shall first be taken on the highest sum or longest time," which is Rule 39 of the Assembly, and is of course necessary in disputed cases to get at the exact will of the body.

Mr. FOLGER—That is already parliamentary law, and it raises a point which has occurred to me, whether these rules are to be our sole rules of order or whether we may refer back to what may be called the common law of parliamentary bodies. The rule proposed by the gentleman is already a part of the common law which governs every parliamentary body without written rules and therefore it is unnecessary unless some such rule is to prevail as this that these rules now written are to be the sole rules for our government. I might say that a good part of these rules is the common law of parliamentary bodies, such as "the Speaker shall arise and address the Chair before he shall be allowed to address the Convention." Unless we are to be tied strictly to the rules and not allowed to go abroad in any emergency to consult the common law of parliamentary bodies, there is no necessity for the amendment offered by the gentleman [Mr. T. W. Dwight].

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I am aware that a number of our rules are already a part of parliamentary law; but there is an advantage in having those rules directly before us in the printed manual, so that they can be easily referred to. This rule has already been failed to be acted upon during our proceedings to-day, which shows that the existence of the rule had escaped the attention of members, when the shortest time was put to vote rather than the longest.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Dwight, to insert the rule offered by him as Rule 39, and it was declared adopted.

The Secretary, then proceeded to read Rule 40. Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—Offered the following amendment:

Strike out the words "elected to the Convention" and insert in lieu thereof "present and voting".

The question was put and the amendment was declared to be lost.

Mr. LAPHAM—Offered the following amendment to Rule 40:

After the word "rescinded" in the second line, insert the words "or additional rule, or rules added" so that the rule will read "no standing rule of the Convention shall be suspended, amended or rescinded, or additional rule or rules added."

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer this Mr. Chairman, for a double purpose. In the first place there is an implication, as has been suggested, in the adoption of these rules that they are to be the sole rules for the government of this body. If so it is important that power to add to the rules should be expressly reserved. We have already stricken out the rules regulating the previous question and it will be impossible to adopt that rule in any emergency, upon our construction of this rule, unless we have this right expressly reserved.

The question was then put upon the amendment and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VEEDER—I offer the following amendment: After the word "any," in the third line, insert the words "such suspension, addition," so that as it will require a majority of the members of the house to amend or repeal a rule; it shall also require a majority of the members of the house to enact a new rule.

The question was then put upon the amendment, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. FIELD offered the following amendment to rule 40:

After the words "vote of," in the fourth line, insert the words "two-thirds of the members present or that of."

Mr. FIELD—The object of that is this, in case of a slim house, it will be almost impossible to get a vote of one-half of the whole Convention.

The question being put upon the amendment, it was declared adopted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON offered the following amendment to rule 40: after the word "repeal," in line 3, insert the words, "or addition."

Which was lost.

Mr. ROGERS moved that the Convention adjourn.

Which was lost.

Mr. CONGER—It seems to me, that one day's notice is too short a space of time to throw the Convention back into a reconsideration of the rules and I would move that "one day" be stricken out and "three days" be inserted, in the second line.

The question being put upon the amendment, it was declared lost.

No further objection being made, Rule 40 as amended, was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 41.

No objection being made thereto, it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 42.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following amendment:

Add at the end of rule 42 the words, "And to four copies of each of which each member shall be entitled."

Mr. SILVESTER—This rule provides for the printing of 800 copies of reports, &c., and rule 44 provides for furnishing the members with only one copy of each. The amendment I propose, is that each member shall have four copies.

The question was put upon the amendment and it was declared to be lost.

No further objection being made to rule 42, it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rules 43, 44 and 45, and no objections being made thereto, they were declared to be adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read rule 46.

Mr. McDONALD offered the following amendment:

After the word "Convention" in the fourth line, insert the words "without any compensation for such services, or claim for the same, other than that provided for by chap. 194 of the Laws of 1867."

Mr. McDONALD—I offer that simply to express the opinion of this Convention as to any future claim that might be made for services here, or for anything that might be voted by a future Legislature. Not that I have any idea that the present assistant would make any such claim, but I simply intend to express the feeling of this Convention, and to show that this Convention intends to conduct its proceedings strictly under the law by which it was constituted.

Mr. ROGERS moved that the Convention adjourn.

Which was lost.

The question being then put upon the amendment of Mr. McDonald, it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. FIELD—I move to amend Rule 46, by striking out the words "assistant sergeant-at-arms" and insert the word "Librarian." I make this motion from the fact that the post office having been moved into the library, the librarian can discharge these duties with little inconvenience.

The question being put on the amendment, it was declared to be lost.

There being no further objection to Rule 46, it was declared adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN—One portion of the report of the Committee on Rules has been passed over without action; it is from the 19th to the 22nd subdivision of the 15th Rule, providing for the appointment of four standing Committees. It was accidentally omitted in the printing but it will be found in document No. 2.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the 19th, 20th, 21st and 22nd subdivision of Rule 15.

Mr. HALE moved to postpone the consideration of this portion of the report, until the Convention shall have acted upon the report of the Committee of sixteen.

Which was carried.

Mr. HOMER A. NELSON, a delegate, appeared in the Convention, was administered the Constitutional oath of office by the President, and took his seat.

On motion of Mr. VAN CAMPEN the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, June 13, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. ALDEN.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary.

Mr. MORRIS—I may not have heard correctly, but it seems to me that the secretary, in reading the correction of Rule 36, mentioned that the words "one-fifth" should be expunged and the number "fifteen" inserted instead. My understanding of the amendment was, that the word "fifty" should appear instead of "one-fifth."

The PRESIDENT—The Clerk has it as stated.

Mr. A. LAWRENCE—In the journal as just read one or two amendments appear as having been offered by Mr. A. Lawrence. They were offered by Mr. M. H. Lawrence. There was a similar error yesterday—the amendment appeared as having been offered by Mr. A. Lawrence instead of Mr. M. H. Lawrence. I merely call the attention of the Secretary to it.

Mr. PRESIDENT—It was an error of the Secretary in regard to the names. The journal will be corrected in that respect, there being no objection.

Mr. AXTELL—I rise to a question of privilege. I find in the report of the debate of yesterday, published in the Argus and Journal of this city, the following statement—reporting the remarks I made upon the debate of the previous question.

The PRESIDENT—The question now pending is one of the correction of the Journal.

Mr. BICKFORD—As I understood the reading of the journal it is not stated that Rule 45 had been adopted.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is informed it is so stated.

There being no further correction of the journal, it was declared approved.

Mr. AXTELL—I am made to say in the debate of yesterday, in the report of the Argus, "I know that the British House of Commons and Parliament have been cited as a body in which the previous question is used for the suppression of debate, but the British House of Commons is not a model so far as the mode of conducting its debates is concerned." What I did say was this, "I know that the House of Commons of the British Parliament has been cited as a body in which the previous question is not used for the suppression of debate, but the British House of Commons is not a model so far as the mode of suppressing debate is concerned."

The PRESIDENT—The chair does not regard the question raised, to be a question of privilege.

Mr. ALVORD—I beg leave to rise to a question of privilege. I sir, believe, so far as regards mere questions of privilege, they should be very seldom, if ever used, but in this case it is a question I desire to right myself upon, where I committed unintentionally a wrong. Yesterday in the course of debate, without any very great choice of language, I used the words, in reference to my friend from Oneida [Mr. Sherman], "I am not aware that the statement last made by the gentleman is true," I should have used the words "is correct." I so intended to be understood: I did not intend to impute to the gentleman from Oneida any departure from the truth in the ordinary acceptance of the term. I hope the gentleman will receive this apology.

Mr. SHERMAN—I did not suppose the gentleman from Onondaga meant anything of the kind; and, therefore, I took no notice of it at the time. I am much obliged to him for his correction.

Mr. HARRIS—I move that the Convention take from the table the report of the committee of sixteen.

Mr. SHERMAN—There is a little item in the report of the Committee on Rules which has not yet been acted upon. I trust that will be disposed of first. It is really the proper business in order, being the unfinished business of the Committee on Rules of yesterday.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understood the motion was to postpone until the report of the committee of sixteen should be acted upon.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Harris to take up the report of the committee of sixteen, and it was declared to be carried.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the report (as already printed.)

Mr. FIELD—I rise to a question of privilege. I wish to inquire whether rule 33 is enforced. I think there are several persons here, not privileged to the floor under this rule.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair enjoins on the proper officer to enforce the rule.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read paragraph 1.

No amendment being offered, the Secretary proceeded to read paragraph 2.

Mr. RATHBUN—I offer the following amendment: The object is to consolidate Nos. 2 and 3, and refer the whole to one Committee.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the amendment as follows: "strike out subdivision 3, and insert at the end of subdivision 2 the words "and on the powers and duties thereof, except as to matters otherwise referred."

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee of sixteen, that these two propositions contained matters enough for the labors of two committees, one on the constitution of the Legislature and the other on its powers and duties.

Mr. RATHBUN—I find, sir, in the 7th section an additional provision for committees embracing a portion of the powers of the Legislature, and which affords very large scope for a committee upon that branch of the case. This subject is embraced in these two subdivisions. One is simply upon the Legislature, embracing its organization and the number, apportionment, election, tenure of office and the compensation of its members. This subdivision would require but very little consideration, I apprehend. And then another subdivision is upon the powers and duties of the Legislature, except as otherwise referred, and that is to be directed to other committees. Now, sir, it looks to me very much as if there were hardly subjects enough or supposed to be hardly enough within the Constitution that is to be reviewed and revised, to apportion it in such a manner as to afford places for all the gentlemen of the Convention upon Committees. I believe in making those gentlemen who are on these Committees work, I believe in giving to all of these Committees who are appointed something to do—and in revising a subject referred to it, it will be readily perceived that the entire subject should be passed upon by one committee, so as to make it consistent with itself; and when it comes before this body it comes as a system in itself, so far as that committee is concerned. The committee under the 7th sub-division will be a committee that has very much to do with the powers and duties of the Legislature, and very much beyond what is called for to be done under these two sub-divisions here. I, therefore, ask that that amendment be considered, and I ask the gentlemen of the Convention to see whether there is anything here that requires a division of such a subject and the reference of it to two independent committees. Now, sir, I hope there is no gentleman here that is desirous of being upon a committee unless he finds it is necessary to be placed there with a view to render service that will be of value to this Convention. I have no desire myself to occupy a place upon a committee of any kind and I should be very glad to have this work so condensed as to give to gentlemen who are ambitious for places of that kind, all the work they want to do, provided they will do it expeditiously, and do it as it ought to be done.

Mr. HALE—I wish simply to say that I think the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] is very much mistaken in his idea that there is nothing for Committee No. 2 to do. Some very important questions will come before that committee as proposed to be constituted by the committee of sixteen—some questions I think quite as weighty, and which will require quite as much attention and care as any that will come before any committee. The question is of the organization, the number, apportionment, election, tenure of office, and compensation of its members. If the gentleman from Cayuga is desirous of being put upon a committee where there will be nothing to do, I will recommend him to select some other committee than No. 2 on this list.

The question was then put upon the amendment, and it was declared to be lost.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the 3d paragraph.

There being no amendment offered the SECRETARY proceeded to read the 4th paragraph.

Mr. TAPPEN—I have the honor to offer the following as a substitute for paragraph 4: strike out the fourth sub-division of the report, and insert in lieu thereof the words: "On the elective franchise and the qualifications to vote and hold office." With some regard to the landmarks of the past, and guided as I am by the proceedings of the Convention of 1846 on a subject of this kind, I find by referring to their former proceeding that they used that exact language. It seems to me it is the proper phraseology to be embodied in a report, of this character, fixing the powers and the mode of business of this house. The words "right of suffrage" have no limitation and no definite or fixed meaning, because the right of suffrage is without restriction. It is an inalienable and inborn right, to be possessed by all, without regard to race, age, sex or color, while the elective franchise is a qualification recognized by the people in their sovereign capacity, and conferred by their bodies in convention. I think this is the proper language to be used in connection with this subject at this time.

The question being put upon the amendment, it was declared to be lost.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the 5th paragraph.

No amendment being offered, the Secretary proceeded to read the 6th paragraph.

Mr. TUCKER offered the following amendment, "strike out the words Secretary of State, Comptroller, Treasurer, Attorney-General and State Engineer and Surveyor," and insert in lieu thereof the words "State officers and the heads of State departments."

Mr. FOLGER—I would suggest to the honorable gentleman from New York that his amendment in including the words "State officers" comprehends too much, as it would interfere, it seems to me, with the duties of the committee on judiciary, which will consider the Court of Appeals, who are State officers, and the Committee on State Prisons, which will consider the duties of the Inspectors of State Prisons, who are also State officers, and also the Canal Commissioners, who are State officers, so that this one committee would pretty nearly engross all the committees proposed by this report.

Mr. TUCKER—With the permission of the Convention then, I would change my amendment so as to read "State officers and heads of State executive departments."

Mr. WEED—I would suggest to the gentleman that he add at the end, "except as otherwise herein referred," which will except these special references suggested by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger.]

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the amendment as follows:—

"On the State officers and heads of State executive departments, except as otherwise herein referred."

Mr. POND—I would inquire what difference it will make in this subdivision from what it now reads. If it is merely a question to strike out specifications and introduce generalities, I should prefer to leave it as it is now.

Mr. TUCKER—I will state that there are other State departments, most of which have been erected since the present Constitution came into effect in 1847—such as the Board of Public Instruction and Banking. I suppose it would be proper that this committee should have the consideration of these special departments.

Mr. HARRIS—A little more attention on the part of gentleman from New York, would have shown him that all these departments are provided for in this Committee. The Committee now under consideration provides for the five officers generally known as the State officers. Then the committee on the management and superintendence of the canals will cover the case of the Canal Commissioners. The Committee on State Prisons will cover the State Prison Inspectors. The Committee on Banking and Insurance will cover the Commissioners of those departments, and the Committee on Education will cover the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and so all the officers that are recognized as State officers, whether they have been created since the Constitution of 1846 was adopted, or after, are provided for in these committees, but they are distributed among the several committees according to their subjects.

Mr. TUCKER—After the explanation of the Chairman of the Committee, [Mr. Harris], and with the understanding that the Committee No. 13 will include in its labors the consideration of the appointment or election of the heads of the banking and insurance department, I will withdraw my amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read paragraphs 7 and 8.

No amendment being offered, the Secretary proceeded to read paragraph 9.

Mr. HATCH—I offer the following amendment: to insert after the word "management," in the second line, the word "improvement." My object in doing that, is to refer the duties of the improvement of the canals to Committee No. 10. It seems to me that is the proper place for it, and when that committee No. 10 is under consideration I shall move then an amendment so that it will read "on the superintendence and management, and improvement of the canals."

Mr. BELL—In examining this subdivision, I find it includes a very large amount of labor for a single committee. I think the progress of this Convention will be very much facilitated, and the work we have in hand will be sooner completed, if we should divide the labor as far as it can be done, so as to preserve distinct and independent subjects, and with that view I propose to divide the subdivision No. 9 as follows:

"No. 9—On the finances of the State so far as the same relate to the Canals, the Public Debt and the Trust Fund." My observation and experience are that the subject of canals is a very large one, and that the finances of the canals, the expenditures and revenues will occupy the attention and the time of the best minds in our Convention, and they ought not, therefore, to be coupled with expenditures and other revenues, including taxation. Then I would provide for another committee which may be called No. 10, if you please, "on taxation, the revenues and expenditures of the State other than canals, and salt springs, and the restrictions on the powers of the Legislature in respect thereto."

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would suggest to the gentleman whether that had not better be offered as a separate proposition. The Chair thinks it is hardly germane to the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch].

Mr. BELL—I will then, if the Chair is of that opinion, withdraw it now until the other proposition is disposed of.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I move to amend by striking out a portion of the sixth subdivision, so it will read: "On canals, their care and management."

Mr. HATCH—Mr. President, is that amendment germane to my amendment?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BELL—It occurs to me that the last amendment is provided for in the next subdivision, No. 10, and I would call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Hitchman], to that subdivision.

Mr. HITCHMAN—It seems, Mr. Chairman, that I have overlooked the matter contained in the 10th sub-division, and therefore, with the permission of the Convention, I will ask to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FOLGER offered the following amendment: "Strike out all of sub-division 9 relating to the canals, and strike out No. 10, and insert in place of No. 10, as follows: '10. On canals.'"

Mr. FOLGER—It seems to me, from reading this report, there should be but a single committee upon the subject of canals of the State, which committee should have charge, not only of the question of superintendence, management and improvement of the canals, but also the question of the finances as growing out of that subject; which, of course, would include the expenditures upon it, and the means of raising money for that expenditure, and which would include the revenue from them, and the proper method of distributing or disposing of that revenue for the general benefit of this State, if the revenue was in excess of the expenditure. Such, it seems to me, has been the uniform course, not only of our Constitution, but of our legislation, that the canals include everything in relation to them, not only their management, but the care of them, the superintendence and improvement, and everything that may grow out of the idea of construction, and also all which may grow out of the idea of finances relating to them, either by revenue or expenditure upon them. The general subject of the finances of the State is, it seems to me, a subject in itself. What should be the basis of taxation? what should be the object of taxation? and in what manner, and to what ends should the general revenue derived by the State be directed? how it should be disposed of, and where it should be paid. It appears to me that the subject of the canals, as important a subject as the citizens of this State can contemplate or be concerned in, should stand simple and alone, not only in their management, but in everything which may naturally grow out of them, and the subject of finances, in which is included in my mind the taxation, the amount of it, the proper object of taxation, and the proper subject of taxation, should be referred to one committee to deal with that question alone, to be denominated "a Committee on the finances of the State," as would be the balance of section 9, if these phrases in relation to the canals had been stricken out, and that the other should be a Committee upon canals, and everything which may naturally ramify from the general subject of canals.

Mr. BELL—So far as I have been able to understand the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], his views will be expressed with tolerable clearness by the amendments I had the honor to offer, with this exception: He seems to contemplate that the whole subject of canals, their revenues and expenditures, should be referred to the same committee. It had occurred to me that a more proper distribution of the labors included therein would be a division of that subject, and referring it to two distinct committees, one on the management, care and superintendence of the canals, which is a very great subject in itself—the other, upon the revenues arising from the canals, embracing everything that relates to them—the tolls and the expenditures. It has been wisely thought that the management and the revenues arising from the canals should be separate, and should be considered distinctly by separated committees. They are independent and distinct propositions. I would call for the reading of my amendments that the gentleman may see their meaning.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment should be germane to that offered by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], and the motion to amend overrides that of the motion to strike out, and the Convention, by disposing of the amendment of the gentleman from Erie, would put itself in a proper position to receive the motion from the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]. The Chair would further suggest that it hardly thinks the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Erie.

Mr. HATCH—It seems to me, sir, that the care, management and improvement of these canals are subjects that are necessarily connected. The question of the enlargement of the Erie canal is to be a great question before this Convention, and another question is whether there is moral ability enough in the administration of this State to take care of the canals. Every one knows that the Western commerce sustains the Erie canal—that the local traffic of this State, and the local traffic of the Erie canal and the lateral canals, are not sufficient even to sustain and make the repairs upon all these canals. The question is to come before this Convention—how this western commerce is to be preserved. We cannot retain that commerce except we have larger and cheaper facilities. And then again, sir, if we do not adopt some measure to save our canal system from the extravagance and corruption which has been in it, instead of taking one-third of the revenues of the Erie Canal to sustain itself and the lateral canals, in the end they will take the whole revenues of the Erie Canal. I will only add that our whole canal system is threatened from without by new and rival routes and improved railway transportation. It is threatened from within by extravagance and corruption in its management. Therefore, sir, the question of the management and the care of the canals is necessarily connected with the improvement of the canals, and these two subjects belong to one committee. I hope the Convention will adopt my motion to insert "improvement" for the purposes that I have mentioned.

Mr. FIELD—Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege, and under that I desire to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. FIELD—It is in reference to the enforcing of rule 33, and the admission of privileged persons to the floor. I offer the resolution to admit a gentleman to the floor of the Convention this day.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair hopes that the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Field], will not be too strenuous in reference to the rule until the rules have been printed.

The Secretary read the resolution of Mr. Field, as follows:

Resolved, That the privileges of the floor be extended to the Hon. Beman Brockway, Canal Appraiser, for this day.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Field and it was declared adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN—I rise to a point of order in reference to the resolution. The point is, that the rule provides how different persons may be admitted to the privileges of the floor and that they cannot be admitted otherwise, without a suspension or alteration of the rules. They cannot, therefore, be admitted by special resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken.

The President then announced the pending question to be the amendment offered by Mr. Hatch to the 9th paragraph of the report of the Committee of Sixteen.

Mr. BELL—Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], that his amendment is not properly to be considered with the sub-division under consideration. Is it not germane to sub-division No. 10?

Mr. HATCH—I propose, when we come to sub-division 10, to move to insert the word "improvement."

Mr. BELL—And also in sub-division 9?

Mr. HATCH—In subdivision 9, to make it complete, and in subdivision 10.

Mr. BELL—I misunderstood the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch].

Mr. HATCH—I will read the two paragraphs as they will read as amended: "On the finances of the State, the canals, except their care, management and improvement, the public debt, revenues, expenditures and taxation, and restrictions on the powers of the Legislature in respect thereto." That is number 9. Then number 10 will read thus: "On the superintendence, management and improvement of the canals, and the proper officers to be charged therewith, and the mode of their election or appointment."

Mr. BELL—I would ask the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], if he will not withdraw his amendment until the amendment I offered is disposed of. In case my amendment meets with the approbation of the Convention his would be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. HATCH—In the view which I take of it, it is important that my amendment should be considered, as it simplifies the whole question.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], will not prevail. This subject was a matter of very considerable deliberation on the part of the Committee of Sixteen. It was the most difficult question that the committee had to consider—the question as to where the subject of the enlargement of the canals should go. It was finally determined by that committee, and I think I may say unanimously, that this question of the enlargement of the canal was rather a question of finance, and that the whole question as to the finances of the State, including the revenues from the canals, and the provision that might be made for the enlargement of the canal, should go to a single committee. That was the deliberate conviction of the Committee of Sixteen, and I hope that their report may be sustained.

Mr. LEE—I have always been accustomed to defer very greatly to the opinion of the eminent chairman of the Committee of Sixteen, and especially would I defer, sustained as he is by all his colleagues; yet, sir, it is not strange, viewing this subject from different standpoints of view, that we should differ in opinion as to the propriety of the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch]. I cannot see, myself, in what way the amendment, if adopted, is to prejudice this question, and it does seem to me, sir, however it may be considered by the committee having in charge the question of finances, it would be an entirely proper inquiry, and appropriate and very desirable that the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], should be sustained by this Convention.

Mr. FULLER—I would like to enquire if the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], is adopted, it would preclude the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger.]

The PRESIDENT—A further amendment may be offered.

Mr. FULLER—That amendment would strike out the amendment now proposed to be inserted.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules that the paragraph may be perfected as the Convention chooses, and then stricken out entirely, the effort being first to perfect it.

Mr. FULLER—I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch,] will prevail. With all due deference to the chairman of the Committee of Sixteen, it seems to me that the proposition in their report is to send the question of the enlargement of the canals away from home. It is not merely a question of finance. It is the enlargement and improvement of the canals, although the subject of finance is involved in the question. But there are other great interests of the State involved in it also. It is the most important subject I apprehend to come up before this body. It is one that entitles it to a separate committee who may consider it in all its bearings, in all its aspects, in its financial aspects among others, and not in that aspect exclusively. I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], and if that amendment is adopted, I then hope and trust that the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], will be brought forward and that it will be adopted and supersede the whole. I think the subject of the enlargement of the canals is one which is entitled to a separate committee by itself.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope the amendment will not prevail. I think the arrangement made by the Committee of Sixteen in this division in regard to the canals is altogether proper and judicious. The Committee on Finance will be expected to present to this Convention recommendations for the action of the Convention in respect to the finances of the State, with regard to the debt of the State, its expenditures, and, in fact, in reference to every aspect of the question. I would like to enquire how the Committee could be expected to make a recommendation which would be of value, unless they had within their purview all the subjects referring to the finances of the State? It is well known that the canal interest is a very large interest, and the question before the Convention of the improvement and enlargement of the canals is an important financial question. How could the Committee on Finance give proper and comprehensive recommendations in regard to the expenditures and taxation of the State, without they had in their purview the whole financial interests of the State? It seems to me, therefore, that the division made by the committee could not be improved. I shall be compelled to vote against this amendment, and all others that are made to this section.

Mr. DUGANNE—As I regard this in the light somewhat of a test question, and one which will probably foreshadow the action of this Convention upon very important interests of the State, I call for the ayes and noes upon the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch.]

A sufficient number seconding the call for the ayes and noes they were ordered.

Mr. TILDEN—It was the judgment of the Committee that whoever should be charged with the duty of considering what should be done with respect to the improvement of the Erie canal, would find all consideration of that subject futile, unless there could be considered also where the ways and means were to be obtained with which that enlargement was to be made. Equally futile would it be to attempt to regulate by Constitutional provision the finances of the State, if that subject that includes the chief part of its revenues, and the chief part of its expenditures, is to be excluded from the consideration of that Committee. There is a unity on this subject, wholly incapable of disavowance, without confusion and chaos in all your action upon the entire question. Sir, I apprehend that the effort to make any division of this subject may arise from failing to consider how different is our situation and method of action on the subject from that of the Legislature. The Legislature attempts to determine with some degree of detail what particular improvements shall be made in respect to the public works. It, therefore, has an organization adapted to that purpose. This Convention in framing the fundamental law of the State, undertakes to do nothing of that kind. It will simply make a provision in the Constitution whereby these objects can be carried out. It will make financial provisions applicable to this subject matter. The difference in its duty prescribes a difference in the mode of reference and consideration. Why, sir, how is it possible to separate income and expenditure—to separate the subject of the revenues of the State and its means of applying them to this purpose? I confess it seems to me that the Convention will involve itself in inextricable and endless confusion, unless the entire subject of the ways and means, and the subjects to which those ways and means are to be applied, are united in the consideration of one committee, and treated as one entire and indivisible subject. If, sir, I were to look back through the constitutional action and legislative action of the last twenty years at our municipalities, and inquire what it is that has made them, as is the case in the city of New York, instead of being a government, simply an organized chaos, if I may use such an expression, I should say it is because often in our Legislature we have attempted to dis sever the disbursing power from the power which provides the ways and means. It is fundamental in all human powers, that with the power which provides the ways and means should exist the power which makes the expenditures. Sir, you cannot organize the family on any other basis. You cannot organize any of these great corporate bodies that act so important a part in our public affairs on any other basis; and the attempt to organize a government on that basis, to make those officers independent powers in the State will result in what the people of this State now experience—a confusion of expenditure, and a confusion and redundancy of taxation. Sir, there must be unity, and there must be supremacy on the part of those who provide the ways and means, and those who expend them. This subject is intrinsically and necessarily financial. I do not think, therefore, that it is possible to make any such dis severance without the greatest possible mischief in the deliberations of this Convention.

Mr. FOLGER—With deference to the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] who has just taken his seat, I conceive that his argument is based upon three fallacies. In the first place, one would suppose, from his remarks, that this was a body which was dealing with details instead of general principles. What we have to do is to lay foundations, and not to build superstructures. We deal with general principles. What shall be, for instance, the general method in which the taxation of this State shall be managed? To what general objects shall it be applied and from what general sources shall it be derived? That is a general principle upon which the Committee on Finance are to use their powers, deliberate and report their results. So with the Committee on Canals. They are to inquire into the whole vast subject of the canal system of this State. They are to discover and report its revenues, disclose its expenditures, and show the necessities, not only the necessities of this State, but the necessities of the far West, which is dependent, to some extent, upon this State for commercial facilities. These two committees are to present to this body the results of these general inquiries, and it is for this body to make an adjustment and arrangement of the whole subject, so that the report of one committee may be made to concur with the report of the other committee. If the Convention shall decide upon a system of enlargement and improvement, they may look to the report of the Finance Committee to get light upon the question of where the means are coming from to make the enlargement, if means are needed outside of the canal revenues, which I think will be found to be doubtful. So that we are the arbiters and judges between the two committees. We are to be called upon to settle between conflicting reports, if they are to be conflicting, in reference to the question of finance and the taxation of the State, and the need of increased canal facilities. Thus, I say, that upon the subject of the canal system and the revenues to be derived from the canals and the expenditures to be made for it, the argument of the gentleman includes two fallacies. One is, that the Convention is to settle details of finance and the other is, that the Convention is to adopt whatever the committees may report, without attempting to adjust differences in the reports. Another fallacy is, that the report of the Committee of Sixteen already provides for what the gentleman says, cannot be done—that is, separating a general subject. What is the subject of the care and management of the canals, but an inquiry of the cost and management—an inquiry as to what means are at the disposition of the Legislature, or to be derived by taxation for their care and management. It is an inquiry which involves the ascertaining of what are those means, what the canals yield, what are the necessities for their improvement, how much justice and good faith, to the people of this State and to the people of other States, require that we should raise by direct taxation, if you choose to use that word. And another inquiry after that, is to ascertain how great shall be the body of officers—how numerous the subordinate officials who shall be scattered along the canal to manage it. Further than that, is the enquiry in reference to the comparative costs of different systems of management—whether it shall be done by the contract system or whether it shall be done under the superintendent system, or whether we shall have at the Capital one supreme head over the canals who shall be responsible for the conduct of every subordinate upon it and accountable for all detail. If the idea of the gentleman be correct that any question involving the raising of money and its expenditure, even upon the canals, cannot be separated from the idea of finances and taxation, then the report of the Committee is faulty in that respect. Subdivision No. 10 should come out entirely, for every body knows, who is at all familiar with the legislation of this State upon the subject of the canals, that the care and management of them is emphatically a question of the expenditure of money; a question of finance; a question of taxation; a question of revenue. When you have referred to one Committee, No. 10; the question of the superintendence and management of the canals, you have immediately put in their charge a subject which will require them to report to this Convention not only what shall be the system of management and who shall have the care and management of the canals, but to consider and report in connection therewith from whence shall come the means for that care and management; whether from the revenues of the canal itself or from the general fund of the State. So that I say, the argument of the gentleman, and I say it with great respect, is built upon three fallacies, as I have already stated, and not the least is that the subject of the canals can be considered without also considering the questions of finance and taxation. The first inquiry is, what do they yield? Do they yield a surplus? If so, what shall be done with that surplus? If they do not yield a surplus, then is the necessity for their maintenance or enlargement so paramount and preponderating as to call upon this State to direct that its Legislature shall provide means for the enlargement, by taxation or otherwise? How shall that debt be created? How shall that money be raised? When shall the debt created be paid, &c., &c? All these details grow immediately out of the first step toward a consideration of this subject of the canals; and any committee which is charged with the consideration of the question of their care and management (without the "improvement," as suggested by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch]—striking out even the word improvement), as I have endeavored to show, and I think I have shown will be required to make financial consideration, and investigation into the finances of this State and its resources.

Mr. MURPHY—The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] in stating that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] has fallen into fallacies, appears to me has fallen into one great error himself. He argues his case upon the idea that the question of the enlargement of the canals can be considered by the committee now under consideration. Now, sir, I suppose it to be perfectly competent for the committee that shall be appointed under this resolution to consider that question in all its bearings upon the interests of the people of this State, otherwise than as a financial question. I hope if this paragraph shall be adopted, the committee will be so constituted that the great interests which have been referred to by him and by other gentlemen, will be considered by this committee as well as the financial question involved. Now, I differ from the honorable gentleman materially, in regard to the province of the second committee proposed here and which we must consider. The province of that committee is to consider the management and care of the canals. It has reference particularly to the administration of the canals—whether, as he himself has said, we shall continue the contract system, or some other system—whether it shall be managed by elected officers or appointed officers, or how otherwise. These are the questions which are now agitating the public mind, and which are the subject of legislative consideration, and they demand from this body special attention independent of the question of enlargement, or the question of the finances of the canals. True it is, that there can be no administration of the canals without an expenditure of money. The keeping of them in repair will necessarily require the expenditure of money; but that is only incidental—natural. We all understand that the canals cannot be carried on without appropriations—without means, and that these appropriations and means are for the most part ascertainable from year to year almost with mathematical precision, and that the Committee on Finance can consider the great question committed to them without being affected by this question as to what the care and management of the canals may cost. Now, if we pursue the course proposed in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], we may have two committees reporting, one for a large expenditure for the canals, and another for restricted provisions in regard to the means for the expenditures. I hope this Convention will see the necessity of leaving this Committee on Finance and the revenues and expenditures of the State, possessed of the elements that are necessary for them to give a full and satisfactory report, and that we will confine the other committee simply to a consideration of the administration and care of the canals.

Mr. CONGER—This question presents itself to the Convention at this time, under the guise of a mere parliamentary question, and as such it would hardly be worth the time that it consumed in its discussion, were it not that in point of fact it revives an old subject. We are called upon, Mr. President, principally, to attend to the matter of the revision of the Constitution, and in that purview only as far as the subject of the canals is specifically alluded to in the Constitution. I would desire to draw your attention to this consideration, that in the Constitution, as amended at the session of the Legislature in which I had the honor of holding a seat in the upper House (following up the first constitutional plan for the enlargement of the canals, since the adoption of the Constitution of 1846, which I had the honor to present), the question of the enlargement, is a simple finality. But it does not come within the scope and meaning of those who seek now to make some other and further enlargement of the canals. If, sir, the proposition related, not only to the same subject-matter, but to the same result, I would say it would be unwise at this time, and would object to a new distribution of the committees unless the Committee of Sixteen, who have recommended such committees, should fail to satisfy us of the wisdom of their plan. But, Mr. President, you perceive the parliamentary difficulty as well as other gentlemen of this body. You know perfectly well that if the recommendation of the Committee of Sixteen is departed from, it is a virtual instruction to you that in constituting the other committee, which is thus to have special charge of the subject of enlargement, you are to give to that committee a preponderance of the friends of the measure over those who oppose it. You would be commissioned and called upon to do that work now in advance of all inquiries upon the subject, and you could not, it seems to me, pursue the same liberal and enlightened course with which you started when you regarded all these subjects as fresh subjects for development, and constituted your Committee of Sixteen as though there were no other members of this Convention than those who represented the State at large, and all its interests at large. I cannot think that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] was guilty of any fallacy in stating that the subject of the enlargement of the canals, or to use the milder phrase given to it by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], their "improvement" cannot at all be dis severed from the finances of the State, because that improvement or that enlargement can only be effected by a large and continuous expenditure of money for several years to come, so that if you must look now into the merits of this question which I would prefer to have postponed to a future day, you cannot fail to take the question of fresh expenditure up in connection with our existing debt, an embarrassment which prevails not only over the State, but in every town and county, and with every individual in the State. We are told that the debt of the State is limited by a sum of perhaps fifty millions of dollars. We know that the aggregate of the debts of towns and counties would be quoted at about four times that sum. We know that our share of the national debt, if distributed over the State of New York, under the Constitution, in proportion to the population, would amount to several hundred millions of dollars, and if you come to consider the relation which the City of New York bears, as the financial centre of the Union to this subject, you cannot fail to believe that a much larger proportion of the National indebtedness would fall on our citizens as it must fall upon the capital represented in that city. Now, the simple fact is this, that in departing from the wise rule we have proposed to be established of appointing committees of inquiry, we are called upon to initiate a system, by which, before the exact sum of that indebtedness which belongs to the State and its people is counted up by your Finance Committee, you are disregarding all your own convictions and personal impressions to move forward in the matter of contracting a fresh debt as a measure specifically meeting at this time your approbation. If, when the report of the Finance Committee should come in, it should seem practicable to give some relief to the measure, then I would say we could act intelligently and well upon it. But before we know anything of the subject, to seem to favor an enterprise of such high magnitude as this, is a departure from the wisdom, and the moderation of our counsels which has heretofore prevailed. But practically, Mr. President, supposing this measure passes. Suppose it is adopted by the Convention,—are we relieved from any further parliamentary difficulties? Instead of having a report from one committee on this comprehensive subject, which might be a majority and minority report, we would be embarrassed by reports of two committees, each perchance containing majority and minority views, and instead of any unity of purpose to be obtained by such a course, we are to be met at the threshold of this discussion by divided counsels. I trust the time has not yet come that any such unpleasant task would be forced upon the President of this Convention by the adoption of a measure which, however it may be discussed, has no other practical parliamentary meaning than this: That this body will instruct the President to give a committee to this special subject, for the enlargement of the canal, more favorable to it than to those opposed to the measure. That is the great point upon which the question now before this body rests, that it is under a great pressure and an anticipation in point of time, in point of advice and a full examination of the subject, under pretence of revising an article of the Constitution, (which, so far as the enlargement is concerned, is declared on the face of it to be a finality,) the inauguration of a new movement by which that enlargement shall be further prosecuted, and a fresh expense entailed upon the people.

Mr. HATCH—I only desire to say in reply to gentlemen that they have taken a very erroneous view of the amendment that I have proposed. It really has not the importance they have attached to it. If gentlemen are disposed to force this on at this time as a test question in relation to the matter of the canals, it is no fault of mine. The amendment that I proposed is merely as to the care, management and improvement of the canals. It is a very simple proposition.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I believe, in the discussion of this question so far, it has been admitted by all that the arrangement made by the Committee of Sixteen is the best, under the circumstances, that could be presented to the Convention for its adoption. Now, the question here is not whether the Committee provided for by paragraph number 10 may not be so amended as to include the subject matter of the canals as well as their care and management, but the question which this Convention is to decide is, to which it should be referred as the most appropriate committee. Sir, I should as soon think of calling upon a man to construct for me an expensive house, or make other improvements without knowing whether I had the money in my pocket or not to pay him, as to separate the question of the finances of this State from the canals and their improvement or enlargement. Now, if gentlemen wish to shorten the session of this Convention, if they wish to proceed to business, at once, and to accomplish something, refer this subject to the committee as reported by the Committee of Sixteen, and obtain from them an intelligent report upon the whole subject, and act upon it. If we are to have two committees on this subject, if they are to come in here, it may be with conflicting reports, and we are to sit here during the dog days and discuss that, that is one thing. If not, refer it to a single committee, unprejudiced, unbiased, uncommitted on this subject, and let us have a report from that committee on all these details, and we can act intelligently. I would call the attention of the Convention to a provision of the rules which is meant to cover this very subject. They will find that the committee recommend a committee of sixteen on the subject of finance; while the committee provided for by paragraph No. 10, is to consist of seven members. The object was to have the committee represent all interests, and be large enough to examine the whole subject in gross and in detail, and give to this Convention an intelligent and proper report of their conclusions. I hope the Convention will adopt the recommendation of the committee of sixteen.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Hatch, and it was lost by the following vote:

Ayes.—Messrs. Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Atwell, Baker, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, Case, Chertree, Clinton, Corbett, Curtiss, C. C. Dwight, Ely, Farnum, Field, Folger, Fowler, Frank, Fuller, Gould, Hadley, Hand, Hatch, Huntington, Lee, Masten, McDonald, Merrill, C. E. Parker, Potter, Prosser, Reynolds, Rogers, Root, Silvester, Sherman, M. I. Townsend, Van Campen, Verplanck, Weed, Young.—42.

Noes.—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Ballard, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Cassidy, Champlain, Chesebro, Church, Colahan, Comstock, Conger, Cooke, Daly, Develin, Duganne, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Endress, Ferry, Flagler, Francis, Garvin, Gerry, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hale, Hammond, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hitchcock, Hitchman, Houston, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kernan, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, Larremore, Law, A. Lawrence, A. R. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Living-ton, Loew, Lowrey, Ludington, Mattice, Merritt, Merwin, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. J. Parker, Pond, President, Prindle, Rathbun, Robertson, Roy, A. D. Russell, Schell, Schumaker, Seaver, Seymour, Sheldon, Smith, Spencer, Stratton, Strong, Tappen, Tilden, S. Townsend, Tucker, Van Cott, Veeder, Wakeman, Wales, Wickham, Williams—92.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Bell, as follows:

No. 9. On the finances of the State, so far as the same shall relate to canals, the public debt and the trust fund.

Mr. BELL—My object was, not to bring on the discussion which has taken place upon this subject, but it was simply to divide and arrange for the purpose of facilitating the purposes of this Convention. On looking at subdivision No. 9, I find it contains several distinct propositions, and however they may fail to harmonize in the end, they are subjects of distinct reports, and I think pertinent to be acted upon by this Convention, and by Committees of this Convention. It is the province of the Convention to harmonize and consider these reports, should they be discordant, which they may not be necessarily. The great evil, I think in our State government, has been that we have looked at things too much in confusion; for instance, extreme Canal men have looked at the revenues of the canal and endeavored so to arrange legislation as to appropriate the entire amount to the enlargement, superintendence, care, or to the damages of the canal. The object I have in view, is to ascertain the capabilities of these canals and their necessary care and superintendence, and of course any suggestion which may be made upon their improvement and enlargement, and to separate that entirely from the question of the finances of the State; and when the report of that Committee shall have come in and have been considered, we can, it seems to me, compare it with the finances to see whether we will have sufficient revenue, after supporting the government, after answering the proper objects of the State, to undertake that work. The other subdivision I propose, is to divorce it entirely from the management of the canal and to ascertain the revenues of the canal and to see if we can in some way carry on these great public works without a resort to so large an amount of taxation. It will be seen by the statistics we have before us, notwithstanding we have derived large amounts from the canals for the general fund, yet we have been obliged to levy very large amounts by taxation to sustain these canals; and I think, if I remember right, within the last twenty years, nearly $14,000,000, have been expended upon the canals from direct taxation. I hope this division will be made, not because I would here indicate my purpose to enlarge the canals or not to enlarge the canals, but these amendments are simply with reference to the proper division of the labors of this Convention. My design is to add another subdivision called No. 10, and still retain the present No. 10, as No. 11, as reported from the Committee of Sixteen.

The question being put upon the amendment of Mr. Bell, it was declared to be lost.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the second amendment offered by Mr. Bell:

"No. 10. On taxation, the revenues and expenditures of the State, other than canals and salt springs, and restrictions on the power of the Legislature in respect thereto."

The question being put upon the amendment, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following amendment to the 9th sub-division:

To insert in the first line after the word "finances" the words "and property," and after the word "State" to insert "included."

The question being put upon the amendment, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. FOLGER—Is my amendment now in order?

The PRESIDENT—No further amendment being offered, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], is now in order.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

"To strike out subdivision 9, relating to the canals, and also to strike out subdivision 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following: '10. On canals.'"

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not understand that No. 10 has yet been reached.

Mr. FOLGER—Of course not sir, but in order to make my amendment intelligible, it was necessary to connect both of these sections; but a division can be had upon the question and I call for a division that the question may be taken first on striking out No. 9.

Mr. WEED—I wish to say a word upon this question. I deem it different from the one just passed upon by the Convention by the ayes and noes. This, in the shape it is offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], cannot be construed to embarrass in any way the President of this Convention in the appointment of the committee upon this subject. It makes Committees No. 9 and No. 10 conform to the spirit of the other committees, as laid down by the Committee of Sixteen. If the Convention will notice, every other financial subject and every other subject of State expenditure is referred to a separate and independent committee. The State prisons of this State, result in the expenditure of money. They are a cost to the State, and we have to resort to taxation and ways and means have to be provided for the support of these State prisons; but the mode of providing the ways and means is not included in subdivision 9, as reported by the Committee. The common schools are of the same character, and the educational interests. Therefore I say, it seems to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] harmonizes with the whole spirit of these committees, and leaves it, as it seems to me, the subject should be left before this Convention. As I look upon the duties of the gentlemen who shall be appointed to serve upon Committee No. 9, without the canals, they have the great financial interests of this State in their charge. It is a great question, how far the Constitution shall limit the power of the Legislature over the finances of the State. That power, with the question of taxation and the general questions of finance, are as much as any committee, in my view, of this body, can properly attend to. The next question is the question of canals, and every gentleman upon this floor must admit that is a great question. That involves great interests of the people of this State, and one that will occupy a great deal of the time of this Convention. It seems to me the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] is not the true position. He seems to think that the question of the enlargement, repairs and management should be under the charge of one committee, and that that committee should digest, if possible, a perfect system, and submit it to this Convention, that this body then can control it, and provide the means; and if this body itself, as a Convention, do not see their way clear upon this question of ways and means (which is too often the case), after they shall have digested a plan for the enlargement, if they should digest such a plan, it can then be referred to a Committee of Ways and Means to see if means can be provided for the enlargement. But, as it seems to me, the whole system, should be under the charge of one Committee; and if, as suggested by one gentleman, that Committee, as provided for in these rules, is not large enough, with seven, it is easy to have it, and I deem it proper, that the Committee upon the canals of the State, being so important, should be increased to fifteen. It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President that to be in harmony with all the rest of these Committees, reported on by the Committee of Sixteen, the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Folger,] should be adopted.

Mr. FERRY—I have listened very attentively to the remarks which have been made upon this subject, with a view to see where the real duty was between these various propositions. I fail to see that there will be any restriction upon the power granted to that committee, No. 9, if it should be left in this simple shape; it is simply to be a Committee upon the finances of the State. If I understood the chairman of the committee, who made this report, the claim, I believe, was, that the question of finances necessarily embraced the consideration of all the finances relating to the canals, that being, perhaps, the most important in the State. It seems to me that necessarily would be so, and it strikes me it would be inconsistent and incongruous if the Committee on the finances of the State should have, also, special reference to the canals, and ignore the fact that there are other important subjects from which revenue is derived, and of which no mention is made, when there is a negative inference, at least, to be drawn, that they were to be included. I am in favor of giving to this Committee on Finance, full scope to consider every source from which revenue is derived and every question relating to finance, and I think by this amendment they have it. I would not limit them in any respect. As Committee No. 10 is proposed here in this report, there would seem to be a restriction, to some extent, which is necessarily inconsistent, as upon any reasonable argument it must appear that the care and management of the canals necessarily has some reference to the cost and expenditures, and it cannot be treated intelligently any other way. This amendment, as proposed, would be to have a committee substantially upon finances, and another one upon canals, and I would let each committee have full scope, and let each one draw from every source in their power any argument they can to justify any position they may take about it, and if they both should travel over the same ground to some extent, it would do this Convention no harm; and even if there should be conflicting reports I don't see how it could do any harm to this Convention. I am here to hear the various views, and the different propositions and results they may give; that is what we are here for, in order to consult and decide these questions understandingly and properly. My view of the proposition is, and that is why I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], to give to both Committees full scope without restriction upon either, and it seems to me all ought to be satisfied with it.

Mr. CHURCH—I have been unwilling to occupy the time of this Convention with any remarks upon the subject of this reference. I was in hopes that the report of this committee would be adopted. I think the adoption of this report would facilitate very much, the business of this Convention, and I do not believe, although the report may be criticized in some particulars, that a better arrangement can be made, than was reported by the committee. In reference to the immediate proposition before the Convention, it is simply the same proposition as that made by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], which has been voted down by the Convention, it involves precisely the same principles, and it is this:—An attempt to separate the project of the enlargement of the Erie canal, from the financial question involved in it. Now, sir, with all due respect, it seems to me it is utterly impossible to separate these two questions. The financial question is the principal, if not the only difficult question connected with that subject. If we had a surplus of money, if there was no difficulty in relation to the ways and means for enlarging the canal, there would probably be on the part of the members of this Convention no objection to it; but, if this enlargement is to be entered upon, it must be done in one of three ways. In the first place, by the appropriation of the surplus revenues of the canal and the postponement of the present debt of the State. 2d. By direct taxation. 3d. By incurring a debt.

Mr. HATCH—Will the gentleman allow me a moment. It seems to me the first question is not the amount of surplus money the State has on hand; but the question is, the care and management of these canals in the administration of the State, so as to protect the revenues of the canals from extravagance and corruption, and if this cannot be secured, it is a matter of no consequence what the surplus monies shall be derived from for they will all be squandered.

Mr. CHURCH—I beg to say to my friend from Erie, and to all other gentlemen who are understood to be in favor of the enlargement of the canals, that the report of this committee and the arrangement made by this committee involves in no respect the merits of that proposition; it only determines the manner in which this Convention will proceed to act upon the subject. In one aspect of the case there is a double proposition in this paragraph No. 9;—the propriety and the necessity of enlarging the canals and the ways and means by which that enlargement is to be effected. And this is necessarily so; it cannot be otherwise, and because it could not be otherwise, this Committee determined to have a large committee of sixteen for the purposes of considering and reporting upon this subject; or, in other words, to have two committees in one, upon the whole of this question, who would consider it in all its aspects. It seems to me that the finances of the State, and the question connected with the finances of the State cannot be separated. I should regard it as exceedingly unfortunate for the business of this Convention to have two committees make conflicting reports upon the same question; it would lead to confusion, and would not in my judgment be satisfactory to any member of this Convention. It is all important, and it is constituted one of the great labors of this committee, that the business of this Convention should be so parcelled out, that each committee should have entire and exclusive charge of one given subject. It is important that we should have one harmonious system of finance for the State in all its departments, and that system can only be devised by the constitution of one committee. In the Convention of 1846, this very committee had in charge, not only all the subjects which this proposition would give it by this report, but it also had in charge what is contained in the sub-division No. 10, the superintendence and management of canals. But it was thought by this committee that this question of the superintendence and management of the canals, was an independent proposition, and it might well be separated from the great question of finance, and I don't agree with my esteemed friend from Ontario [Mr. Folger] when he says that this question of the superintendence and management of the canals is a financial question. It is in no proper sense a financial question; and in relation to the management of the canals, if it is any way connected with the finances, it must be left to the Legislature,—I mean as to the amount expended upon the canals for ordinary repairs from year to year; it cannot be determined by this Convention or by any public body. It may be in one year $500,000, or it may necessarily be $1,200,000; but the expense of keeping the canals in repair must first be taken out of the revenues of the canals, whether they be great or small; it cannot be regulated or fixed by any provision of the Constitutional Convention, except so far as they may fix it and regulate it, by the manner in which the canals are kept in repair, and by the officers that are provided. But this provision does not constitute a financial question any more than the Committee of Judiciary constitutes a financial question. Of course, they provide for the election of judges of the State. It takes money to pay them, but it is not a financial question in any proper sense of that term, because these expenses are paid out of a fund to be provided by the Legislature, from year to year, but it cannot be regulated any other way. So with the Committee on State Prisons, that might be called, in some sense, a financial question, but it is not, in the sense in which this paragraph is intended to appoint the committee, because the expenses of certain persons are provided to be paid out of a general fund, to be appropriated by the Legislature, from year to year. But, sir, the revenues of the State, and the expenditures of the State, whether from the enlargement of the canals, or for any other project or scheme that may be proposed in this Convention, must, in my judgment, be under the charge of one single committee, to make a report for the consideration of this Convention. It cannot be done otherwise. The proposition which is now pending before the Convention might involve precisely this state of things. The Committee on Finance, which includes, as I understand the proposition, all the finances in relation to the canals, might make a disposition with reference to all the revenues of the canals, and the committee might provide for the application of those revenues upon the debt in a certain way, and it might place certain restrictions, and perhaps, certain prohibitions upon the action of the Legislature, with reference to finance and the appropriations of public money; then the Committee on Canals, which is proposed by this amendment, might come in with a report, which would entirely upset and destroy the report of the Committee on Finance, and which would necessarily produce the greatest possible confusion in the action of this Convention. I do not intend to express or intimate any views upon the various projects which may be presented for the consideration of this Convention, I only say, and insist, that this great question of finance, and this great question of the revenues of this State, and the expenditures, for any purpose whatever, must necessarily be, as it seems to me, under the charge of one single committee, and I hope and trust, sir, that this amendment will not prevail, but that the report of the committee will be adopted, because I believe it will greatly facilitate the action of this Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—It seems to me, Mr. President, that we have our work laid out here in the manner in which we have got to proceed with it. Judging from the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], we are to make these committees and they are to take the several matters which we shall intrust to their charge, and upon the incoming of their report, it is to be the embodiment of our ideas, and go down to the people as their Constitution. There is no other legitimate conclusion to be deduced from the remarks the gentleman has made. I can see no difference myself, between two committees having different names and with different powers, coming into this Convention without harmonious action, and a single committee with one-half or a majority submitting a report not harmonizing with the views of the other half, or the minority. And that is all there is of this last position taken by the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church]. We have a right, sir, if we are upon committees to speak on our own notions and our own views in regard to matters placed before us, and a Committee may well be divided, not only twice, but three, four, five or six times. As a matter of necessity they must be. The result of their deliberations is to bring inharmonious action before the Convention, and it is because Committees view matters under different lights. Now, sir another thing. I deem that it is wrong upon the part of any member of this Convention, at this stage of its proceedings, to undertake to bring before the body of this Convention the idea that there is an array of a portion of members in favor of any one provision as against another. We came here for the purpose of general enlightenment—to look over all these questions in their broad view as questions affecting the entire interest of the people of this State, to enlighten each other, so far as our knowledge will go, and for that purpose to assimilate and harmonize our different views in our final action. Now, sir, the question of the enlargement of the canal should not enter, in my opinion, into this discussion. But it strikes me, sir, that this very Committee of Sixteen, in framing their report for a division of subjects which they have placed before us, have themselves dragged this matter into the Convention. They have proposed to give the subject of the Judiciary to a separate and distinct Committee, and yet the question of the Judiciary involves the consideration of the expense of maintaining it, and requires that the moneys expended for it be raised out of the pockets of the people. They go on again and give us a Committee on States Prisons. They do not say "for the care and management of State Prisons," but for the "State Prisons." I ask you, sir, and I ask every member of this Convention whether that does not involve a question of finance—whether if we have State prisons, we have not to maintain them if they will not maintain themselves, or if they will, to take care of the revenues derived from them. And so I might mention other committees in reference to this matter. All that we propose here is that which we grant to the committee, that they shall be a Committee on Finance, upon the revenues and expenditures of this State, with entire power over the vast field of finance, revenue and expenditure, yet so far as the canals are concerned, they shall not be considered in one aspect by one committee and in another aspect by another committee. That is all we ask in regard to this matter. I, for one, hope and desire that the very best efforts and the very best intellect of this Convention will give that due attention to the finances of the State that their immense importance demands, and that it shall speak on this subject undisguisedly and fearlessly in such direction as members please. I care not if there come up from every one of the committees, their views in financial operations connected with their departments. I desire it. I take it that it is not to be left to the Committee of Sixteen what shall be the action of this Convention as a finality, but that it depends upon what shall be the united and concerted wisdom of the Convention, what shall be the result of its labors, and which we hope the people will approve by sustaining the acts we have performed. With the view I take, with the lights I have to guide my action, I hope that we may take the middle course, and not here determine by a vote of the Convention, either impliedly or directly, either in favor of or against the question of the enlargement of the canal, but leave it where we leave other questions—the judiciary, our State prisons, education and others—to be taken care of in the future, when the reports of the committees shall come in, by the Convention.

Mr. PRINDLE—I am unwilling to sit here in silence and allow the idea to go forth that this is to be a test question whether we are in favor of an enlargement of the canals or not. For myself, I wish it distinctly understood that whatever vote I may give upon this question, I vote neither in favor of an enlargement of the canals nor against it. I do not wish to decide that question at the present time. I do not wish to give a vote upon that question now. I have not examined it. Are we to vote for it, or are we to be understood as voting in favor of or against the enlargement of the canals before a committee has reported upon the question, before we have examined it, and before we have had any statistics to enlighten us? I trust not, sir. Now, the question of the canals and the question of the finances of this State are interwoven, one with the other, and they cannot, by any possibility, be separated, and yet they present too vast a field of inquiry, perhaps, for any one committee to examine. We may separate them here. We may send one part to one committee and the other to the other. But, sir, after the committees have brought in their reports the subjects must be discussed together, and in connection in this Convention in Committee of the Whole. We shall be called upon in the end to consider them together. Now, it seems to me that the best way in which we can get out of this dilemma is to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Otsego [Mr. Ferry] that we simply have one Committee on Finances and another on Canals, leaving to their discretion to consider if they please the whole subject. What difference does it make if the Committee on Canals consider the question of finance, and the Committee on Finance consider the question of canals, so far as necessary to make intelligent reports upon the particular subjects confided to them respectively? When the report of the two committees are before us, we can consider the matter in Committee of the Whole, and we shall be compelled to consider the two questions together. It seems to me that that is the simplest and most intelligent mode of dealing with the subject.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The location of the question of the enlargement of the Erie Canal, if that question shall arise before any of the committees, as they are proposed to be constituted by the Committee of Sixteen, seems to take it for granted that there is no interest connected with the canals of this State, except the interest of finance, because there is in neither committee the right to consider any such interest. Committee No. 10 is restricted to the simple consideration of the care and management of the canals. Now, sir, I think that De Witt Clinton, if he could look into this Chamber to-day, would be somewhat surprised to see so many gentlemen impressed with the idea that the State has no interest in the canals except that of receipts and disbursements. I do not understand, sir, that these canals were undertaken as a speculation on the part of the State. I do not understand now that the question of receipts and disbursements on account of the canals of this State, form any considerable proportion of the interest connected with these great enterprises. I look upon our canal system as the arterial life of the State of New York. The gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] has stated to us in reference to the debt that is resting upon us and the burdens under which the people of the State are now suffering. I would ask that gentlemen, through the Chair, how the people of Rockland get their bread except through our canals? The very corn that is food to his cattle and horses, and to a very great degree, the very bread that is eaten by the people of Rockland, must be obtained by them through our canals. Sir, my constituents—and though I represent the people of the State of New York, I mean by the term, my immediate constituents—in the county of Rensselaer, are dependent upon the canals for the very bread that they eat. And the commercial metropolis, some of whose representatives feel disposed to shut off all inquiry in regard to the canals except as the financial interests of the State are affected, is as much dependent upon the canals for its prosperity as upon any other source whatever. The merchant in New York, dealing in heavy goods depends upon the canals for their transportation. Sir, who can estimate the amount of business tending to create and promote prosperity arising from the receipts of produce brought from the far West through our canals? The mercantile interests of this State are affected by the canals to a degree that it is not easy to compute in figures. Yet, sir, if the report of the Committee of Sixteen is adopted every such consideration is shut out from the deliberation of any committee—at least, I do not find where it would be considered. I would be thankful to any gentleman who will tell me where and by what committee it is proper to consider the fact of the increasing value of the property in that part of the State over which the canal runs, if you take the report of the committee as it now stands. I understand that the operation of our canals has made land in the county of Orleans as valuable for agricultural purposes as the land in the county of Columbia or the county of Rensselaer.

MR. CHURCH—The subject which the gentleman mentions is included in this proposition to refer it to Committee No. 9.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—Does the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], consider the effect of the canal in increasing the prosperity of the State, is to be considered in that committee?

MR. CHURCH—Their value to the finances of the State is expressly referred to this committee.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—The subject certainly is a large one, and will engross the entire attention of some committee. The real objection to this division of committees is that Committee No. 9 has too much to do. Committee No. 10 has nothing to do, substantially, whatever. Now, sir, I feel the burden of taxation pressing upon my mind as strongly as any one, and I think if this Committee No. 9 would devote a little more time to the question of taxation, they would have the opportunity to do as much to relieve the people of the State from their burdens, as in watching over the canals. There is one important question that that committee ought to consider, a question, that by the Constitution of 1846, was left in the discretion of the Legislature. The Legislature, as I conceive, has not done its duty in regard to that great subject; I refer to the question of the taxation of personal property. This Convention, in my opinion, should make it compulsory upon the Legislature of this State to make personal property bear its equal share in the burden of the taxation of this State; but it is a notorious fact that almost one-half of the property of this State entirely escapes taxation; and if the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] will join heart and hand here and so apportion that burden as to bring personal property that now escapes taxation under the purview of the Legislature and make it bear its share of taxation, the burden that now rests upon the people of the State will be greatly lightened. Those immense interests that are connected with the railroads out of this State building at the West, the personal property that lies in the shape of merchandise in the commercial cities and localities of this State, if they are made to bear their due share of the public burden, the taxation will lie less heavily on the people of the State than it does at the present time. I say I concur with the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that taxation at the present time is a real evil although, I believe, the gentleman has in his imagination magnified the liabilities of this State some four times. Whatever be the amount, taxation rests heavily upon us, and it is our duty to do every thing in our power to lighten that burden. And if Committee No. 9 will devote themselves to that subject, as I have no doubt they will, they will have plenty to do. And at the same time, permit me to say, that however heavy be the burden of taxation I have no doubt the patriotism of the people is sufficient to carry us through. It was for that great and glorious object, the preservation of our country and the preservation of its principles, that this debt was contracted, and I know that our patriotism will be sufficient to sustain us through every difficulty. However severe the burden may rest upon us, it is none the less the fact that that burden is resting upon us, and I hope the proper committee will discharge its duties by bringing every portion of the property of this State within the purview of the Legislature, and make it compulsory upon the Legislature of the State of New York to impose this burden equally upon all. But at the same time let there be no mistake on the subject. I would not undertake to do what, under the Constitution of the United States, I have no power to do. I would not undertake to tax property we have no right to tax, but I would tax that property that is not now taxed at all in any shape, and which it is clearly our right to tax, and thus relieve the people of the State of New York from their burden. It is because I conceive that Committee No. 9, as proposed by the report of the Committee of Sixteen, has too much to do, and that Committee

No. 10 has substantially nothing to do, that I would commit the great subject of the canals to Committee No. 10.

Mr. COMSTOCK—It seemed to me, in the committee, that these two subjects were so connected that they ought to be examined together, the subject of a large expenditure of money for improvements, and the subject of ways, means and plans; I, therefore, concurred in the report of the committee and am content on the whole to abide by it now, although I do not think the question is fundamental, because I do not believe that the merits of the canals, or the merits of any particular scheme for improvements are involved in this question of reference. I wish to say now, and it is all I desire to say, that, in sustaining the action of the committee, I am not to be understood, for one, as at all committed against the early enlargement and completion of the canals. On the contrary, upon a view of the whole subject, when it shall be presented by the committee in a financial view as well, I hope to be able to stand among the foremost of the friends for the earliest possible perfection of our system of internal improvement, but I do not consider the subject involved in this resolution.

Mr. MERRITT—The Committee of Sixteen was constituted with great care and good judgment and with a liberality which has been most heartily commended. They have considered all the questions which would probably come before this body. They have made a unanimous report;—that report meets my most hearty approval. It perhaps may have been a little unfortunate that this discussion on the canal question should have been introduced; that the gentleman from Erie, [Mr. Hatch] in proposing his amendment introduced the subject, and, therefore, made it, to a certain extent, a test question, whether the subject of the canals should be taken up and considered by a committee constructed with special reference to that interest. Those who pretend to have it in their charge were wrong to have it presented at this time, to secure if possible an expression from this body favorable to that interest, and in some degree at least influence the formation of committees.

Mr. HATCH—I made no proposition before the Convention in relation to the enlargement of the Erie Canal. I merely suggested as an amendment the word "improvement" be inserted in resolution No. 10.

Mr. MERRITT—If I recollect the gentleman's remarks correctly, he said that this subject would be one of great importance to be considered by this Convention—I mean the subject of the improvement of the canals. For that reason he desired it to go to this Committee to be reported upon. And now, in regard to the question of the diffusion of finances, which has been alluded to. The people do not understand fully the various appropriations which have been made, but they do to understand in the aggregate what they have got pay. It is very proper, therefore, that the whole subject should be considered by one committee. They know what seven mills tax on the dollar means, in the aggregate. They do not go into particulars and fractions of mills, to be raised for specific purposes. In the construction of this Committee No. 9, to be composed of sixteen members, all parts of the State can be fairly and properly represented. The Committee seem to have taken this into consideration. It is proper that the proposed Committee should, in the first instance, take up this whole subject, and if they find their labors too arduous, they can ask this Convention to relieve them of a portion of their duties, and they can, at any time, report upon any particular subject which they may have fairly considered, or report in part and not in full; they can make sub-committees, and it is very proper that this whole subject should be left to them. As to what course I shall take upon any of these questions, I do not propose at this time to commit myself; there is no question of general interest within the bounds of the State, in which I have not an equal interest with every other citizen. Every citizen should have an interest in internal improvements, education, judiciary, and every question that may come up properly before this Convention, and I hope that in the construction of the committees every interest will be considered and represented; that the proper persons will be put upon them, without reference to their predilections for or against any proposition, either of the present Constitution or any proposition which may be submitted for the consideration of this body. I hope, therefore, we shall adhere strictly to the report of this Committee, and then we can proceed with the legitimate duties for which we have been convened.

Mr. RATHBUN—Mr. President, the object, as I understand, of the motion made, is purely in reference to the division of labor without attempting to interfere with the direction of the business or to interfere with anything that is necessary in order to give to any committee control of the entire subject. But the question is one which affects the interest of this Convention in reference to the time which will be necessary to be consumed by the committee in the investigation of the subject matter to be referred to them. Now, sir, I propose to look for one moment at this section No. 9, and call the attention of the gentlemen to it to show that it embraces a great variety of topics, and an immense amount of labor. As it embraces the finances of the State, and takes in that whole subject, I omit the canals, in the reading, because I propose to show, and call the attention of the Convention to the fact, that it has got an immense amount of labor without reference to that question. First, finances; second, the public debt; third, the revenues, including all revenues derived from the canals and all other sources. Every branch of revenue is to be left to that committee. Fourth, expenditures of every character and kind; fifth, the taxation of the people for all purposes and the amount. All these subjects are committed to that committee. And in addition to that, there is also the subject of the restrictions upon the power of the Legislature in regard to expenditures. I ask, gentlemen, in looking at these subjects which I have read whether it would not be asking too much of that committee to take the whole amount of that labor upon their hands and ask this Convention of one hundred and sixty members to sit here and wait day after day and month after month in order to obtain reports upon which they can act. Now the claim is, that superadded to this shall be the canals; then the revenues and all matters connected with it. They are not content with that but desire the canals. For what? What does the Committee on Finance want with the canals when they have the consideration of the revenues to be derived from them? They have entire charge and control of that subject. What business I ask, have they with the canals themselves in addition to that? Upon the question of improvement and enlargement, I am very much disposed to wait until we get something to make improvements or an enlargement with, before we lay any more taxes upon the people. I am not much in favor of that until some one can show me how we are going to pay for it. Therefore, in my vote I want it to be distinctly understood that I am not voting in favor of enlargement at all, but I propose to divide this question as a matter of economy of time, and as an equitable division of labor among the members of this Convention. I am not disposed to wait all summer until the election comes, for a committee to work out the whole labor of this Convention, while there are plenty of gentlemen here who are willing to take part of the labor. The question is clearly divisible. The amendment proposes simply to take the question of finance and give it to one committee, and take the question of the canals and give it to another one. If they do not agree, there are a good many gentlemen here who know how to amend and improve and make things harmonious. If not, we had better refer the matter to sixteen gentlemen, and let them dispose of the case, and the rest of us may then be profitably employed at home. I am in favor of the amendment, because I am in favor of dividing the labor. It will facilitate our labor, and allow us to go home without waiting here until after election.

Mr. MASTEN—It is with great diffidence that I differ from the report of this committee, for I have no doubt that they have bestowed great care, intelligence and integrity in the distribution of our labors. I somewhat, sir, regret the line of argument that has been adopted on this occasion; I regret that the merits of the subject referred to have been considered. I do not propose, sir, on this occasion to say one word as to whether the canal should be enlarged or not. But I find, sir, that two of the greatest subjects upon which we are possibly to act are combined together and referred to one committee. The subject of finance is a subject which must engage our attention; it is a subject which will give abundance of labor to any committee that may have it in charge. But, sir, we have in our midst public improvements vast and great, that attract the attention not only of our country, but attract the attention of the world, and I have been surprised, sir, that this committee have not deemed so important a subject as this entitled to a separate committee. It is upon this ground that I shall vote for the amendment. I think, Sir, without reference to what is to be done in respect to our public improvements, that the subject is so great that it should have a committee of its own, and, I think, that not only our own people, but those who live beyond in the far west will be surprised that this Convention have not given to that subject a separate committee. It is true that these committees will, to a certain extent, have to consider the same questions; but, nevertheless, the two subjects are so distinct and important in other particulars, that it seems to me a separate Committee should be appointed in respect to the canals.

Mr. CLINTON—Mr. President, perhaps my vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], and my vote on the proposition now pending are guided more by feeling than by anything else. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that however our committees may be constituted and whatever the division of labor may be, they will be filled by gentlemen who will deliberate fully upon the subjects committed to them; and I am satisfied that whatever a committee may do, or may omit to do in the performance of its duty, this Convention will not separate until it has fairly and fully discussed every proposition for a Constitutional amendment of the least importance to the people of this State. Now, Mr. President, it does seem very strange to me, and I speak it as a matter of feeling, for this Convention to hesitate for a single moment to give the canals a committee of their own. There is more than a financial question involved in the subject of the enlargement of our canals. Why, sir, I am unwilling for one to say that a proposition, involving such momentous considerations, should be sent to, what will be known by the world, as a Committee on Finance. I am unwilling that a committee so called and which is expected only to work out pecuniary results of this, that, and the other matter, should have the sole and entire dealing with the canals of this State. Sir, the canals are the glory of this State! They have been the very foundation of that prosperity which makes us proudly eminent among our sister States. When you are passing upon the question of the enlargement of the canals, you are passing upon the question as to whether this glorious State shall fulfil to the very terms the promises which she held out to the government, to the unbroken West, and to those who flee from oppression abroad and come here where they can enjoy freedom; and whether this State will to the utmost of its strength, so far as is consistent with its own good, to enlarge and keep open this great highway, which has made the Northwest a sisterhood of States, and which has given to our country that strength, without which, the base rebellion of the South would have been successful. I say to you, Mr. President, in my humble opinion, the prosperity of this State, the great question whether the cities and villages which have sprung up along the banks of our canals, shall wither away like Jonah's gourd, or whether they shall gain strength and double and quadruple their population, and whether the value of our land shall continue to rise and enhance—that these are the issues which are involved in the question of the enlargement of the Erie Canal, and I am not willing to send that question to a committee which I am compelled to call a Committee on Finance. No, sir! Do as all our legislative bodies do; give the canals a committee of their own. There is something sir, far more precious than money—honor and glory—the great question whether this State shall vindicate her motto and go higher like the rising sun. All these are involved in the question of enlargement, and I therefore pray you, if it be consistent, and I think it clearly is, with the due investigation, not only of our finances, but of everything else, for the honor of the Convention itself, to give our canals a separate and independent committee!

Mr. PAIGE—It has been quite impossible for me to conceive how the merits of the question of the improvements of the canals can be involved in the simple question of reference. The whole State is in favor of the canals. The people are in favor of their preservation, and in favor of their improvement. The simple question is a question of reference. It seems to me that the gentleman is mistaken in reference to the multifariousness of the duties imposed upon the Committee on Finance. The term finance is generic. It is a comprehensive term; it embraces the public debt, expenditures, taxation and revenue. They are all one subject only—the subject of finance. The revenues embrace the revenues of the State; not only the revenues from the property, other than the canals, but anything created by the property of the State, forms a part of the revenue of the State. Our difficulty has been in separating the canals from the revenue of the canals. Certainly the revenues from the canals are embraced within the legitimate duty of the Committee on Finance. The question of the canals involves not only the question of revenues, but the question of expenditures. It is difficult to make the separation. The Committee of Sixteen devolved upon the Committee on Finances the consideration of the canals in so far as the subject involved expenditure. It does seem to me that the debate has been extended beyond the merits of the question. The merit of the further enlargement of the canal is not involved here, and I, therefore, hope the report of the committee will be adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM—It is due to this question that I should state that this is the only question which was regarded of sufficient importance in the action of this committee, to put to the decision of a test question. It was carried by the vote of a majority. The minority, of which I was one, did not deem it necessary to present a report, for the reason that we intended to refer the matter to the judgment and intelligence of the Convention. I was myself in favor, in the committee, of leaving the subject, as proposed by my colleague from Ontario [Mr. Folger], because I believe that the subject of the canals should go to the Committee on Canals; and a controlling reason with me is this: That the question of enlargement is necessarily bound up and involved in the question of canal management. There can be no enlargement of the canals without involving the question of their use in the mean time. And that full subject properly and legitimately belongs to a single committee. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment.

Mr. DUGANNE—I suggested that this might bear somewhat of the character of a test question. I did so because, in my mind, it seemed to me that we were to pass upon the question of whether it were best to take from the Committee on Finance all purview over the question of canals, and leave the canals to a special committee, or to a committee devoted entirely to canals, or whether we should allow the Committee on Finance to work upon this subject of canals in conjunction with the great financial interests of the State. The canals are or are not a source of revenue to the State; they should be, or should not be in the future, a source of great revenue to the State. Taking this view of the question, it seemed to me eminently proper for the Committee on Finance to consider the subject of the canals in its financial character, in conjunction with the subject of the other institutions and interests of the State, financially. I see no reason why there should be any conflict between the Committee on Canals, if you please, with the powers which have been given to the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Canals will consider the subject and probably report sooner than the Committee on Finance will—I mean the general subject—and we shall have such information and such suggestions as they choose to give us, to guide us in our consideration of the subject of canals. Then, afterward, when the Committee on Finance, in its broader view of the vast interests connected with the financial department of the State, shall bring in its report, we shall be competent to have determined by our previous investigation, what we shall do with regard to the report of the Committee on Finance, upon the subject of canals. I see no conflict at all in the apportionment of the powers and duties.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I should not trouble the Convention with a single word, after the very full debate that has been had, but for the fact that some gentlemen who have spoken have seemed to look upon this question as a test question, and it has been intimated that gentlemen who are to be considered in favor of our system of canals, and their improvement and extension, will be supposed to vote for a special committee on the subject. I have always been a friend to our system of internal improvements. I hope to be able in this Convention, before it shall close, to show myself to be a consistent friend hitherto, and to satisfy all that I shall equally friendly to them in the future. I do not see that the question is involved at all in the decision which the Convention is now called upon to make. I agree with my friend that the question of finance seems to cover the whole ground, for it is perfectly plain that all that is contemplated by the most conservative and most extreme friend of the canals must, after all, come back to the financial question; and although a member of the Committee of Sixteen which submitted this report, I was, in the committee, disposed to go with my friend from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]; yet upon a full review of the question, and seeing its bearing upon the question of finance, I am disposed to adhere to the report of the committee, not committing myself thereby to anything that may be deemed hostile to our noble system of canals. I shall therefore support the report of the committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—Mr. President, I wish to say but a single word. It is not only the question of the improvement and enlargement of the canals that is involved in this matter, but there is, from what I have heard and seen since I came to this Convention, a proposition to come before it to sell or lease the lateral canals, if not the Erie canal also. I wish to say that although I voted against the proposition of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], to include the subject of improvement of the canals in stating the duties of the committees, yet I am unwilling that the subject of leasing or selling the canals—either the lateral canals or the Erie canal—shall be considered merely as a question of finance, or merely in a financial point of view. I shall therefore sustain the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

The PRESIDENT then announced that the question was on the substitute of Mr. Folger.

The ayes and nays were called for, and a sufficient number seconding the call, they were ordered.

Mr. HAND—I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]. I do not suppose thereby that I am voting on a test question. I cannot see how the subject of the enlargement of the canals is legitimately before us. It is simply a question of expediency to facilitate business and carry it rapidly forward. The question seems to me like a very simple one indeed, looking to the appointment of a committee on finance to consider the subject of finances in all its bearings everywhere—the financial question connected with our system of education, connected with our State Prisons, connected with everything with which finance is associated, and then a Committee on Canals to give us everything that they can ascertain with reference to the interests of the canals in all their bearings, and make that a legitimate subject of inquiry, disassociated from everything else. If they choose to recommend the enlargement of the canals let them give us the reasons why. Let some friend of the enlargement be on each committee who may state to us the reasons for the conclusion. Both committees necessarily will have to consider some of these financial questions. These questions will cross and interlace together. They are not to be decided by piecemeal. The reports of all the committees will be before us, and when they are spread out before us, with the liabilities of the State, to which gentlemen have alluded, then the question will be whether, necessary as an enlargement or improvement of the canals may be, we shall incur the expense for it—or whether we shall do wisely to recommend it. If each committee has distinctly had the subject before it it will have a fuller investigation than it otherwise would have if you connect the interests of the Canal with the financial interests of the State, in the considerations of a single committee. Why not put in the subject of State Prisons, and of general education, which have financial aspects in which they may be considered, in charge of the Committee on Finance? The absurdity of the thing is apparent to my mind in mixing up matters which should be considered separately, however much they may be associated with financial considerations. I think that all these interests ought to be considered in their bearings upon one another. I will not pursue these remarks, but it seems to me that we should facilitate business and simplify the whole matter and make it clearer to the minds of every member by separating these subjects which do not necessarily belong together.

Mr. FLAGLER—Mr. President: If this question now pending, is as important as this long debate now implies, a little reflection, perhaps a little slumber, will be of service. With the view of testing the sense of the Convention, I move that we now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Flagler, and it was declared lost.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I do not rise to make more than a single suggestion; to appeal to the justness and fairness of this Convention. The question of the canals is one of the most important questions that will come before this body, and in forming the committee upon it with reference to the work of this body, the committee should be formed, of course, with a majority of the friends of the canals. It has been said by the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], that every body is friendly to the canals. That is a mistake; because I know that there is a considerable body of men in this State who advocate the selling of the canals. I suggest, therefore, that it is fair in forming these committees for the purpose of apportioning the work, that there should not be put upon the Committee on Canals, men who have some peculiar views in regard to the expenditures of the State and the restrictions of the Legislature in reference to those expenditures. It is a little thing for this great interest, to ask that the Convention shall give them a committee on this subject, the majority of whom shall be friends of the canals. I ask this from the fairness and justice of this Convention.

Mr. SILVESTER—I do not consider that by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], the Committee on the Finances of this State will be at all precluded from considering the subject of the canals, in connection with that of finances. After that committee have given their best care and attention to many other questions that are involved in that subject—the public debt, its payment, providing means of payment, the revenues of the State, the expenditures of the State, the great question of taxation—after these have been considered, if there is any time for that committee to devote to the question of the canals and to the financial questions connected therewith, they can consider them and make a report. They will not be precluded by the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario from pursuing this course. But, sir, it seems to me, with all due respect to the Committee of Sixteen, and the time they have undoubtedly given to the report they have submitted, that it has given a very small place to such a great interest as the canals of this State, when they are placed in only two small sections—in Committee No. 9, in connection with the financial question of this State, and in another section confined entirely to the superintendence and management of the canals and the officers who shall have charge of them. Why, sir, there is no interest in the State, perhaps, greater than that of the canals. There is no other interest in the State which, perhaps, has so much added to our greatness in times past, and which holds out so great a prospect of greatness for the time to come; and yet almost every other class of interests in this State has a separate committee. Cities have their committee; currency and banking have a committee; counties, towns and villages have a committee; State prisons have a committee; the pardoning power has a committee; the militia and military officers have a committee; education and the funds relating thereto have a committee, while none has been accorded to the canals. Now it is said that the question of finances is interwoven with this question of the canals, and therefore it is proper it should be considered by the Committee on Finance. Why sir, is not the financial question also interlaced and interwoven with the question of the judiciary, with the question of corporations, with the question of State prisons, with the question of militia and military officers, and with the question of education? It is connected with all these separate interests, yet upon each of them, a separate committee is to be appointed by the President of this Convention; while upon this great interest of the canals, there is to be no separate committee. I submit sir, that it is injustice to this great interest, that it is injustice to the people of this State, that it is injustice to the past history of the canals, that it is injustice to the associations that are connected with those interests, that they should not have at the hands of the Convention assembled to deliberate upon the interests of the State, and form a Constitution which may last for years to come, and under which it may increase in greatness and glory—a committee which shall consider the whole subject of the canals. This Committee on Finance will be so much involved in questions connected with taxation, the basis of taxation, and the manner of regulating taxation, and providing for our State debt, that they will not be able to investigate many subjects which cluster around the subject of the canals. Sir, the canals are a great interest—an interest upon which the fortunes and welfare and prosperity of the State depend almost as much as any interest, which will be brought before us for our consideration, and I hope and trust, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], will prevail.

Mr. CONGER—I shall not trespass upon the time of the Convention, having spoken on the question on the previous motion, but I wish to draw the attention of gentlemen present to this consideration, as there seems to be some expectation that upon the vote now to be called there will be a change which will make the former action of the Convention null and void. I wish to say that it would be infinitely better to reconsider the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch], as it seems to me, than to adopt the pending substitute. In adopting this substitute we do this thing: We propose a committee on the finances of this State, and we sequester from the consideration of that committee the chief property of the State canals, and leave the Finance Committee to look to all the other property, consisting of the salt works and things of that kind. I say that it would be infinitely preferable to move a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Erie, than to undertake at this day, to perform the play of Hamlet with the Prince of Denmark left out.

The question was then put on the substitute of Mr. Folger, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Baker, Beckwith, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, Case, Cheritree, Clinton, Corbett, Curtia, Duganne, C. O. Dwight, T. W. Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Ballard, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Bell, Bergen, E. A. Brown, W. C. Mr. FOLGER moved a reconsideration of the vote; and that the motion lie on the table.

Mr. MERRITT demanded the ayes and noes.

Mr. DEVELIN—If I understand the rules adopted yesterday, the motion to reconsider must lie upon the table until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT—The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] has himself moved that it lie upon the table.

Mr. DEVELIN—But by the rules, as I understand it, that motion must lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has not the rules before it.

Mr. DEVELIN—I rise to that point of order, sir.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I also rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has not the rules before it, but it thinks that the rule as adopted was different from that as reported by the Committee.

Mr. DEVELIN—The rule adopted yesterday, as I understand, was the rule existing in the Senate, moved by my friend from New York [Mr. Tilden].

The PRESIDENT—The Secretary will read the rule, so we can all understand it.

The Secretary proceeded to read the rule.

The PRESIDENT—The motion will lie upon the table.

On motion of Mr. SMITH the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY JUNE 14. 1867.

The Convention met at 11 A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. H. ALDEN.

The journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary and approved.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I am charged with a memorial of The Universal Peace Society of the United States, so called, to present to this Convention. I suppose, appreciating the amiable character of its members, and the peaceable disposition of the Convention, they respectfully pray as follows:

THE UNIVERSAL PEACE SOCIETY

To the Convention assembled to amend the Constitution of the State of New York:

At the meeting of the Universal Peace Society held in the city of New York during the 8th and 9th of May, 1867, it was

Resolved, That through the New York members we petition for such amendments as will remove the causes of war so far as under governmental control; and, at the same time, to abolish all provisions for war itself, by not legalizing that which is inhuman, unjust and unchristian.

Resolved, That Isaac Winslow, Esq., of New York City is hereby appointed to represent the New York members and report the above resolution.

On behalf of the Society,

ALFRED H. LOVE,

President.

Philadelphia, May 22, 1867.

As there is no proper committee to refer a memorial like this, I move to lay it upon the table.

There being no objection the memorial was laid upon the table.

Mr. SILVESTER—I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next (June 19,) I will move to amend Rule 33 by adding:

"And." Such ladies as may be invited by any members of the Convention—but such right of invitation to cease whenever the sofas are filled."

Mr. FOLGER—I call from the table the motion made by me yesterday to reconsider the vote by which the substitute offered by me to sub-divisions 9 and 10 of the report of the Committee of Sixteen was lost.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that under the rules no motion is required. The pending question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger,] yesterday, which was an amendment to paragraph 9 of the report of the Select Committee of sixteen.

Mr. HALE—I voted yesterday, Mr. President, against the substitute which was offered by the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Folger,]. I voted in that way although it struck me that as an original question I should prefer the arrangement as proposed by him to that suggested by the committee, for the reason that I felt disinclined to aid in any way, or do anything to aid in disturbing or disarranging the plans suggested by it. I felt then, as I do now, that the action of that committee embodying as it does some of the ripest wisdom and legislative experience of this Convention, was entitled to the greatest respect. Upon further reflection, however, I am constrained to come to the conclusion that the change suggested by the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Folger,] ought to be made. As I understand the effect of that change, if made, it will not be to deprive the Finance Committee of the consideration of any financial question with reference to the canals. Subdivision 9, as amended, will then give to the Finance Committee, and make it their duty, to consider "the finances of the State, the public debt, revenues, expenditures and taxation, and restrictions on the powers of the Legislature in respect thereto." In case, therefore, any question arises in relation to the canals, which is essentially a financial question, and which involves, as a leading subject, a question of finance, if I understand the effect of the motion of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] it will still be properly referred to that committee, and will be a proper subject of investigation by it. Then the proposition is, after striking out those words to make Committee No. 10 a committee upon canals solely. I need not say, Mr. President, that my course upon this question has no reference whatever to the merits of any proposal whatever that may be made in relation to the canals. I do not consider this question as in any way involving or affecting the merits of any such proposal. But if such proposals are to be made, after they are made upon this floor and are discussed, and after I have had an opportunity to investigate and reflect upon the subject, it will be time enough for me to form a judgment in relation to such proposal, and I certainly do not wish now to express or intimate any opinion until such investigation shall be had. Neither do I agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that the passage of a vote of this kind will be a virtual instruction or intimation to the President of a wish on the part of this Convention that a majority of the friends of any particular line of policy should be put upon the Canal Committee. I do not understand it to be the province of this Convention to make any such intimation or suggestion to the President in regard to the duties which are confided to him. I shall, therefore, for the reason stated, vote for the reconsideration, and for the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], reserving all opinions upon any question that may arise in relation to the canals until such question comes before us properly and legitimately for discussion and action in Convention or in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GROSS—I cast my vote yesterday with a view of having a division of the Committee on Finance and Canals on the ground of expediency. I thought that altogether too much labor had been cast upon that one committee. Since, however, the question of canal enlargement has been drawn into that discussion, I feel constrained to change my vote, not by reason of any opposition to the enlargement, but because I deem this substantially, nay, pre-eminently a question of finance. In these debt accumulating and tax-ridden days we all understand and appreciate the great and valuable services rendered by our canals, but since they are not capable of doing all the business or carrying all the freight of the trading community, I think we had better look at both sides of the question of enlargement. Mr. President, I shall therefore change my vote to-day with a view of having the committee composed substantially as reported by the Committee of Sixteen.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I intended, sir, to have made some remarks on this question yesterday; but as the Convention were quite weary with discussion I refrained. I desire to say this morning a word or two, in regard to the reasons which induced me to vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], although I voted against the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch]. It seems to me, sir, that it is not a question of finance. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] made a very strong impression upon this Convention by putting it in that form, and the illustration which he gave was in substance that, when a man commenced to build a house or do other work of that kind, his first point was to count the cost. I admit, sir, that in cases of that kind where a person is preparing for himself a matter of convenience, he seeks to count the cost; but when a man is preparing for himself that which is to promote his honor or to advance the honor of his family, or to do some other thing in which he feels a most deep and abiding interest, then the first question will be whether he will do the thing, and the second will be whether he can find the money to do it. In other words, the question of convenience must give way, and the only question is one of possibility whether he can raise the funds. And so when nations have great works to do, when they are contending for rights, for the continuance of their empire, or when they are defending themselves, the question is not whether they can raise the money conveniently, but whether they can raise it at all. They make the question of finance a subordinate question to the question of empire, or to the great question of defense. Now, I am of opinion that this is one of those questions which we have before us, and by-and-bye I shall attempt to show why I think it is. But before I get to that, I wish to say a word in regard to this point. I do not think that the question of finance is involved in this subject in any form. If at all, it is purely a secondary matter. What do the canals of New York do for us now? As I understand they pay into the general fund $350,000 as a sinking fund, and $200,000 for the necessary expenses of the government. Half a million of dollars, sir, would be a sufficient fund out of which to increase and promote the enlargement of this canal—the Erie canal—the estimate not exceeding eight millions. I, therefore, feel no difficulty on that point. If it were an important thing for us to have the canals enlarged, the means of enlarging them could easily be obtained and conveniently obtained. Even, sir, if it were necessary to have a tax to accomplish the purpose, it would take but one-third of a mill to pay the interest. The Comptroller informs us in his report that the assessed value of the property in this State is $1,500,000,000, and if we take half a million as a tax, I think you will find it but the third of a mill. What is that to the State of New York, if the question is one which ought on its merits, to be carried? And now, sir, having reached that part of the subject, I will state why I think this question ought to go upon its merits. It seems to me, sir, there are two grounds for that; one, because it is a question for the State, of empire, substantially—and the other because, for the whole country it is a question of nationality. Now, in regard to our own State; I have read with great interest the report of the gentleman from Erie (Mr. Hatch), and I would like to see that report answered, because if his statements are true, it seems to me it is of the greatest importance that the State of New York should not lose this vast trade, which the nations, so to speak of the West (for these Western States are substantially nations) are pouring into our lap. I learn from that report that there is a prospect of this great trade going in part through other States, and perhaps going out through the St. Lawrence. I want to hear this question discussed here and examined upon its merits, not subordinate to the question of finance, but upon the great question of the empire, strength and extent of the State of New York. Moreover, sir, I want to see this question also examined as a matter of nationality. We are placed by Providence directly in the path of those Western States to the sea. We hold the key of the gate of commerce; they cannot get out except they pass over the territory of the State of New York. I think, therefore, as a great national question, it is of importance to us, situated as we are and holding this position in reference to those other States, that we should furnish them the facilities for going to the sea; they cannot furnish it by themselves; they cannot pass over the State of New York; they say "we would like to open this great pathway for ourselves, if we had the opportunity, but it cannot be afforded us; that would be trenching upon the sovereignty of the State of New York." Sir, shall we sit supinely and say that these men shall be driven to go out by the avenues of the St. Lawrence and be exposed to the dangers of the Bay of Fundy, and that we will furnish them no means by which they shall have a free and open pathway to the sea? I, sir, from an early period of my reading was led to look harshly upon those nations who, situated upon the mouth of a river would not permit those who were upon the upper part of the streams to go out freely through that mouth to the sea. I think we are in a measure situated in the same way. These States want to pass over our land. They want to carry their produce in such a way as to reduce the expenses of transportation and to improve the value of their lands. I think they are entitled to it. While I do not intend to prejudge this question at all, for I simply say these things because I want to hear a discussion on the merits, my belief is that if we should put this question properly on its merits before this Convention, stripping it of all arbitrary rules which are found in the present Constitution, and let the canals be self supporting as they undoubtedly will be, let a sinking fund be provided to pay the debt and the interest, and then after these are paid, let the residue of the money go into the general fund, I think we shall see that it is for the interest and pride of the State to have that course adopted, and that our policy will be to reduce the tolls so as to enable the Western States to develop themselves as fully as is consistent with our prosperity, and return to us the money that we have expended.

Mr. HARRIS—It was not my purpose to say anything further upon this proposition, but after the extraordinary speech which has just been made by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], I do not feel at liberty to let the question be taken without saying a word. He has presented the question as though this Convention were to determine whether or not the canals shall be enlarged. Sir, is that a question for us to discuss in the determination of what provisions the fundamental law of this State shall contain?

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Will the gentleman excuse me for a moment? I intended simply to argue, as I did, for the sake of showing the importance of hearing the question upon its merits. I do not, myself, say that I shall necessarily vote for the enlargement, but I presented these points simply for the purpose of showing the importance of hearing the question in a direct and distinct form.

Mr. HARRIS—It seems to me, Mr. President, in the discussion which occurred yesterday, and in the remarks of the gentleman from Oneida, [Mr. T. Dwight] that we have lost sight to some extent of the business before us as a Convention. What has the enlargement of the canals to do with the alterations to be made in the Constitution? What questions can properly come before this Convention relating to that subject? In my judgment there are but two, and one is as to the means of carrying on this work in case the Legislature shall determine that it is expedient. It is proper enough to consider the financial article of the Constitution in regard to that subject. Now, the trouble with us is that, by the financial article of the Constitution the funds of the State are so tied up and so devoted to other purposes that the Legislature cannot control them for the purpose of carrying on the work of enlargement. Then again, the powers of the Legislature are so restricted that they cannot borrow money for the purpose of carrying on the enlargement. What is needed for that purpose is to open the financial article of the Constitution in such a way as to enable the Legislature to provide means for carrying on this work of enlargement. In my judgment that is all that this Convention can do. I am in favor of such a change in the constitution in that respect. But sir, it is a question that belongs exclusively to the Finance Committee of this Convention; it is, how shall the financial article of the Constitution be changed so as to allow the Legislature, if they shall think it expedient, to go on with this work of enlargement? Sir, it is a mistake of the gentleman to suppose that because we desire to refer this to the Committee on Finance, we are, therefore, necessarily hostile to the work of enlargement. For one, I deny that there is any such inference to be drawn from that position. The only question which this Convention has a right to consider and which is legitimate to the purposes of this Convention is, how shall the financial article of the Constitution be changed so as to allow the Legislature to secure the ways and means of providing for the enlargement? This is all that should be done in the modification of the Constitution in this respect. There is one other subject which ought to be considered by the Legislature, (and which is provided for by the 10th committee), and that is a new subject and entirely different from this. It relates to the administration of our canals. There are those who think, and I think I may say I am of that number, that the canals might be administered in such a way as to secure a larger revenue with less expense; that question may be considered by a committee, and a proposition of some modification of the Constitution, in that respect, may be demanded in reference to that. We have another provision in the Constitution—a very slight one—which provides for the appointment of three canal commissioners. These are elected by the people as State officers, but the Constitution contains no provision in relation to their powers and duties. It has been supposed, and I am inclined to think myself, that a change in that respect might be desirable. And with a view to that—the administration of the canals and the officers to be charged with their administration, and the powers and duties of the Legislature in reference to that subject—it has been thought fit to raise a committee. Now, sir, what more is there for this Convention to do than to consider this financial question, and then to consider this question as to the administration of the canals? And it is in reference to that that this division of the labor among these committees has been recommended.

Mr. E. BROOKS—This question has assumed so much importance that I feel called upon in view of what has been said in this Chamber and out of it, at least, to give a reason for the faith which is in me, so far as relates to my vote. Sir, this subject of the canals is properly upon its merits before this Convention. I hold a document in my hand which by the last Legislature on a full vote in the Lower House, was referred to this Convention. It relates to one of the greatest subjects which can possibly come before this body, and that is, the canals of the State. I represent, in part here, a constituency who have little interest in the canals; perhaps, less interest in them than in any other section of the State. And I remember, sir, in this connection, that though the section I represent has little material interest in the results of the canals, yet including the county of Westchester and the Southern part of the State below the county of Westchester, some four counties of the State of New York, pay one-half of the immense taxes of the State. It is proper, sir, it seems to me, after the discussion which has been had, to enter briefly into the merits of the question before us. I want one Canal Committee properly and simply to discuss thoroughly every question which relates to the canals of the State, and when they bring in their report, I want to know to what extent my constituents are to be taxed for this improvement. Sir, when there was to be an extension of one of our canals, as was recently made of some 37 miles, an estimate was made that it would cost some $800,000, and the result proves that it will cost some $2,500,000; and the four counties to which I allude are to pay $1,200,000 of the tax without receiving one dollar's benefit from it. I want to know something in reference to this committee; and, although I have great confidence in the Chair, I desire that this question shall be so ventilated preliminary to the appointment of these committees, that there may be some development of opinion in reference to the question itself. I think, sir, with all respect to those who may differ with me, that the Finance Committee, so-called, will have abundance of labor without interfering directly or indirectly with the canal question itself. Sir, in the Congress of the United States as the gentleman who is Chairman of the select committee [Mr. Harris], very well known, and in the lower house it is an established rule that, there shall be a Committee on Finance, to wit, a Committee of Ways and Means, and that there shall be a Committee on Appropriations. Both committees are appointed with reference to the expenditures of public money, but they do not necessarily conflict with each other. Neither need the Canal Committee and the committee charged with the finances of the State necessarily conflict with each other. Sir, I want to know, too, just at this stage of this Convention, so far as it is proper to give any development of opinion by discussion, what may be done and what can be done. If this enlargement of the Erie canal, which has been alluded to here, is to cost $12,000,000 as has been reported, or $10,000,000, or even $8,000,000, I should like the fact to be known, and if, upon consideration, the Canal Committee, can demonstrate by a report to this body, that the surplus revenues of September, 1866, amounting to some $4,824,000, will, as estimated, amount to $6,000,000 in 1867, and amount to $7,019,000 in 1868, I want it known; and if the committee can demonstrate any such fact as that, and this canal can be enlarged without taxing the people directly or indirectly, beyond their present burdens of taxation, why then, so far as is proper at this stage of the proceedings, I am not unwilling to commit myself to the result, albeit, as I have said, the constituency which I represent have very little comparative interest in this question. Sir, I was a little surprised yesterday at the vote upon amendment moved by my friend upon my left [Mr. Hatch]. I saw no reason in the world why that should not be adopted; here was a report proposing to raise a committee in regard to the care and management of the canals and my friend moved to insert the word "improvement." I saw no sinister purpose in that amendment, and I perceive none now. I do not believe there is any. But whether there be any or not, in an intelligent body like this, I am sure we cannot suffer from the abundance of information which may be received from either of the two committees. The poet tells us that

"Through all the dark and troubled night,
The prayer of Ajax was for light."

And we want light—light upon these intricate questions connected with the canals of this State, and, as I have said already, the Committee on Finance will have abundance of labor to perform upon these great questions relating to the property of this State, and to the enormous taxation of this State, if they can to show how this State can pay off their debt of $51,000,000, which to-day rests upon it as a State, and pay off that $85,000,000 of other debt, which rests upon the towns and counties of this State. Sir, one reason more and I will take my seat. I hold that, as a parliamentary action, the friends of any great measure have a right to be represented in the majority upon that committee which is to consider it; and after the admission of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] yesterday, that the select committee were not united in their action, but as I understand were very materially divided upon this precise question, it has seemed to me as an act of parliamentary justice, they have a right to have a committee representing the canals of the State.

Mr. STRONG—My impression is, by the zeal which has been shown in the discussion of this question, that the object of the mover of this amendment is to give some encouragement to the idea, that we favor the enlargement, or a very considerable improvement of the canals. I am not one of those who are in favor of that project, and I will state very briefly the reasons why I cannot favor it, and as it is possible that I have not heard very distinctly, I may in the few remarks I have to make repeat some observation which has been made by those who have preceded me. I admit, sir, at the outset the project of the canal was a glorious one, and I admit furthermore that it has conferred immortal honor upon one of its principal projectors, the father of an honorable delegate in this Convention [Mr. Clinton]. At the time when the project was first brought forward, the people of that part of the country which I represent were not in favor of it. They supposed the benefits would be local, and there would be no benefit conferred upon them, and the only reason why they were led in the end to acquiesce in it, was the promise made at the time that the canal would eventually pay for itself; would pay not only the entire expense, but would also be a source of revenue after it had been paid for. There was some reason to suppose, sir, that that they was correct; but it was very soon discovered that they were laboring under a mistake. In the first place, the construction of the canal was not economically managed at the outset, and perhaps there may have been some frauds in the contracts which were made then, and undoubtedly there have been many in the contracts which have been made since; but when it was discovered that the canal, as originally constructed, would not pay the debt which was incurred in its construction, then their project was for an improvement of the canals, which would exhaust not only the fund which the canal had raised, but would also run the State in debt to a very considerable extent. They went on, sir, until there was a law passed by the Legislature for an increased debt for the improvement and enlargement of the canal by raising some nine millions, of dollars, and which I think eventually amounted to some twelve millions. The law came before the general term of the Supreme Court in the Second district at which I was then sitting, and it was there pronounced by us unanimously, to be unconstitutional. The proposition was then changed by the Legislature and submitted to the people for their approval. The promise was made then, or at least that was th very general acceptance of it, that when that improvement was made, no further improvement would be called for until the canal had paid for itself, and probably very many of those who voted in favor of it, voted upon that supposition. It seems however, that the friends of the canals are not satisfied with the extent to which this improvement is carried, but they wish to have still further improvement, and we cannot tell how far they intend to go. There has been a proposition that the locks in the canal should be very considerably improved at a very heavy expense, and there has also been a proposition that the canal should be deepened in such a manner as to enable it to transport goods much cheaper than they can now, that is, by using larger vessels, and if this proposition should be carried there is still another one behind which I think will be urged with equal zeal, and that is, that there should be a ship canal—a canal which can be navigated by steam, and by ships, and by vessels of war to the lake. I think we should, as far as in our power, put a stop to these propositions of improvement, until the canal has paid for itself. I am one of those who are very much opposed to extending the debt of the State. At present, it is very heavy, and I do not wish it to be extended by any project which may or may not be successful. The war has imposed a very heavy expenditure upon the State,—that expenditure has undoubtedly had a very beneficial effect, but the debt of the State is very large, and the taxation very heavy, and it bears very heavily upon the people. The proposition was mentioned yesterday, I think, by a gentleman, [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that there should be a new system of taxation in order that the tax upon real estate should not be as burdensome as it is now. A proposition was also made before the Legislature that personal property should be estimated upon its whole value, on the oath of the proprietor. To that I am also opposed. I do not believe it would have a beneficial effect. I believe it would impose a great weight of taxation upon the honest portion of the community, and that those who would give a fair estimate, would have to bear an undue proportion of the tax. There are many people who would probably give a false account, as we know that has been the case with regard to the internal revenue of the United States, where many have given accounts, that could not be relied upon and they thus have thrown the taxation upon the honest portion of the community. I should therefore be opposed to anything of that kind, or any proposition of that kind, if it should be brought before the Convention. We are told that the benefits of the canal have been very general; perhaps they have been, but they have not been universal, and I doubt very much whether the county which my friend from Rockland [Mr. Conger] represents has ever been benefited by it; and I doubt very much whether it has ever benefited the people of the county of Suffolk, in which I reside. I am under the impression, it has created rivals in the principal landholders in the interior of the State, and has had a tendency to reduce the price of the productions of their farms. Still, I would not oppose this matter upon any selfish consideration; I oppose it upon general principles. There is no question at all but that many of the projects which have found favor in the Legislature of our State have not been of the slightest benefit to the people of Long Island; and whenever any proposition is made for the benefit of the people of Long Island we have always been met by the charge that it was local, and therefore not a proper subject for general taxation. Perhaps it may be true, but that also applies to other projects which may be carried on by the State. The canal is, in some degree itself, a local object, and there are others which have met the approbation of the Legislature which are purely local. I think the case of the Susquehanna Railroad is one; the appropriation to that object is to be a subject of taxation and we have got to pay our proportion of the burden. What benefit is the Susquehanna Railroad to the people of Long Island? None, of course. Then, too, the extension of the Chenango Canal was another project of no kind of benefit to the people of Suffolk County, or Long Island, or the people of the City of New York. There are other projects which have been brought forward, which were certainly of a local character, for which we have to pay. I think, therefore, with regard to any project of the kind now under consideration we ought to pause; we ought not to give any encouragement to the Legislature to go on making extravagant appropriations for the Erie Canal. We are willing the canals should be kept in order; we are willing to pay our proportion of the expense which is necessary in the way of taxes to keep them in order; but we are not willing to go on and extend these canals, and extend them perhaps without any limitation whatever. The Legislature have generally acted upon the principle that might makes right, with regard to these appropriations; whereas, they should have acted upon the principle, directly the reverse of that, that right and right alone, gives might. For these reasons, sir, I feel inclined to oppose this reconsideration. I am not one of those who feel inclined to oppose this canal system entirely, I am willing that all appropriations should be made, that may be necessary without incurring a very serious and onerous debt, and without very heavy taxation upon those people who are not interested. As I have remarked, the people of Long Island have no very general interest in this question, nor have the people in the southern tier of counties. If the taxes are to be made heavier by it, we ought to hesitate before we give any encouragement to the idea.

Mr. PROSSER—I hope the motion for the reconsideration may prevail, and among the reasons why I think it ought to, is, first, the fact that the Finance Committee will still have under its charge a sufficiently large amount of work. The duty of considering whether or not the legislative powers shall be restricted in relation to taxation, can hardly fail, if the subject is wisely considered, to consume some very considerable time of that committee; and, secondly, I think this motion ought to prevail, because the subject-matter of the canals in their entirety is quite sufficient to consume also a large portion of the time of any seven or nine, or fifteen gentlemen of this body for some weeks, without having anything else under their charge. For these reasons, sir, I hope, without going into detail upon them, that this motion may prevail, and the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], may also prevail. It seems to me that the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], who has addressed the Convention, has undertaken somewhat to limit the powers of this Convention, so far as the fundamental law is concerned, in what they may do, and do wisely, with reference to our canals, without trenching upon or interfering with the province of the Legislature. For in the existing Constitution it is provided they shall have the disposition of the revenues entirely, and say what shall be done with them. I do not perceive, why this Convention may not come to the conclusion to legislate somewhat in the same direction for the future. I think they wisely may without going at all beyond their province. The subject matter of what may be reported from some other committee on this subject is not now properly up. When any committee shall report, if they do, that some improvement ought to be made, or some further disbursement should be made on some of our canals, or several of them, it will be time to consider the subject when that committee shall have shown the necessity for it, and that the means are forthcoming, without taxing the people of this State.. Unless both of these things can be shown, and very clearly shown, they certainly cannot have my vote for any further improvement of the canal. There has been so much said upon the subject, that I will not trespass upon the Convention any further, except to reiterate that I trust this motion may prevail and that the substitute may also be adopted.

Mr. ANDREWS—Mr. President: I do not propose at this late stage of the discussion to obtrude upon this Convention any extended remarks upon the subject under consideration. But, sir, I desire to refer in the first place, to the suggestion which has been made by the honorable Chairman of the Committee [Mr. Harris], who made this report, to the effect that it was not the proper duty or province of a convention like this, to pass upon and definitely determine as to the policy or propriety of the improvement of our canals, but that that matter, after this Convention should provide the ways and means, should be left to the discretion and control of the Legislature. Such, sir, has not been the view of the duties of Constitutional Conventions in this State in the past; because the Convention of 1846, which adopted the Constitution under which we are now living, definitely fixed and determined the policy of the enlargement of the canals, leaving it simply to the Legislature to direct as to the manner and as to the application of the moneys which may be received from the surplus revenues of the canals; and the amendment passed in 1853 extended by peremptory statement, the obligation further to enlarge not only the original canal mentioned in the Constitution, but other lateral canals, which were embraced in the provisions of that amendment. But, sir, it seems to me, aside from the precedent which the Convention of 1846 sets before this Convention, it is eminently proper that a Constitutional Convention like this, in rearranging and reconstructing the structure of our government, should itself determine the policy and the propriety of the extension and the improvement of our public works, upon which the glory and the prosperity of our State, in a great degree, in the past has depended. And, sir, the discussion of the merits of the question of enlargement, here, is, to my mind, entirely proper and appropriate, as a means of suggesting to this Convention the large and weighty considerations bearing upon the consideration of the subject, which is by this amendment withdrawn from the consideration of this Committee upon Finance. I, for one, have no definite and fixed views as to the policy of the State in respect to the enlargement of the Erie canal. I come here for the purpose of listening to gentlemen more intelligent than myself, upon that subject, then acting as I may, under the obligation of the oath, with such views and such light as I may have, in accordance with what seems to me to be calculated to promote the interests and the honor of our people. Now, sir, this subject, in my judgment, is weighty enough to call for its consideration by a separate and distinct committee, while if this subject shall be withdrawn from the consideration of Committee No. 9, it will leave that Committee also a vast field of labor and reflection, because it will continue to be possessed of some of the most important subjects which will come before this Convention for consideration. The subject of finance, and the related subjects of assessment and taxation, are alone of themselves sufficient to engross the attention of an able and numerous committee during a good share of the session of this body. I am for meeting this question of the enlargement of the canals fairly and squarely by this Convention, when it shall be possessed, through its proper committees, of all the light and of all the knowledge which can be furnished bearing upon the consideration of this question, and to that end it seems to me eminently proper and appropriate that a separate and distinct committee should be raised for this purpose. If my reading serves me, the question of finance was not the one upon which the determination of the question of the original construction of the canals turned. In my judgment, it is not the only question, though an important one, upon which that subject should be determined here.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I did not intend to say another word upon this subject. I should not have risen again had not the honorable gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] fallen into what I think is a very grave error, and into which I fear the majority of the Convention will fall if the amendment proposed is passed. The error is this: in supposing that the Constitution of 1846 provided for the enlargement of the canals, or that the great question discussed there was the question of enlargement. Mr. President, the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], the Chairman of the Committee of Sixteen, has stated the position rightly. The Constitutional Convention of 1846 found a large debt existing which had been cast upon the State by reason of and in consequence of the canals. The whole question that came up there was as to the mode and means for the payment of that debt. Hence the provision contained in Article 7, of the Constitution, which provided that the revenues of the canal should be applied in the future to meet that debt. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that you cannot separate the discussion of this question from the question of finance any more than the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] could do. He could not speak at all without considering the matter in its financial aspect. No gentleman has uttered three sentences without discussing the question in a financial point of view. No two committees can be appointed, as proposed, without their soon running in the same rut, and discussing the financial question. I think the great question which the Convention has to consider is the care and the management of the property which the State has got, as well as the enlargement of it in the future. I do not believe any gentleman will rise on the floor of this Convention, and say on his responsibility as a member of the Convention, that he is opposed to the enlargement of the canals. We are all in favor of it. We are all agreed in the sentiments that have been uttered with so much eloquence in reference to the greatness, and the glory, and renown, and lustre that has been shed upon the State by our canal system. No one holds in more honored remembrance than myself the memory of that noble man, the father of the honorable gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton], to whom we are indebted for this great work of internal improvement. But, sir, unless there is proper care and management of the canals—unless the revenues that come into the coffers of the State are properly applied, the work of enlargement will not progress as gentlemen suppose it will in the future. Therefore, it is, that I desire there shall be a Committee on the Care and Management of the Canals, a committee which, if it does its duty, will have all that it can do during the session of the Convention to prepare and report, a plan by which the revenues of the State shall be honestly, fairly, and equitably distributed. It is because I believe that committee will have all it can do, if it is appointed as recommended by the Committee of Sixteen, that I sustain the report, and hope it will be adopted. And I venture the prediction that if the other course is pursued, gentlemen who vote in that way now will have occasion to regret it in the future.

Mr. CURTIS—Mr. President: There can be no doubt, as the gentleman who has preceded me [Mr. Hutchins] has remarked, that the question of the canals and the question of finance are intimately related. Whether the canals shall be sold, whether they shall be enlarged or whether they shall be retained in their present dimensions, are equally questions of finance. It seems to me that he, in common with several gentlemen who have spoken, has forgotten this very important point, that the principle which has governed the report of the Committee is a principle which fully justifies voting in affirmation on the proposition offered by the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Folger]. Entertaining as I do, in common, I presume, with every other gentleman in the Convention, a great respect for the eminent ability of the Committee of Sixteen, I was disposed, as confidently as upon the other matters recommended by them, to support, this part of their report. The Chairman of that Committee, if I am not mistaken, informed the Convention that the report was substantially unanimous. That of itself was of very great weight with an inexperienced member of the Convention, like myself. But when the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger,] brought forward a proposition so radical in its character, and which in its nature was consistent with the principle of the report, I waited with curiosity to hear the defence of the report by the Chairman of the Committee [Mr. Harris] in so far as it differed from the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario, [Mr. Folger]. But I have failed throughout the whole discussion yesterday to understand the reason which persuaded the Committee of Sixteen to make the report they have submitted. I have also failed this morning to understand the conclusive character of their reasons from the observations that have fallen from the Chairman of that Committee [Mr. Harris]. The question before us is not a question of the enlargement of the canals. It is not a question of the finances of the State. It is simply a question of the distribution of business; a question of the convenience of the Convention, and how this Convention will most conveniently address itself to the great subject laid before it. When that is determined, we shall be prepared to take up the various subject matters before us. Now in referring to the report of the Committee of Sixteen, I find that very great and substantial interests of this State are by it referred to separate committees. No gentleman will assert that there is any greater interest which the State has than the interest of the canals; but as yet, I confess, I fail to understand why a distinction is made between the canals and the other great interests of the State that will be involved in our deliberations. That they involve matters of finance is true, but every other interest which also involves matters of finance is referred to a separate committee. That being true, and the canal being so great an interest, why should it not have a committee also? I do not in the least, in supporting the substitute of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], commit myself to the policy of the enlargement of the canals, and no gentleman who votes intelligently on the subject would vote except with a view to the convenience of the Convention. When I am told that this is a test vote, I decline to accept the interpretation. I presume many gentlemen in the Convention, like myself, are not yet informed of the propriety and justice of the various canal policies discussed in this State, and will await the report of the Committee on Canals to know whether it is proper for the canals to be enlarged, or retained, or sold. And in saying so, I presume I speak the sentiments of many gentlemen in the Convention. I shall, therefore, vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], without in the least committing myself to the question of canal enlargement.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—Mr. President: The prevailing view of this Convention will undoubtedly be based upon a desire to give to the friends of every great measure which shall come up before it, a preponderating vote in the committee to which it shall be referred. But I consider that no vote upon this question will control any gentleman's action when the Convention shall take up and act upon the subject of the enlargement of the canals. At the proper time, if nobody else makes the suggestion, I shall move that there be also appointed a committee on the subject of railroads to consider the general interests of the State as affected by them. The railroad interest of our State amounts to over a hundred millions of dollars, and they, to a degree, affect the revenues of the canals. In the Convention of 1846, as I know from personal observation, the consideration of these questions finally came down to a question of dollars and cents. At that time, I learned from personal investigation that a barrel of flour could be transported from Buffalo to Albany, either direct or via Oswego, for nineteen cents, exclusive of canal tolls. And it was then a financial question as to how far the tolls went to make the freight amount to fifty cents a barrel which was then charged. In the earlier days of the Legislature of 1840 and 1841, as I recollect, this question of the ability of railroads to carry freight in competition with canals was discussed at length, and it was claimed then, by the railroad interest, that the period would arrive when property would be transported cheaper by rail than by any other mode. When in Europe in 1845, by intercourse with a member of the British Government who was specially charged with the care of the railroads—

Mr. VAN COTT—I rise to a question of order. The question of railroads is in no way before this Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken; though I believe the gentleman did connect his remarks with the finances of the State.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—The gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] who first introduced this question has produced a pamphlet, the authorship of which is attributed to him, in which he admits that the present capacity of the Erie Canal is much more than adequate for the business that has been presented to it. If I have not correctly quoted his statement in this regard, the gentleman will correct me. Therefore, any action of this body looking toward to the enlargement of the Erie canal, should refer to a distant future. If we should go on with this consideration (without any regard to the resolution which I introduced as to whether this Convention has been constitutionally called or not, and it appears to be the sentiment of the Convention that it has been), I shall, at some future day, propose that the restriction in the present Constitution upon sale of the canals, shall be modified or removed. If this whole subject shall be referred to a canal committee, I trust they will institute a correspondence with officials in the State of Pennsylvania, which State has sold its canals for fifteen millions of dollars, to ascertain what is the solid judgment of the community there with reference to that transaction. The sale of our canals certainly has got one feature which commends itself, and that is, it would relieve the State of the responsibility of patronage, which is always an injurious element in the exercise of a legitimate State Government. I agree with all that has been said by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], as to the immensity of our State debt and its gigantic proportions. I agree with the gentleman, that allowing $500,000,000 as our proportion of the indebtedness of the United States, that the present amount of our public obligations, State and National, with the amount due from towns and counties, wrings from the productive energies of the State of New York nearly $100,000,000 per annum. Allowing the amount of the revenues from our canals to be $4,000,000 in specie, they are a mere bagatelle contrasted with the amount of our annual taxation, they being as one to twenty-five of the whole amount that the labor of this State has to contribute yearly. I shall cheerfully vote for the reconsideration, and also for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], as I consider the question distinct from the proposition that was offered by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch].

Mr. SMITH—Mr. President: I rise, not for the purpose of extending this discussion, but mainly to protest against the idea that the vote which I gave on this question yesterday and which I may give on the question of reconsideration, shall be considered as any pledge on my part, or any intimation as to the manner in which I am to vote when the question shall be finally put to this Convention on the subject of canal enlargement. I feel in regard to it, as has been well expressed by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews], that we came here for the purpose of discussion, to get light upon the merits of the question; and when the subject shall have been presented in the reports of the proper committees and fully discussed, then to vote as I may feel bound to, under the solemnity of the oath that I have taken. But I do not, with all due respect to the experience and ability of those gentlemen who have intimated that the committee to be appointed here must be favorable to any particular measure, perceive that such an idea is applicable here. It seems to me, that in this Convention we have no measures in the sense in which that term is used in the Legislature. Permit me to call the attention of the Convention for one moment to the language used by the Committee at the commencement of their report. They say that, "while in their opinion, there are some, perhaps many, parts of the Constitution which need no alteration, yet, as the whole fabric of the fundamental law of the State has been committed to this Convention, with instructions to examine it and propose for the consideration of the people such amendments as it may be thought to require, the Committee have deemed it their duty to recommend the examination of all the provisions of the Constitution by appropriate committees." This does assume that there may be no investigation needed in regard to many matters. I understand the object of appointing committees to be merely to arrange business for the convenience of the action of this body. Whether they will recommend action in any particular direction or not we cannot now anticipate. Therefore, it seems to me, it should not be assumed by our vote on this question, that we vote in favor or against any particular policy; nor does it seem to me that the committees here to be appointed are to be appointed with reference to the views of its members upon any particular questions of policy that may come before this Convention, for I think we are not to know, and cannot know at this stage of our proceedings, what questions may be presented, or in what form they may be presented, or how we may be inclined to act upon them when they come before this Convention.

Mr. VAN COTT—I quite agree with the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis], that the question involved in this report and in the proposed substitute, is a question of the convenience of the Convention and the distribution of its business. If the gentlemen who support the substitute had been contented to confine the discussion here to that question, I should have been quite satisfied with it, and would have been very willing to be convinced that a different distribution from that recommended by the committee was required by the convenience of the Convention. But the debate which has taken place for a large part of two days has gone largely beyond the question propounded by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis]. I would have been very glad if the gentleman himself, after having so lucidly stated what the real question was, had undertaken with the same lucidity of expression to have shown how the convenience of the Convention in the distribution of its business could be facilitated by the proposed substitute. The burden of proof certainly is upon him, and upon others who agree with him in support of the substitute, to show that the committee, which has had this subject under consideration, and which has considered the question of distribution among the committees with reference to this question of convenience, have misconceived on that subject, and to show that the change is required by the convenience of the Convention. Sir, all that we have had on this subject in the dropping fire of debate for many hours, has been the incidental remarks that the subjects committed by sub-division 9 to a committee of sixteen members would be quite beyond the powers of such a committee to consider and properly dispose of; that although it is double in force to the average number of members of the other committees, yet they quite transcend the capacity of any such committee, and therefore the subject should be divided and referred to two committees. That is all that has been said on the subject of convenience. On that subject, let me say that, the question is whether the subjects in sub-division 9 are related to each other so that they are properly considered together, or are they so distinct that they may be more conveniently considered separate from each other? Now what are the subjects? They are the revenues of the State; the debt of the State; the finances of the State and the canals are specifically named, because they are supposed to have a very close relation to this general subject of finance for which this committee is to be raised. Now what relation has the canals to the finances of the State? What are the real questions in difference between those who support the report of the Committee of Sixteen, and those who support the substitute proposed. I conceive, Sir, that the two subjects constitute but one question before this Convention. The same principle which underlies this report we find in the Constitution itself. There is one provision in the Constitution relating to the State officers who have the care and management of the canals, and here the management of the canals is referred to a distinct committee under subdivision

No. 10. Then, there is a provision in the Constitution relating to the finances of the State, as connected with the canals. And here we have in subdivision 9, a committee which is to consider the finances of the State. Now, what is the difference between members of the Convention on the subject of the canals? The discussion has proceeded upon the assumption that there is some party in the State opposed to the enlargement of the canals. Sir, if there is any such party in this State, I have never heard of it. If there is any such party in this Convention, I have yet to see the evidence of it. Some one, it is said, in Plutarch, if I remember rightly, once indulged in a long and tedious panegyric of Aristides. The person who was its recipient, naturally asked the question, "What have I said against Aristides that I should be made to listen to a long discourse in his praise?" Sir, what has the Committee of Sixteen and what has any one in this Convention said against the general proposition of a canal enlargement? What New Yorker, native born or adopted, would lay his hand upon the great canal interest of this State to mar it? What citizen of New York, native or adopted would arrest the progress of that great improvement? Sir, I believe there is no man in this Convention who will have brass enough in his face to stand up on this floor and express his disapproval of an enlargement of the canals. There is no such party, and I believe there is no such member of this Convention. What, sir, is the question before the people of this State, and what will be the question before this Convention? Purely a financial question—purely a question of the ability to enlarge the canals—purely a question of time and mode. When shall we be able? How shall we be able? Through what financial resources or effort or expedient shall we be able to enlarge our canals? Now, sir, it seems to me that very serious injustice has been done to the Committee of Sixteen, upon this subject, in the course of the debate on this and the previous day, not so much from what has been said, as from what is to be implied from the course of debate. An attempt has been made to array the friends of the canals against the report of the committee, upon the assumption that the Committee of Sixteen are opposed to the canals, and have therefore made a provision in the recommendation for standing committees somehow or other, to suppress the subject of the canals—and that the friends of the canals and the canal interests would be indicated in this vote, ranging themselves in opposition to the recommendations of the committee. Sir, that assumption is utterly without foundation. I happened to be a member of that committee, and I made it my business, as I thought it my duty, before going into the committee, to make a very careful analysis of the Constitution, to see the subjects there to be dealt with by the Convention, and to prepare, as did most of the members of the committee, a programme of committees to be recommended to this body; and it was a part of my programme, as it was a part of the programme of other gentlemen to constitute a distinct committee on the subject of the canals. But I was convinced, by my colleagues in the committee, that such a distinct committee, except for the management of the canals, was not proper; that the only question in reference to the canals, outside of their care and management, was the question of enlargement, and that their enlargement was a topic of finance, and it was therefore thought proper to bring the subject of the canals, except as to their care and management, and the subject of finance together; and that was the ground—the intimate relations of the two subjects—which induced the recommendation that they go to a single committee. I say that, looking upon this subject as a matter of convenience, and a proper distribution of the business, it is purely a question of finance. If gentlemen will discriminate—if they will attend to what has been carefully said upon the floor—they will see that members have not been able to approach the subject of enlarging the canals without discussing the financial question. My friend the professor, [Mr. T. W. Dwight] in referring to the subject, at once launched out upon the question of finance and the ability of the State to go on with that work. He suggested that $300,000 of the surplus revenues that went to the general fund, and $250,000 that went to the support of the State government, could be taken for the enlargement. He says if you take this surplus revenue devoted to those objects, and appropriate it to the enlargement of the canals, you may complete the enlargement in a little while. But does not the gentleman see that when he has taken $300,000 from the general fund and $250,000 from the support of the government, a new source of revenue must be opened to supply the $300,000 to the general fund and $250,000 for the support of the State government? Does not the gentleman see that the moment he touches the subject he gets upon financial ground, and that he creates a necessity for other sources of revenue, the moment he undertakes to divert the surplus revenues of the canals? Does he not see that if he diverts those sums from those objects, he is obliged to suggest new sources whence to supply the deficiency? Therefore, it is, that the ways and means for enlarging the canals, are part and parcel of the general question of the financial resources of the State. The State debt, its revenues, its financial ability in the way of credit, the ability of the State to raise revenues by way of taxation—all these are a part of the subject of finance. The whole subject is complicated. We shall never deal with the subject of enlargement without treating the whole subject of finance as a unity. Therefore, Mr. President, it was that the committee brought these two subjects together. And now, I would ask my friends on the other side, how they propose to deal with this subject of canals? There are two ways of dealing with it. There may be two classes of opinion on the subject. I think there are from what I have seen. One is to enlarge the canals as soon as we can—as soon as we are able to do it, and the other is a thick and thin unconditional enlargement of the canals. And if the gentlemen who support this amendment will avow themselves so that we can understand what they mean by taking away this subject of the enlargement from the subject of finance, so that it may be considered abstractly as a thing very desirable, as fruit of which we may eat and grow wise—if they will present the subject in that way, very well; we will understand them. But if they mean what we mean, that we are to enlarge the canal as soon as we are able to enlarge it, and will consider with us what is our ability to enlarge it, then we are united on the subject of the canal enlargement. I would like to know their convictions. I submit that we cannot separate the question of enlargement from the question of ways and means. It is like the question of the enlargement of the family. I think that when you come to the question of the enlargement of the family, the husband and wife must consider it together. [Laughter.] I think that the physiologist and doctor would tell us that it would be very convenient in attending to the distribution of the subject. [Laughter]. Finances are the forces of the State by which it builds its works, and they cannot be separated from it. The only question is whether we shall take up the subject in a fragmentary manner and get it into muddle and confusion, or whether a committee, double in force, consisting of sixteen members, shall deal with it as a unity, and report their conclusions to the Convention for its judgment.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Van Cott], who has just sat down, has succeeded in finding a grievance. It is a grievance that the members of this Convention should differ with a committee of the Convention who have made a report.

Mr. VAN COTT—I beg to assure the gentleman that he is utterly mistaken so far as I am concerned.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I do not thus understand my duty in this Convention. With all deference to this committee or any other committee, that shall make a report to this body, I suppose it is my duty to go according to my own convictions, the report of the committee notwithstanding. Now, sir, I see that gentlemen upon this floor are anxious to close this debate. I sympathize with them in feeling that the debate has been very considerably protracted. But, sir, I cannot sit still and hear the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Van Cott] charge substantially upon me and those who vote with me, a determination to vote through thick and thin for the enlargement of the canals without reference to the financial position of the State. It seems to me to be forgotten by the gentleman that the Constitution is designed to stand more days than the days of the year, and that the Constitution which we shall frame, if it shall be adopted by the people of the State, will last for at least twenty years in all probability, and that the instrument which we form should be so formed as to meet the exigencies that are likely to arise during that period. Now the gentleman has told us substantially that this is a mere financial question. I protest that it is not a mere financial question. Were it a mere financial question we might rest upon the figures called for by the motion the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], which will show every penny of the receipts every penny of the disbursements, not for the Erie canal, but for the lateral canals when they shall be presented to this body. But, sir, we need something more. I trust we shall have something in this body from some committee. The gentleman says that every man in the city of New York is in favor of the enlargement of the Erie canal. I am happy to hear it stated, because from remarks that have been made in debate here, I began to fear, at least, that there was a feeling of modified favor felt towards the canals in the minds of some gentlemen representing that part of the State. Now, sir, I protest here that no vote cast upon this subject shall commit me, at this stage of our deliberations, either in favor of an enlargement of the canal, or in favor of any particular mode of enlargement. Sir, if we are to have an enlargement of the canal, we ought to know the reason why. My mind has not reached the advanced stage of the mind of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris]. He tells us that the object of this report was for the purpose of specially providing means for the enlargement of the canal, and that this measure ought to go to the Committee on Finance. I want to know what reasons there are for the enlargement of the canals. I want to know what reasons there are why the canal should not be enlarged. I want to know the influence of the canals upon various portions of this State, and to that end I want a report from some committee. If it be true, as has been intimated, that the great commercial metropolis has no such interest in this question, and that the taxes drawn from that metropolis and vicinity are a mere burden upon that part of the State, I want to know it. I want to know from somebody whether these floating cities, which I see upon the Hudson river, moving down with so much momentum toward the commercial capital, are carrying pestilence to New York, or are carrying a blight upon its prosperity, or whether they do favorably affect its interests. If it be true that the mercantile interests of the city of New York have been stimulated by our canal system, then, sir, I want to know whether the building up of that city has caused an increase in the wealth of the county of Richmond, from which the gentleman [Mr. E. Brooks] comes who has spoken here upon this subject, and whether any of its growth and prosperity has crawled out upon the shores of the county of Suffolk, and whether with the taxation upon property in the county of Suffolk there has been no increase in its prosperity by reason of the creation of the Erie canal. I want some report upon that subject. And, sir, there is another subject on which I want a report. I understand sir, that in the North west there is a select people who have gone forth from our loins, aye, very select in intelligence and enterprise, who are represented in our National Congress side by side with the people of the State of New York. The twelve millions of people now there, in the next census, will hold a preponderating power as against us that will be overwhelming. I want to know what will be the effect upon the interests of the State of New York, if we should feel ourselves constrained to stand still and leave those men to find by the best means in their power a highway to the ocean. I want some one to talk to me on that subject. I want it in black and white in the report of some committee. I know that there has been but just postponed now, by the National Congress, a proposition to make a canal around the Falls of Niagara,—a ship canal. I want to know what effect such a measure as that would have upon the prosperity of this State—not upon the receipts and disbursements of this State, but upon its wealth and prosperity and upon the wealth and prosperity of its commercial capital. I want to know if that project fails, what chance there is that the commerce of the great West will be sent down through the St. Lawrence to the ocean; and if the commerce of the West is neither to seek the St. Lawrence nor seek the lower lakes by way of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara, I want to know whether that energetic people will not put their shoulders to the wheel, and again push their way to the Gulf of Mexico as in the Providence of God we have seen them do once, side by side with the sons of New York, over the necks of a rebellious people. I want to know something on this subject. But, forsooth, this body is asked to treat it as a matter of dollars and cents,—as a question of finance alone. Of course it will be a financial question in the end. The question will come up whether we have the ability to do it—but the question first to be considered is whether the canal should be enlarged at all. Is it worth making the effort? Is it of sufficient importance to incur the expense, to vote for the necessary taxation or incur the liability needful to do it. The question of the importance of these canals is a question of their influence. It has been said to me this morning in speaking of the influence of the canals that in the Fall of 1866, the amount realized for the apples raised in the county of Orleans was more than the entire value of the fee simple of the land in that county, when the Erie canal was constructed through it. I want to know some of these facts. When the gentleman from Suffolk [Mr. Strong,] said that he did not consider the Southern tier of counties interested in the canals, he failed to remember that we have something more than the Erie canal. The gentleman forgot that we have lateral canals which extend from the Erie canal and ramify to the Southern tier, and add value to the lands there and increase its commercial prosperity. If the gentleman will go and see the business that is done on those lateral canals, he will come to the conclusion that the Southern tier of counties is interested. Sir, we have to-day between eight and nine hundred miles of canals. But forsooth, eight or nine hundred miles of canals, better than any country on the habitable globe possesses, seem not to be of sufficient importance to justify the raising of a committee for the consideration of that valuable interest to the State. Sir, I do not so understand the statesmanship that should control this State. It was not the feeling of our fathers, and it should not, in my opinion, be the feeling to-day. It is an interest vital to the continued prosperity of our State. At any rate, we should like to have a committee on this subject. I differ with the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck], as to the duty of the Chair to appoint a committee in favor of any particular project. I hope if such a com-

Mr. BELL—I simply rise to say that I entirely approve of the object of this amendment. My experience has convinced me that it is a subject which should be taken into consideration and thoroughly reviewed by a proper committee of this Convention. The amounts that we have appropriated yearly to these charitable and eleemosynary institutions are very considerable and they are increasing rapidly from year to year. It is a very nice question to know exactly how far the State should go in support of public charities, and what should be required of the particular friends of these institutions and of the counties in which they are located. I had it in my mind to offer a proposition providing for a committee of that kind, but inasmuch as it has been offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], I shall heartily support it.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—In one of the early days of our session, I offered a resolution upon this subject, that there should be a standing committee appointed to take into consideration the superintendence and visitation of our charitable institutions. What led me to offer that resolution were circumstances like these: It is well known that these charitable bequests are regarded in the law as public uses, and are the only property which are now to be held in perpetuity. They, therefore, are eminently fit for the consideration of a body which has a regard to public interests. Now, sir, this subject has excited vast interest in other countries as well as in our own. In England it became necessary in the year 1820 to take into consideration the whole subject of charitable institutions. The reports at that time on the subject which were made by the commissioners appointed, embraced nearly forty large folio volumes. And the commissioners found it necessary to go to each point in the country where charitable institutions existed, and to examine into their condition and history, and report upon them. The investigation was made, and the results excited so much interest that a permanent Board of Commissioners was appointed. Sir, in the course of time, this same class of questions has arisen in this country, and I believe that we shall soon find the same difficulties here. These institutions being perpetual, there will, naturally, be committed breaches of trust. There should be such a care and control over trust funds that the funds shall be sacredly applied to the objects for which they were bestowed. There is another consideration which belongs here. Gentlemen of the legal profession know that the whole doctrine of charities in the State of New York is now involved in uncertainty. It is not now clear whether a person can give by will, for example, to trustees, any property to be held for charitable uses. It is even doubtful whether Mr. Peabody could, in the State of New York, have made a gift to trustees, or whether the Sanitary Commission or Christian Commission could have held funds under the laws of this State for the praiseworthy purposes for which they were bestowed; or whether if one of them had died his interest in the property would not have gone to his own personal representatives. Now, it seems to me, that this subject should be put under regulation and control, and that the State should say whether they will permit these charitable gifts to be made or not. Here is another consideration, sir, which is appropriate here. There was a bill presented last winter in the Legislature providing that any person who chose to make a gift for a charitable purpose, and it should be considered lawful by a Judge of the Supreme Court, should be assured that it was secured from loss by a payment of it into the State Treasury, so that the State could take the funds and pay over the interest from time to time for the support of the charitable object. Whether that is a proper course to pursue or not, I do not know. But, sir, it certainly is a question worthy of consideration. This point, in my opinion, ought to be brought before this Convention, whether it is not necessary that the State should take control of these institutions. Another point which is exciting a great deal of interest is the bestowal of charitable funds upon corporations, and the limitation of that right, and the proper visitation or care of the funds after such bestowal has been made. It seems to me that there are abundant reasons upon these various grounds why there should be such an investigation as is called for by the proposition of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks]. A friend of mine in this Convention, Judge Comstock, collated, several years ago, with great fullness, a list of the corporations in this State, of a charitable nature. I am sure it would utterly astonish the members of this Convention if that document should be read before them to see the number of charitable institutions we have in operation and the importance of their objects, and the amount of funds there is under their control. Yet they are under no supervision, under no care. They are left to manage the funds as they please, and there were complaints last winter in a New York paper that the funds of a certain charitable institution were perverted. I do not say anything in reference to the correctness of the statement; but it was published as a fact, that the funds of an institution ostensibly for the support and care of the orphans of soldiers, were really used for the private purposes of the party who had charge of the institution. That ought to be looked into, and the time has come in this State for the organization of some authority which shall take charge of the charitable institutions, and see that they carry out the provisions for which they were designed.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I would like to change the phraseology of my amendment. I would suggest that the subdivision I propose should read "on Public Charities."

Mr. HALE—I wish merely to inquire of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] whether the subject suggested by him does not fall within the province of Committee No. 3, as provided for by the Committee of Sixteen "on the powers and duties of the Legislature except as to matters otherwise referred." I do not know that there is any objection to having a distinct committee on the subject. I suppose that probably the idea of the Committee of Sixteen was that this subject would fall within the purview of this committee.

Mr. STRONG—I wish to make a remark on the subject of this motion. The resolution of the gentleman is not broad enough, if it is passed, to meet that this committee, the omnium gatherum committee upon all the balance of corporations, are to have very little to do. Why, sir, the Legislature of this State have about one-quarter of the time of their whole session consumed on this question of railroad corporations, and nine-tenths of all the hard things that are said against our Legislature are said in relation to questions growing out of the applications here for railroad corporations, doubtless unadvisedly said against our legislators, but at the same time they are said; and if there is corruption in the Legislature of this State; if there is money used for any purpose here to affect legislation, that money is raised in the interest of railroad corporations. It is the duty of this Convention to provide some way by which the Legislature of this State shall not be tempted, even upon the subject of applications for railroad corporations.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Stratton, and it was declared lost. There being no further amendments, paragraph 14 was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read paragraph 15.

Mr. GOULD—The subject of State prisons is certainly one which is very interesting to the people of the State, and it is obvious that it is only a part of a whole series of provisions intended for the security of life and property. I intend to propose an amendment to this paragraph which shall cover all collateral subjects and bring them before the view of the committee. It is obvious, sir, that we have also a system of penitentiaries in this State, and in those penitentiaries there are as many persons incarcerated as there are in the State prisons—between two and three thousand persons in all. Then there are our common jails. There are between seventy or eighty thousand persons passing through our jails every year. Then again, sir, I believe it is very possible so to organize the social forces of the State, that we may be able to prevent a great mass of crime, if the frame work and foundation for such legislation shall be laid in the fundamental law of the State, and, therefore, with the view of bringing in this whole important subject which, as is in no other part of this distribution met at all, I offer the following amendment:

Amend subdivision 15 by striking out the words "on State Prisons," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on the prevention and punishment of crime."

Mr. VAN CAMPEN moved to amend the proposed substitute so as to read, "on State prisons and the prevention and punishment of crime."

Mr. GOULD—I accept the amendment.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Gould as modified, and it was declared adopted.

There being no further amendments, paragraph 15 was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read paragraphs Nos. 16, 17 and 18, and there being no objection thereto, they were declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read paragraph 19.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I move to insert as subdivision 19 a new Committee on charitable bequests.

Sir, I think the Convention, if they will reflect a moment upon the very large amount of money appropriated in this State for charities will see the propriety of a committee like this. I think the Chairman of the Committee of Sixteen if he will recall for a moment the large amount of money we expend from year to year for the deaf and dumb, blind, insane and idiotic, and for the new charitable institutions which are instituted at Ovid and at Poughkeepsie on the Hudson, and various other charities, he will see the propriety of having a separate committee on this subject. Let me read from the book before me the amount of money that has been expended in the State for the last ten years.

Now, sir, it seems to me there is not a more important subject for the consideration of the Convention, among the many subjects that will come up for consideration, than the subject of charitable bequests, and I hope that the suggestion for such a committee will meet with the approval of the Chairman of the Committee of Sixteen, [Mr. Harris].

The PRESIDENT—What is the amendment of the gentleman from Richmond, [Mr. E. Brooks].

Mr. E. BROOKS—It is to amend subdivision 19, so that it will provide for a Committee on Charitable bequests, and let the present subdivision 19 be subdivision 20.

Mr. HARRIS—I concur with the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] in the importance of the subject to which he has referred. It cannot be exceeded in importance by any other thing, perhaps, connected with human welfare. But I am at a loss to conceive how the Constitutional Convention has anything to do with it. What constitutional provision can we make in reference to these great charities? It seems to me it is a subject we have nothing to do with in framing a constitution, and that is the objection I have to it. It is not within the province of our duty.

Mr. E. BROOKS—One word in reply to the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris]. It certainly is in our power to provide a State Board, to take control of these institutions. We impose upon the Legislature the performance of certain duties in reference to these great charities; we certainly are not trenching upon the Legislature in doing service like this. As I have said already, and as the Chairman of the Committee concedes, it is a subject of vast importance. You have got a Committee on State prisons and the prevention of crime. It seems to me as much a duty of this Convention to have a committee on the great charities of this State as to have a committee on State prisons—at least that is my judgment.

Mr. BELL—I simply rise to say that I entirely approve of the object of this amendment. My experience has convinced me that it is a subject which should be taken into consideration and thoroughly reviewed by a proper committee of this Convention. I suppose that probably the idea of the Committee of Sixteen was that this subject would fall within the purview of this committee.

Mr. STRONG—I wish to make a remark on the subject of this motion. The resolution of the gentleman is not broad enough, if it is passed, to meet the exigencies of the occasion. It should be a committee on charitable relations, which would include bequests of personal property and devises of real estate. I suppose the case of Williams against Williams which was instituted by myself when at the bar, was the first that went before the Court of Appeals, and in that case it was decided that the statute did not apply to charitable bequests, and it was intimated that the statute of uses and trusts did not apply to devises of real estate, and that the statute to prevent perpetuity did not apply. But since that time, there have been two decisions of the Court of Appeals overruling the doctrine in the case of Williams against Williams, and the law is now settled, and does not require any constitutional provision.

Mr. MASTEN—I understand the law to be well settled now that the only way in which a public charity can be created in perpetuity, is by the creation of a corporation under authority of some legislative act. I therefore would prefer the language suggested in the resolution offered by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight,] which would include the creation and visitation of public and private charities.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I think the modification covers the whole subject, so far as it is necessary for the consideration of a committee. I have no objection to any amendment which will accomplish the object in view. It seems to me that the words, "public charities" do not accomplish that object. I accept "charities" instead of public charities. That seems to cover everything that I have in view.

Mr. BELL—It occurs to me, after all, that it would be better to amend by having it "charities and charitable institutions." Would not that accomplish the object? I would ask the mover to amend by substituting those words.

Mr. BROOKS—I assent to the modification.

The question was then put on the amendment, and it was declared carried.

Mr. DUGANNE—I respectfully call from the table the resolution which I introduced yesterday.

The PRESIDENT—The motion of the gentleman is not now in order.

Mr. DUGANNE—Then I offer it as an additional committee to take the place of Committee No. 19—an additional committee in industrial interests, to which shall be referred all memorials, petitions, and other matters appertaining to the rights and claims of labor.

The PRESIDENT—This is hardly germane to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Richmond, [Mr. E. Brooks.] It is new matter.

Mr. DUGANNE—I beg leave to ask if it cannot be introduced as an amendment to the rule?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that it can.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope that the gentleman will not mix up his proposition with that which refers to public charities.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Duganne, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the 19th rule as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. DUGANNE—I now move that a new committee be authorized on industrial interests to which shall be referred all memorials, petitions and other matters appertaining to the rights and claims of labor.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that the proposition will not be adopted. There is no occasion, in my judgment, for such a committee. If my friend from New York [Mr. Duganne] has any particular views on the subject, any proposition he has to present may be referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights. That committee will need something to do. If he has any particular views on the subject of the rights of labor, let them go to that committee. I hope that course will be taken.

Mr. DUGANNE—I have no particular views, nor do I intend on my own volition to advance any particular views on the rights or claims of labor. But I do respectfully submit that the industrial interests of this State are to be considered as of as much importance in a Convention of the people as any private corporation or banking institution, or any other association or interest than that which is strictly popular. I have considered that it was best to wait until the last to offer this amendment, although in my estimation it is one of the first interests. The industrial interests of the State cover very wide grounds. I think they cover a great many movements which gentlemen are well aware of now in progress. We shall, probably, before we get through with our sessions, be in receipt of many communications with regard to the subject of labor, and its rights, and it is no more than respectful to the interests which I intended to be represented by that committee that such a committee should be appointed, to which shall be referred all respectful communications on the subject of labor, and its claims and rights. I certainly hope the subject will not be ignored, and that the sense of the Convention will be in favor of it.

Mr. CONGER—I would suggest to the mover of the resolution [Mr. Duganne], that it is unnecessary for him to add the latter clause of his proposition "to which shall be referred all matters," &c., because they will go as a matter of course to that committee. If he is willing to leave the proposition to raise a committee to take into consideration the question of industrial interests of the State, other than those referred to the committees provided in the previous paragraphs, he will embrace considerations that grow out of the interests of the agricultural community, and the mechanic arts also. And I agree with him in saying that those interests should receive consideration and attention from this Convention, without deviating from the proper objects for which we are convened. If he will accept that modification of his resolution I will support it, in order that we may have a committee which shall be known as a Committee on Industrial Interests, except those embraced in the previous subdivisions.

Mr. DUGANNE—I accept the modification.

Mr. BELL—I wish to inquire through the Chair if the committee took into consideration in its decision, the matter of the Salt Springs.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is not able to give the gentleman any information.

Mr. BELL—The State has a very large interest in the salines and salt springs of the State. There is a property therein, variously estimated at from four to ten millions of dollars, with a large revenue, and it should receive a proper consideration. If it is provided for by the committee in one of these subdivisions, I am content; otherwise I propose to offer an amendment moving for a distinct committee upon that subject.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I call for the reading of the ninth subdivision; I think that will cover this question. It was intended to cover all the property of the State, and if not, then it ought to be there somewhere.

Mr. BELL—I do not exactly understand the gentleman, and therefore I offer the following amendment:

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be to consider and report on the disposition, management, revenues and expenditures of the salt springs of the State.

Mr. CONGER—I would suggest to the mover of this resolution, that it would be more consistent with the plan upon which these committees are enumerated, and he would simplify it by making it No. 21 or 22 as the case may be, and have it read "No. 21. On the salt works of the State." If that meets the approbation of the gentleman, as I suppose it will, I will state very briefly, that as the Convention has by its last vote, separated from the consideration of the Finance Committee all the property of the State, except the salt works, and given a separate and independent committee to the canals, and to the State prisons and other public property of the State, it ought now, in consistency and in justice to itself, to give a committee to the only other remaining property of the State which has not been specified.

Mr. BELL—I am not particular what form this resolution shall take, neither am I strenuous that it shall be referred to a special or select committee, I only wish that the interests of the State may be protected, and that this large interest may be properly considered. If the gentleman prefers to put it in that form, I will accept it. It seems to me, that this reservation of the salt works is of sufficient importance, to be referred to a committee; and in saying that I have no desire to be a member of that committee, I simply desire that this interest may be examined and reported upon. In the present constitution, gentlemen will observe there is a constitutional provision with regard to the salt springs and the salt spring reservation, so that however the committees were arranged in the Convention of 1846, there was a report on that subject, and that subject was particularly and definitely set forth in the constitution. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Rockland. [Mr. Conger.]

The SECRETARY read the amendment as follows:

"No. 21. On the salt springs of the State."

The question being put on the amendment, it was declared adopted.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I would like now to call up my resolution in reference to the Indians of the State.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that it is not now in order.

Mr. TUCKER offered the following amendments:

Amend resolution 11 by inserting after the word "cities," the words "and incorporated villages;" and amend subdivision 12 by striking out the words "and villages."

The PRESIDENT—This being two separate propositions, the question will be taken separately.

Mr. TUCKER—I have only to say that I see no reason why the committee should have seen fit to divorce two classes of municipalities. I see no reason why the same committee should not consider cities and incorporated villages.

The question being then put upon the amendment as to paragraph 11, it was declared to be lost.

The question was then put upon the amendment as to paragraph 12, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN offered the following amendment:

"No. 22. On the relations of the State to the Indians residing therein."

Which was adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read paragraph 19.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following amendment:

By adding at the end thereof "and laws."

Which was lost.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the unnumbered paragraphs.

Mr. HARRIS—The committee of Sixteen, in making this recommendation as to the number of the Committee, had some regard to the number of members of the Convention, and it was their purpose to provide that every member should have a place on some committee, and that no member should have a place on two committees, but now two committees have been added to the number, so that arrangement cannot be carried into effect. Again, sir, the Committee on Finance has virtually been divided, and there are now two committees on finance; the Committee on finance proper, and the Committee on canals, which will be also a Committee on finance; that Committee is as important a committee as the other, beside having in charge the glory and honor of the State (Laughter), therefore that Committee should certainly be as large as the Committee on finance. To make two committees of sixteen each, would be to delegate to this subject one-fifth of this Convention, quite too much, I think, to be allotted to it, I am therefore inclined to think we had better make both committees of an equal number, and to make them less—I would therefore prefer a smaller number, and for the purpose of getting the sense of the Convention I would move, that the Committee on canals and finance consist of sixteen members each.

Mr. FOLGER—I would move that it be fifteen instead of sixteen, as I have always found that an uneven number on a committee facilitated business.

Mr. HARRIS—I will accept that modification.

The question was then put upon the motion as modified, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I would also move that Committee No. 9 and Committee No. 10 should also consist of fifteen members each.

The question was then put upon the motion, and it was declared carried.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the other unnumbered paragraphs, and no objection being made thereto, they were declared adopted.

Mr. CONGER moved that the report of the Committee of sixteen, as amended, be adopted.

Which was carried.

Mr. SHERMAN—I move the adoption of a small portion of the report of the Committee on Rules, not yet adopted, for the appointment of four business committees, committee on privileges and elections, on printing, on contingent expenses, and on engrossment and enrollment.

The question was then put upon the motion, and it was declared carried.

Mr. FULLER moved that the report of the Committee of sixteen as amended be transferred to its proper place, in the report of the Committee on Rules, and that the rules be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. HARRIS—We have now gone through with the preliminary work of ordering the Committees, and in order to enable the President to have time to consider the proper committees, and make the appointments, and as there is no other business, I apprehend, which can usefully occupy the time of this Convention, before the committees are appointed, I would move that when the Convention adjourns it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next at six o'clock P. M.

Mr. ALVORD—I move to strike out six o'clock, P. M., and insert eleven o'clock, A. M.

Mr. MERRITT—I think it had better be at six o'clock. Those of us who desire to go home and have to go a long distance, cannot arrive here in time, if it is put at eleven; and I feel quite confident from the number of committees ordered by the Convention, it will require all that time for the President to prepare these committees, and I am persuaded that it will be better to adjourn until six o'clock, Tuesday, than at an earlier hour.

Mr. ALVORD—After getting the opinion of those directly around me, that six o'clock is a better hour, though I am of the opinion that to make it six o'clock is virtually to dissipate Tuesday, yet I will withdraw my amendment.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Harris, and it was declared carried.

Mr. WEED moved to adjourn.

Mr. GREELEY—I hope not, until we make those select committees that have been asked for.

Mr. MERRITT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the privileges of the floor are hereby extended to the Hon. Geo. H. Thacher, Mayor of the city of Albany.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that under the rules that cannot now be considered.

Mr. MERRITT—Then I ask for unanimous consent.

No objection being made the question was then put upon the resolution and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. GREELEY—I beg the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] to withdraw his motion until we can get through with the appointment of the committees.

Mr. WEED—At the request of the gentleman, I will withdraw it.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask the Chairman to take up the resolutions for select committees. There is one offered by Judge Graves for female suffrage. I hope they may be taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will announce the proper order of business. Resolutions are first in order.

Mr. GRAVES offered the following resolution:

Whereas, The use of adulterated intoxicating liquors has become an alarming evil, increasing domestic sorrow, creating pauperism and crime, thereby adding to the burdens of taxation, therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of one from each judicial district be appointed to report,

1. Whether in their opinion, under our republican form of government, any authority should be granted to sell, or any prohibition enacted against the sale of intoxicating liquors, either by a legislative or organic law of the State.

2. Whether in their opinion, the sale of intoxicating liquors should be denied to all except such as shall receive a certificate under the hand and official seal of a person properly qualified and duly appointed showing that the liquor offered for sale had been carefully analyzed and was unadulterated, pure and contained no poisonous drug.

3. Whether in their opinion any law authorizing or prohibiting the sale should not be organic instead of legislative—thereby enacting a rule controlling and regulating public opinion and relieving each successive Legislature from the pressing importunities of those in favor of, or opposed to the sale of intoxicating drinks.

The resolution was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GREELEY—I now move that the resolution for a select committee on female suffrage be taken up and acted upon.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will withdraw that, for this reason: these resolutions will all be properly referable, to some of the committees which are ordered; when they are appointed, then these subjects can be taken from the table, and if no one else does, I myself will call them up and move to refer them to the proper committee.

Mr. GREELEY—I will withdraw the motion.

On motion of Mr. WEED the Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, June 18, 1867.

The Convention met at 6 o'clock P. M., pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. THOMAS DORAN. The Journal of Friday was read by the Secretary, and was approved.

The PRESIDENT announced the reception of a communication, which was read by the Secretary in words as follows:

J. EUGENE TENNEY,
State Librarian of Michigan.

Ordered to be referred to the Standing Committee on Printing, when appointed. •

Mr. FOLGER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Convention request by circular addressed to the Clerk of the Court of Appeals; the Clerk of each county in the State; the Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas in the city and county of New York; the Clerk of the Superior Court in the city and county of New York; the Clerk of the Superior Court in the city of Buffalo; the Clerk of any Recorder's Court; the Clerk of any Mayor's Court; the Clerk of the Court of General Sessions in the city and county of New York, that such clerks respectively report to this Convention, as speedily as practicable, how many causes were on the last calendar of the Court or Courts of which he is the Clerk, at the terms thereof for the year ending January 1st, 1867; and what was the oldest and what was the youngest date of issue thereof (including therein the calendar of the general term, the special term, and the circuit or trial term, if any such term there be); and at such term how many causes were argued, how many were submitted, and (in courts where there are trials and references) how many were tried and how many were referred; and in the case of the clerk of a criminal court, how many indictments were pending at the last term thereof, and how many tried, or otherwise, and in what manner disposed of; and that those of said clerks who keep a docket of judgments, report how many judgments were docketed within the year ending Jan. 1, 1867, and the amount of each, and the court in which the same originated, and the court in which, or whether by referee, the final judgment or decision was rendered or made, and that in reporting the amount of such payments, the amount of recovery and the amount of costs be separately stated.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. COOKE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the several county clerks in the State be required to furnish to this Convention a statement showing:

1. The aggregate number of days' session of the Circuit Court and Courts of Oyer and Terminer in their respective counties during the year 1866.

2. The aggregate number of days' session of the General Term of the Supreme Court in their respective counties during the same year.

3. The whole number of civil actions for libel, slander, assault and battery and malicious prosecution, tried in such counties respectively during the same year, and the aggregate amount of the recoveries therein.

4. The number of causes originating in Justices' Courts, in which the amount in controversy did not exceed fifty dollars, carried to the Supreme Court by appeal during the same year.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Governor of the State be requested to communicate to the Convention, as soon as practicable, a list containing the number of the applications made to the Executive for pardons during the years 1864, 1865 and 1866; the number of such applications granted, with the nature of the offenses in classes.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. CASE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Powers and Duties of the Legislature be requested to report at an early day for the consideration of the Convention an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the Legislature making any appropriations or donations of money to any private or local, charitable or religious institutions or corporations, and whenever any appropriations are made by the Legislature other than for purposes of Government and State Institutions, such appropriations shall be made to each and every county of the State ratably according to population as shown by the last preceding census.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Case, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOWLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the appropriate committee, to take into consideration the propriety of reporting an amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature from passing any law granting, or authorizing the granting of any license for the sale of spirituous liquors.

Mr. HARRIS—I prefer that should lie upon the table, until the committees are announced, so it may be referred to some committee by name. I move that it lie upon the table.

The question being put upon the motion of Mr. Harris, it was declared to be carried.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to furnish to this Convention a tabular statement in relation to the population of each county, town and ward of the cities of this State, according to the census of the year 1865; showing in one column the total population; in another the number of aliens; in another the number of persons of color not taxed; in another the whole number of persons of color; in another the population excluding aliens and persons of color not taxed; in another the population excluding aliens only; in another the population excluding persons of color not taxed only; and in another the population excluding only all persons of color.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. HARRIS—It seems to me, that we have acted rather hastily, in the adoption of the resolution instructing the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature in relation to their report, and with a view to its further consideration, I move a reconsideration of the vote by which it was adopted.

The PRESIDENT announced the question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RATHBUN—Mr. President: Ought not the motion to lie over until to-morrow, under the rule? I think that the rules provide that a motion to reconsider shall not be taken up the same day.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken, and the motion will lie upon the table.

On motion of Mr. ARCHER the Convention adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, June 19, 1867.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition from the Friends of Progress, assembled at Waterloo, N. Y., June 1st, 1867, in favor of female suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND presented a petition from Wm. H. Johnson, Chairman of the State Central Committee of colored citizens, praying for the establishment of equal manhood suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. CLINTON presented a communication from A. G. Stephens, Esq., relative to the Bill of Rights.

Which was received and referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights.

Mr. MASTEN—I desire to present a communication from Mr. Wm. H. Greene, a gentleman of scholarly attainments, a lawyer of eminence, learning and large experience. The subject of his communication is upon the code of procedure and the forms of actions, both legal and equitable, and upon pleadings.

The communication was received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Commissioners of the Canal Department.

in reply to a resolution of the Convention requesting them to furnish a statement of the cost, revenues, &c., of the canals of this State.

Which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRANCIS, from the Select Committee on Printing verbatim reports of the proceedings of the Convention, submitted the following report and resolution :

Your committee, to whom was referred a resolution of inquiry as to the terms upon which verbatim reports of the proceedings of this Convention can be published in two or more newspapers of this city, have had the subject under consideration, and respectfully report :

It first became necessary to ascertain whether the power to contract for the performance of such work as was contemplated by the resolution was conferred by the terms of the law which created the Convention. Under the eighth section of the law referred to, the Comptroller and Secretary of State are "authorized and required to receive proposals and make contract for all the printing necessary for the said Convention."

Under this provision, a contract was made with Weed, Parsons & Co., of the date of May 16, 1867, for the printing of Documents at a compensation of $11 for each 800 copies of 8 pages, to include all charges, and for each additional 100 copies of 8 pages, 66 cents; for Journals, each 800 copies of 8 pages, to include all charges, $12.75, and for each additional 100 copies of 8 pages, 40 cents; for Debates, each 800 copies of 8 pages, each page to contain not less than 3,000 ems of brevier and nonpareil type, to include all charges, $5.88, and for each additional 100 copies of 8 pages, $1. The following paragraph appears in the advertisement for proposals issued by the Secretary of State and Comptroller, and, in the opinion of the latter officer, becomes a part of the contract with the Convention printers by virtue of the official acceptance of their proposals:

"Miscellaneous printing not coming under above heads, will be paid for at the rates current in the city of Albany at the time of the execution thereof."

These are all the provisions of the contract with the Convention Printers, bearing upon the subject of printing, its proceedings and debates. The law is silent with reference to newspaper publication of this matter, and under its express authority, such publication could only be secured by an arrangement with the Convention Printers.

But this would involve a compensation at "the rates current at Albany," in this case regulated by the charges for transient advertising—an expense much larger than is necessary to be incurred for the service. This plan being considered impracticable, the next question that arose was whether parties proposing for the work would be willing to go forward and perform it under direction of the Convention, without any fund from which their remuneration could be drawn—relying upon future action by the Legislature to secure payment for their service.

Propositions have been made to the Committee by the publishers of the Albany Evening Journal and of the Albany Argus, the proprietors of other newspapers here declining to offer terms for the reason that they did not care to undertake the work. The Journal and Argus publishers respectively are willing to print the stenographic reports of the debates and proceedings, from day to day, in the regular editions of their papers, and at prices which your Committee consider liberal to the State, being considerably less than half the legal rates for publishing, to wit: Six dollars and a half per column for such publication in each paper, and to include the daily delivery of two copies of all the issues of their papers containing the proceedings and debates to each member of the Convention without further charge.

In this connection, your committee have given attention to a proposition germane to the subject-matter referred to them—that the proceedings and debates be published in pamphlet form under the contract with the convention printers, and distributed by the Convention. This method, while involving a larger cost, if estimated upon the basis of an equal circulation to be obtained by the newspaper publication as proposed, would also be attended with much additional labor, and fail to accomplish the ends desired. A pamphlet does not go into general circulation. It lacks the freshness, and does not secure the interest that attaches to the newspaper. It would be read by comparatively few persons.

A newspaper, on the other hand, is received everywhere, and comes under the observation of all classes. Circulate as many of the pamphlets as you may, still you will fail to reach the people and instruct them in the work of this Convention, as may be done by the newspaper publication of the full stenographic reports of its daily proceedings and debates.

The Evening Journal and the Argus are in a sense representative organs of the two great political parties, and the Convention debates published in their columns from day to day would be brought to the attention of a very large number of people, of a class interested in public questions, and would also be placed sooner than otherwise could be done, in the hands of newspaper editors throughout the State, who would be certain to make such excerpts from or comments upon them, as would attract the attention of the people to questions which they will be called upon to decide.

The inquiry is pertinent here, whether the advantages derivable from the publication as proposed would be sufficient to justify the expense to be incurred. Your committee assume that the sessions of the Convention will continue many weeks. Perhaps, when it adjourns, but a short time will elapse, as was the case in 1846, before the period when its work is to be submitted to the people for approval or rejection. In that brief intervening time, there will be little opportunity for stating and discussing the questions which have arisen and received attention here.

But if the proceedings and debates are published in extenso, as they transpire, and in a manner to secure their largest reading and study, discussions will begin with them at the outset, and when we adjourn, the public will have a full and accurate understanding of what we have accomplished. Certainly it is of the first importance in connection with the great work committed to this Convention, that the people should be fully informed of its doings and the reasons in detail for all action taken here.

But an object, perhaps quite as important, will be accomplished by the proposed newspaper publication, in placing upon the tables of members daily the verbatim reports of the discussions which occur. An opportunity will thus be furnished to members to deliberately review the arguments advanced in the Convention while subjects are still under discussion, and while the measures proposed are still within their control. Relying upon the pamphlet publication of the debates, experience shows that there would be a much greater delay, thus in a measure depriving the Convention of the important advantages named.

Your Committee, therefore, are of opinion that the publication referred to is both feasible and proper, and in their opinion, the advantages that would result therefrom, fully justify the expenditure necessary for the purpose. They recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Albany Evening Journal and the Albany Argus be authorized to publish the daily reports of the proceedings and debates of this Convention, as furnished by the Stenographer, and furnish two copies to each member of the Convention, for a compensation of six dollars and fifty cents per column of solid brevier and nonpareil type for such publication in each paper named. Said reports to be printed in the regular editions of said papers; and that the next Legislature be requested to make the requisite appropriation for payment of the service.

J. M. FRANCOIS, Chairman.

Mr. McDONALD—Mr. President: I am opposed to agreeing with the report of the committee for the following reasons: In the first place, it is admitted on the face of the report itself, that this Convention has no authority whatever to make this contract, or to enter into any agreement or any understanding with regard to it. It therefore involves this important question, which this Convention may be called on in a more direct and solemn form to pass upon. It involves the question whether the Legislature of this State shall be empowered or directed to pass upon claims arising in other bodies, or rather to pass judicially upon claims. I, for one, am opposed to the Legislature having anything to do with claims whatever; and I understand that there are other members of this Convention who are in favor of that same proposition. I therefore object that this resolution shall be thus passed upon, and that this question shall thereby be foreclosed, as it were; because if we pass this resolution we virtually call upon the next Legislature to make an appropriation in order to pay for this printing, and we thereby establish a precedent which after due deliberation we may think ought not to be established. The second objection I make is this, that it will not accomplish the object for which it is intended. It is claimed by the report of the committee that the entire object of this resolution is to disseminate among the people of the State a knowledge of the proceedings of this Convention. It would, I admit, disseminate a pretty general knowledge in the counties of Albany and Rensselaer, but in the western, northern and southern parts of the State it would disseminate very little intelligence. In my own village which has a population of seven thousand, and a town population of nine thousand, there are, of those two journals, but six copies taken besides the exchanges with the papers. And outside the two counties of Albany and Rensselaer, and the adjoining counties, this would not accomplish the object that is desired. While I grant that with regard to these two counties the people should be as well informed as any others, I, at the same time, claim that if this Convention makes any appropriation for the purpose of disseminating knowledge of the proceedings therein among the people of the State as the entire people of the State have to pay for that appropriation, therefore the entire people of each and every part of the State should have the same advantages that can be obtained in this way, and that the debates should be distributed in such manner and way as that the entire people of each and every part of the State shall have such equal advantage, which, as I have shown, cannot be done in the manner in favor of which the committee report. My third objection is, that the same object can be obtained in a much cheaper way under the contract already made, and in a legal form, and in a form that will not bind this Convention in its future action, when it may come to consider it in a more deliberate manner, and that will not bind this Convention prematurely to a course of action which it might otherwise wish not to have taken. According to the contract which is already made, and under which we are acting—and which as I have said before, will be legal,—we can furnish a copy of these debates in a pamphlet form, provided they contain no more than one thousand pages, for $1.25. This calculation of 1000 pages is on the basis of one hundred days' session, and of ten pages for each session, and on the basis of the debates of the Convention of 1846, which set for one hundred and nine consecutive days, and which from its beginning to its ending was about one hundred and thirty days in session. The proceedings of that Convention made 1131 pages, and I claim that a fair calculation for the proceedings of this is 1000 pages. For 1000 pages, as I have said, we can furnish a copy of the pamphlet for $1.25, which is the price according to the contract. The Committee have neglected to state one thing, that the contract does not provide that the debates shall be published at all. It provides that if this Convention shall order any debates, then they shall be published in this manner, and at the price, as stated in the report, of $735 for first 800 copies of 1000 pages, and $125 for each additional 100 copies. I understand from Mr. Parsons that within three days, at the farthest, after these debates are had and the proceedings are approved in this body, they can be laid upon our tables, and usually within one or two days, so that, as far as we are concerned, we shall have the debates in a form which, as I have already said, is according to law. We have our covers arranged for them and we can have them in a form which any one will see is entirely preferable to the newspaper for For who will keep a file of the newspa copy of the debates? But in the pamphlet form they can be furnished to us easily, so that we can refer to them at any time if we shall desire. In regard to the dissemination of the proceedings throughout the State at the rate they have been published, of twelve columns a day, as you will find by the publication of the Evening Journal, the cost to this Convention every day it meets will amount to $144. Twelve columns, at $12, is $144, and $144 a day for one hundred days, will amount to $14,400. For that price we can disseminate throughout this State at least nine thousand copies of the pamphlet edition issued in two or three days after the debates, and pay the postage thereon. I submit, therefore, if it is desirable, (and I agree with the committee that it is,) to disseminate these proceedings among the people, that this Convention can disseminate far more information among the people of the State, and especially among the sections not immediately adjoining this city, if the nine thousand pamphlet copies of these debates were properly distributed. Let each member take twenty copies and send to the editor of each newspaper, and to each reading room, and to public citizens in his district, and let that citizen not have it in the form of a paper, but have it in such a form that he can refer to it at any time. I submit, in that way the people of the State will become far more conversant with regard to the proceedings of this Convention. I, therefore, am opposed to the adoption of this resolution; in the first place, because it is illegal. And I do not propose for one to start off, in the first days of this Convention, by committing it to the practice which, above all things, our Legislature ought to be prohibited from—passing upon and providing payment for illegal and unauthorized proceedings on the part of another body. I oppose it, in the second place, because it does not accomplish the object designed. I oppose it, in the third place, because with a far less legal expenditure of money, we can attain the object in a far greater degree, than by the illegal and unauthorized expenditure recommended by the report of the committee, and I therefore hope the resolution recommended by the Committee will not pass.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—This subject, sir, is comparatively new to me at least, and it is impossible to understand it without being able to read the report, and for that reason I move that the report be laid upon the table and printed.

The question being put upon the motion of Mr. Townsend it was declared to be carried.

Mr. SMITH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee "on the Right of Suffrage and Qualifications to Hold Office," be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a Constitutional provision, permanently excluding from the right to the elective franchise, all persons who may be convicted by a court of record of having received money or other valuable thing to influence or reward their vote, and to make the offense, with or without such conviction, a cause of challenge and disfranchisement at the polls.

Mr. SEAVER—I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "received" the words, "or to have paid or offered to pay."

Mr. KETCHAM moved that the resolution be laid on the table and printed. Which was carried.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Committee No. 9 be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the allowing or giving extra compensation to any public officer, agent or contractor, after the work shall be completed, or the contract entered into.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. L. W. Russell, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. GOULD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be directed to procure from the several County Clerks in this State, as soon as practicable, a statement embracing the following particulars from the years 1857 to 1866, both inclusive:

1st. The number of indictments found in each year in all the criminal courts of the county.

2d. The number of persons admitted to bail in each county in each year by said courts.

3d. The aggregate amount of bail taken in each year in the courts of record.

4th. The aggregate amount of bail ordered to be estreated in each year.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to procure from the several County Treasurers of this State, the amount of money paid to them on account of forfeited bail, in each of the years from 1857 to 1866, inclusive.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. HADLEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Court of Appeals report to this Convention, with all convenient speed, the total amount of all funds and securities now held by him in trust, under any order, judgment or decree of any court, including the late Court of Chancery. And that he specify the total amount of such funds and securities, which has remained with said Clerk or his predecessors for more than twenty years, if any.

Second—The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for fifteen years and less than twenty years.

Third—The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for ten years, and less than fifteen years.

Fourth—The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for five years, and less than ten years.

Fifth—In what manner such funds are invested and secured, and at what rate of interest.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. COLAHAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention take into consideration the necessity of amending the present Constitution of this State so that the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and all cities and municipalities of this State, be secured and protected in the administration of their respective local governments from infringement on their rights and powers, and from partisan and partial legislation on the part of the Legislature of this State. And that this Convention consider the system of special legislation and existing commissions as enacted for and made more particularly applicable to the cities of New York and Brooklyn, by recent State legislation.

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the first section of the second article of the Constitution of the State of New York be amended by striking out therefrom the following words:

"But no man of color, unless he shall have been for three years a citizen of this State, and for one year next preceding any election, shall have been seized and possessed of a freehold estate of the value of two hundred and fifty dollars, over and above all debts and incumbrances charged thereon, and shall have been actually rated, and paid a tax thereon, shall be entitled to vote at such election. And no person of color shall be subject to direct taxation unless he shall be seized and possessed of such real estate as aforesaid."

And that the said Constitution be further amended by striking out therefrom the words "persons of color not taxed," wherever they occur in other articles thereof.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. HALE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing some system by which a more equal and just representation of all the electors, minorities as well as majorities, may be secured; and that, with this view, they be respectfully requested to investigate the system originated by Mr. Thomas Hare, and recently proposed in the English Parliament by John Stuart Mill.

Mr. HALE moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature, &c.

Which was ordered.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of enlarging the powers and duties of County Courts, and extending their original jurisdiction, with power to hear, try and determine all actions the causes for which shall arise in their respective counties, and where the amount in controversy shall not exceed the sum of $500, excepting actions for the recovery of the possession of real property.

Mr. EDDY moved to amend by making the sum one thousand dollars in lieu of five hundred.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN accepted the amendment.

The question was then put upon the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. HARRIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Tax Commissioners of the City of New York be requested to furnish to this Convention a statement of the number of taxpayers in the city of New York, as the same appears from the records and documents in their office; distinguishing, as far as practicable, between those assessed for real estate and those assessed for personal property.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights, be instructed to inquire and report as to the expediency of so modifying section 5 of the Bill of Rights, as to provide that no witness shall be detained who shall tender his own recognizance to appear and testify, and shall prove by his own oath or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the Court, or a judge on habeas corpus; that he or she is unable to give a recognizance with sufficient sureties.

Also, as to the expediency of striking out of section 7 all that relates to Private Roads.

Also, as to the expediency of striking out section 9, and inserting in its stead the following: "The Legislature shall pass no bill appropriating the public moneys or property for local or private purposes."

Also, as to the propriety of adding, at the end of section 2, the words, "But the Legislature may by law provide that a jury may consist of any number of jurors not less than six or more than twelve."

Also, as to the propriety of striking out section 14 of the Bill of Rights, and also of so amending it as to strike out the word "twelve," and insert the word "twenty."

Also, as to the expediency of inserting in section 10, after the words "judicial proceedings," the words "and for causes rendering the marriage contract void from the beginning, and for crime or adultery."

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. AXTELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire as to the expediency of abolishing the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace in civil causes, and establishing minor courts in the several towns to be held by the County Judges for the trial of such civil causes as are now triable by Justices of the Peace, and report to this Convention.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Axtell and it was declared lost.

Mr. BAKER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of this State be requested, at as early a day as practicable, to report to this Convention the whole amount of moneys appropriated by the Legislature of this State, and paid by the Comptroller to the several local private institutions called charitable institutions, not chartered by the Legislature from 1857 to 1867, both inclusive, giving the name and location of each institution so receiving such appropriation, and the amount received in each year during the time aforesaid.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution, and moved that it lie upon the table:

Resolved, That Committee No. 2 (on the Legislature, its organization, etc.), be requested to take under consideration, and report to this body upon the policy of providing that the House of Assembly consist of 100 members, to be elected yearly from single districts; that the Senate consist of eight members, one elected from each judicial district, for the term of eight years, one each year on general ticket. That the sole power of initiating and enacting laws, be vested in the Assembly; that the legislative power of the Senate shall consist of considering and revising such acts as may be passed by the Assembly. That the salary of Senators be $5,000 and of Assemblymen $1,000 per annum. Which was laid upon the table.

Mr. TAPPEN offered the following resolution and asked that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Resolved, That the following amendments be incorporated in the Constitution.

1st. That the Legislature hold one annual session, commencing on the first Tuesday in December in each year.

2d. That the Senate be increased to forty members, of whom thirty-two shall be elected by Districts, and eight shall be elected by the State at large.

3d. That the compensation to Members of the Legislature be one thousand dollars for the session in full of all pay, mileage and stationery.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, &c.

Mr. GREELLEY—The resolution as read seems to be a resolution of instruction to the Committee. The form of the resolution should be a resolution of inquiry. If it is a resolution of instruction I shall object to it.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair rules no instruction has yet been made to the Committee; that that must be done by the Convention. It is simply referred for their consideration.

Mr. BICKFORD, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Committee No. 4, on the Right of Suffrage, be instructed to inquire into and report on the expediency and propriety of extending the elective franchise to native born male citizens of this State, between the ages of 18 and 21.

Mr. TILDEN moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The PRESIDENT—If it is a resolution of instructions the chair holds that the instructions should come from the Convention.

Mr. TILDEN—I would suggest for the convenience of the Convention that a different form be adopted in drawing up resolutions intended to be referred.

The PRESIDENT—The resolution giving rise to debate it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. AXTELL offered the following resolution, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Resolved, That the following article be inserted in the Constitution:

SECTION 1. Every male citizen of the age of 21 years, who shall have been a citizen for ten days, and an inhabitant of this State six months next preceding an election, and for the last three months a resident of the county where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election, in the election district of which he shall at the time be a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or may be elected by the people, but such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election, a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers in vote.

SEC. 2. All persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, or of giving or receiving a bribe for their votes, of larceny, or of any infamous crime, all deserters, or persons whose names appear upon the military records of this or of any of the States, as deserters from the military service of the United States, and all persons who have been voluntarily engaged in rebellion against the United States, shall be excluded from the right of suffrage; and the Legislature shall provide by law a test-oath for the exclusion of such persons from the elective franchise.

SEC. 3. All persons born or naturalized in this State, and resident therein, and all citizens of the United States, resident in this State, are citizens of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. HARRIS—I ask for the consideration of the motion made by me yesterday, to reconsider the vote on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Madison [Mr. Case].

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution of Mr. Case, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature be requested to report at an early day, for the consideration of this Convention, an amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature making any appropriations or donations of money to any private or local, charitable or religious institutions or corporations, and whenever any appropriations are made by the Legislature other than for purposes of Government and State Institutions, such appropriations shall be made to each and every County of the State, ratably, according to population, as shown by the last preceding census.

Mr. HARRIS—I have no objection to the enquiry, but this is a resolution of the Convention requesting the Committee to report an amendment to the Constitution which may be regarded as in the nature of an instruction. If the proposition shall be altered so as to request the committee to inquire into the expediency of reporting such an amendment, I have no objection to its passing if the mover of the resolution will modify it in that form.

Mr. CASE—I accept the modification.

The PRESIDENT—That can only be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection the question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Case, as modified, by consent of the mover, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. POND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, 1st. That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the Constitution as to permit juries in civil causes to render verdicts, upon the agreement of a number less than the whole.

2d. Also to inquire into the propriety of so amending the Constitution as to prohibit the receipt by all judicial officers, including Justices of the Peace, of any fee or perquisites of office as a compensation for their services, or otherwise.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Pond, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VERPLANCK offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the National Guard of this State (to be composed of volunteers), shall, in time of peace, consist of not exceeding twenty-five thousand, officers and men, to be uniformed, armed and equipped at the expense of the State; the organization and discipline to conform to that of the army of the United States.

Which was referred to the Committee on Militia and Public Defense.

Mr. HARRIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, Finance, Canals and Cities, each be authorized to employ a clerk for their respective committees.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would inquire of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], through the Chair, whether he is aware of any provision of law for the payment of the clerks proposed by his resolution.

Mr. HARRIS—I am not aware of any special provision in the law under which this Convention was called, but I suppose that their pay would come out of the contingent fund, or perhaps not until the Legislature shall provide for it. But it is certain that each of these committees, consisting of fifteen members, will require a clerk, and therefore I offer the resolution.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Harris and it was declared adopted—ayes 72, noes 26.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage inquire into and report on the expediency of extending the right of suffrage to all male white citizens of the age of eighteen years.

The question was put on the resolution, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 9 on the Finances of the State, &c., to inquire as to the expediency and propriety of a Constitutional provision that no property, real or personal, in this State, shall be exempt from taxation for State, county or municipal purposes, except so far as it is made exempt by the laws of the United States or as it is now exempt by laws of this State, having the force or being in the nature of contracts; and except as to property owned by the State, or by any county, town, city, or school district in its corporate capacity, and except as to places set apart and used as places of public worship, or exclusively for charitable purposes.

Which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LIVINGSTON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all laws relating to the elective franchise, shall be uniform throughout the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. AXTELL moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution offered by him in reference to county judges, &c., was declared lost.

Which motion was ordered to lay over under the rule.

Mr. OPDYKE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be instructed to enquire into the expediency of inserting a provision in the Constitution making education compulsory.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Opdyke and it was declared adopted.

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. President: Having very serious doubts whether members generally understood the resolution of the gentleman from Albany, [Mr. Harris] which provided for clerks for certain committees, I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Which motion was ordered to lay over under the rule.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 2, on the Legislature, its organization, &c., to inquire as to the expediency and propriety of providing for the election of 180 members of the Assembly and of 45 members of the Senate; 144 of the members of Assembly to be elected in districts entitled to elect not less than three nor more than six members, and the other 36 to be elected for the State at large, as personal representatives, each elector throughout the State to be entitled to vote for one personal representative in the Assembly, and the 36 receiving the highest number of votes, to be elected; also, each elector throughout the State to be entitled to vote for one personal representative in the Senate, and the 9 persons receiving the largest number of votes, to be elected; and the other 36 Senators to be elected in districts entitled to elect one Senator only.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, &c.

Mr. SILVESTER pursuant to previous notice offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Rule 32 be amended by adding as subdivision 9 the following:

"Such ladies as may be invited by any members, but such right of invitation to cease whenever the sofas are filled."

Mr. SILVESTER—Mr. President, I desire simply to say that while the rules were under consideration, I offered an amendment similar to the one suggested, but which was not adopted by the Convention. I hope—

The PRESIDENT—The motion is not debatable. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. ALVORD—I believe, Mr. President, according to our rules, although they have not yet been laid on our desks, that in order to change a rule, the vote of a majority of the members of the Convention is required.

Mr. PRESIDENT—It requires two-thirds of those present or a majority of all the members.

Mr. ALVORD—Then the sense of the Convention cannot be taken except by ayes and noes.

Mr. A. J. PARKER moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Which was carried.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—Two days since I offered a resolution proposing that a committee of seven be appointed, whose duties should be to investigate into the existence of superfluous offices. A complaint is frequently made that the people of this State are paying taxes for needless offices. It was with a view of entering upon an inquiry into that subject that I offered this resolution for the appointment of such a committee. I think that in the report of the Committee of Sixteen, they have not provided for any appropriate committee for that purpose. Now, I have the honor to represent an agricultural district, and it is quite a common complaint that we have a host of needless offices, the existence of which imposes additional taxation upon the State. My constituents are able and willing to pay all necessary expenses for their government—

The PRESIDENT—There is no question before the Convention. Will the gentleman make a motion in reference to his resolution.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—My motion is to take the resolution from the table. The President of the Convention of 1846 stated that one of the great works which had been accomplished by that Convention was the abolition of a host of useless offices. I suppose it would be an appropriate field of inquiry in this Convention to ascertain whether any superfluous offices now exist. It was with a view of such an investigation that I offered the resolution proposing this inquiry. I do it because there is no proper committee to pursue an inquiry into the subject.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution of Mr. Lawrence, as follows:

Resolved, That the Chair appoint a committee of seven, whose duty it shall be to examine into and report to this Convention what offices, if any, may be abolished without detriment to the public service, and especially of those created by law since the revision of the Constitution of 1846.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that such a committee will not be appointed. It is a very important and appropriate inquiry suggested by the gentleman, but which may very well be referred to the Committee on Towns, Counties and Villages, their Organization, Government and Powers. If there be any useless offices as the gentleman has suggested, the matter can be referred to that committee. I move, therefore, that the subject be referred to the Committee on Towns and Counties.

Mr. GREELEY—Mr. President I trust not. There is a body called the Board of Regents of the University, and I wish an inquiry instituted as to the utility of that body. That subject could not be properly referred to the Committee on Towns and Counties, and I hope that the Convention will order an inquiry made to see what offices can be dispensed with, and which could not be properly inquired into by the Committee on Towns and Counties.

Mr. HARRIS—Really my friend from Westchester, [Mr. Greeley,] has industriously found out that there is a set of State officers that are not provided for by the committees at present appointed. I suppose that all these State officers have been provided for by these committees, but the Regents of the University. If the gentleman chooses to raise a committee with reference to the Board of Regents, I shall have no objection; but it seems to me that that is the only case which is not provided for. I hope that the inquiry asked for by the resolution of the gentleman from Yates, [Mr. M. H. Lawrence,] will go to the Committee on Towns and Counties, and their government.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—With all due respect to the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris,] I had in my mind an entirely different class of officers. As I said before, the President of the Convention of 1846, stated the fact that they had secured the safety of the school fund. I have my doubts, Mr. President, whether that fund is secure, for that money raised from the several counties is in the hands of one hundred and twenty different officers, and rumor has it, the fund is not altogether safe. It was with a view to the entrance upon this inquiry that I offered the resolution, which I think is proper, and I think the people of this State will recognize this as a proper body to investigate these abuses, if they do exist. And with all due respect to the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris,] I think the matter does not pertain to the Committee on Towns and Counties, for the officers I had in view do not belong to towns and counties, they are State officers, and are appointed by the executive or otherwise.

Mr. OLINTON—Mr. President; I am a little surprised, unless perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris,] I have no doubt but the Board of Regents of the University of the State are, in one sense, an antiquated body, but they certainly have proved to be a useful body, and a body which, from its very commencement down to this day, has been composed of honorable gentlemen who have served the State and the cause of education without compensation. I would ask the gentleman from Albany, [Mr. Harris] whether the inquiry as to that body, and as to its utility, and whether it is desirable to continue or do away with it, is not referable to, or properly inquirable into, by the Committee on Education and the funds relating thereto. They have the charge of a portion at least, of the funds relating to education, and they have much to do with the management, direction and incorporation of the academies and colleges of this State. Whatever I may think of the body itself, their functions are high and honorable and I am surprised to find the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] characterizing it as antiquated, and treating it as though he considered it a worthless body.

Mr. HARRIS—Mr. President, I certainly have no intention to cast any dishonor upon that antiquated body called the Regents of the University. It is an antiquated body, but it is composed of excellent, venerable and useful men. I have as high respect for them as the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton]. I intended no disrespect to them whatever. I have long thought, however, that the organization might be greatly improved; I think so now, but I doubt whether it is a matter coming properly within the province of this body. I think it is a matter rather for the Legislature to consider than for this Convention; but I agree with the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton], if there is anything to be done in respect to it, it properly belongs to the Committee to which he has alluded,—the Committee on Education. As to all the other State officers, the subject is properly referred to other committees, and I think the gentleman from Yates [Mr. M. H. Lawrence] will find his object accomplished through the Committee on Towns and Counties, and their government. I cannot imagine that there is any case which is not already provided for by our committees, and I hope my motion will prevail.

Mr. MERRITT—I move to amend by substituting another committee.

The PRESIDENT—A motion to amend is not now in order; the question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris.]

Mr. CHURCH—I think there is no subject properly brought before the Convention, which is not already within the jurisdiction of some committee appointed by this body. I am opposed to the multiplication of other committees, it will lead to inextricable confusion in the business of this Convention, and I move therefore to lay this motion upon the table.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Church and it was declared carried.

Mr. MERRITT moved that the Convention adjourn.

Mr. PRESIDENT—The Chair desires respectfully to call the attention of the gentlemen of the Convention to Rule 11, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the rule as follows:

"Rule 11. When a motion to adjourn, or for a recess, shall be affirmatively determined, no member or officer shall leave his place till the adjournment or recess shall be declared by the President."

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared carried.

THURSDAY, June 20, 1867.

The Convention met at eleven o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by the Rev. CHARLES GRAVES.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary.

Mr. SMITH—To the resolution I had the honor of introducing yesterday there was an amendment offered, and the Journal makes me to have accepted it. That is a mistake; I did not accept it, because the resolution as amended did not express my views.

The Journal was ordered to be corrected in that respect.

There being no further objection, the Journal was declared approved.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair desires to make the following explanation:

In the final completion of the list of standing committees announced yesterday, the name of Mr. Ely, of Monroe, who had been assigned a position, was inadvertently omitted. The Chair deeply regrets the error, and by the consent of the Convention, and of Mr. Hand, of Broome, places Mr. Ely upon the Committee "on the Secretary of State, Comptroller, &c.," in place of the former gentleman. This explanation and order will be entered on the Journal at large.

Mr. CORBETT offered a memorial from the citizens of Syracuse, asking for the adoption of a constitutional provision, securing the right of suffrage to both men and women.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. FULLER—I desire to present the outlines of a plan for the reorganization of the judiciary, drawn up by an able jurist, late a judge of the Court of Appeals, who was promoted to the bench of that court from the Supreme Court, and who is fully acquainted with the facts and workings of our judicial system in all its branches, and which plan also has been approved by another ex-judge of the Court of Appeals, an eminent jurist. I desire that it may be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRAVES—I desire to present a memorial from Mrs. F. D. Fish and one hundred and eighty other citizens, worthy and intelligent men and women of the city of Utica, asking for equal rights for men and women.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The Chair presented the following communication:

ALBANY, June 18th, 1867.

Hon. W. A. WHEELER.

Dear Sir:—The undersigned in behalf of the Common Council, would most respectfully ask of your honorable body, the use of the Assembly Chamber, for the celebration of the approaching anniversary of American Independence.

OSCAR L. HASCOY,

Chairman Common Council Committee.

Mr. E. BROOKS moved that the request be granted.

Which was carried.

Mr. FRANCIS—I move that the Convention take up the report of the Select Committee, in reference to the publication of the debates and proceedings of the Convention, in two of the Albany newspapers.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Francis, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. FRANCIS—Mr. President, the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] opposes the publication of the report of the proceedings and debates of this Convention, in the Albany Journal and the Argus on the terms proposed, on the ground that there is no authority in law for such an arrangement. It is true, sir, that the law is silent on the subject of newspaper publication of this matter. We assume so much as this, and simply recommend an appropriation by the next Legislature to meet what is deemed a proper, if not necessary expense. This Convention, I suppose, possesses certain inherent powers not specifically defined by legislative enactment—powers requisite to the convenient arrangement and dispatch of its business. The people have delegated to the Convention a higher authority than the Legislature possesses; and to say that it cannot, in the exercise of that authority, proceed a step beyond the powers which legislation has conferred, is to assume that the Legislature is superior to the people—that the agent is greater than the principal. Bear in mind, this Convention was called by the people, not by the Legislature; the Legislature only undertook to carry into effect the popular will by its subsequent action. Wherein it may have failed to make proper provisions for the carrying on our work, the Convention itself may, I take it, supply the deficiency—and, as in this case, recommend an appropriation by a future Legislature to defray the necessary expense. But we are told that the publication in the newspapers as proposed, will involve a needless and very large expense, and the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald,] states the cost at $14,000, if the proceedings and debates shall comprise matter to the extent of a volume of 1,000 pages of the usual document size. I have it in my power, sir, to correct the gentleman's statement. By actual measurement the 1,000 pages referred to are equal to 572 columns of the "Albany Journal." For publication in two papers of the 572 columns at $6.50 each per column, we have $7,438 as the cost. This is little more than one half the estimate of the gentleman, and serves to show that he has based his argument upon erroneous premises. It is insisted that the pamphlet publication by the Convention Printers will serve us better and at much lower rates, and we are assured that the printers will in no event be more than three days behind in placing the debates upon our files. Now I beg leave to differ with this opinion. Even in the publication of the Assembly journals during the sessions of the Legislature, with much less matter than our debates will comprise, the printer has usually been behind from three days to one week, and in some instances a still longer period. Now, bear in mind this matter, equal to eight or ten columns per day, must be put in type, proof read and corrected, then stereotyped and made up and worked in separate book forms. I undertake to say, sir, that, judging from experience, we shall be extremely fortunate if, with the pamphlet publication, we are enabled to keep up our files within four or five days of date. Then again, sir, if we undertake to circulate these pamphlet issues there will probably be a day's delay in mailing, there will be the postage of two cents upon each copy sent, and the matter itself will become stale before it reaches those to whom it may be addressed. Is this the proper method to reach the public mind and inform the people of our doings here? Is it the proper course to pursue for our own enlightenment in the great work we have to do? But there is this further consideration that is worthy of attention. Members of this Convention will not all be here during our discussions. Some will be absent not unfrequently for days at a time. Published in the newspapers, the full debates will promptly reach them, and while the subjects discussed are still fresh. The absentees will thus be enabled to instruct themselves in our work, and be better prepared to act and vote intelligently here. We have evidence already as to the promptitude with which publication of the debates is made by the newspapers. With four papers containing the debates delivered to each member of the Convention, all will be abundantly and promptly supplied for present use and future reference. The circulation of the two papers named is not principally nor mainly confined to this locality as has been stated. It reaches every section of the State, and includes every newspaper of this State as exchanges. But the fact still remains that pamphlets are little read, and newspapers are generally read. The pamphlets with the debates, days behind date, would fail to answer our purpose and that of the public, as a means of instruction in the important business of this Convention. The newspaper publicity would meet this object, enabling us the better to discharge our duties intelligently, at the same time spreading before the people information of the highest importance, as bearing upon the question of the approval or rejection of the amended Constitution at the ensuing general election.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I propose to introduce a proviso to the majority report, to go in at the close of the resolution, to read as follows:

Provided, That the expense of printing the debates in the two journals named shall not exceed the sum of $10,000, or $5,000 to the Journal, and $5,000 to the Aryus, and provided further that the business and debates shall be published at the latest, within twenty-four hours after each session of the Convention.

Mr. FRANCIS—If the gentleman will make the sum $12,000, I will be happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Mr. President; the cost of these debates must depend entirely upon the length of the Convention—the sessions of the Convention. If we are to sit here one hundred and twenty days as has been intimated, or if we are to hold prolonged sessions of the Convention even for one hundred days, probably the sum named would be requisite to pay the expenses of this publication; but I have heard, perhaps incorrectly, that the amendment which I proposed would be satisfactory, and it was with that view that I limited the amount to $10,000. I certainly should be extremely unwilling to put that limitation in the amendment unless I believed it would be a fair compensation for the work to be done. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis], who is a publisher and a printer, and who has given very considerable time and attention to this subject necessarily knows more of the subject than I do, and, therefore, at his suggestion, believing it not to be an unfair one, I will accept the modification.

Mr. GREELEY—I have listened with great attention to the report and also to the remarks of the Chairman of the Committee, for some light upon one question of considerable importance, and that is, supposing these debates to be as we hope they may be, such as the people of the State of New York will wish to read, what reason is there for paying at all for their publication? That question I do not find answered, either in the report, or the speech of my excellent friend from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis]. In my judgment if the matter to be printed is such as the people want to read, they will pay for printing it. If either of the journals in Albany had one month ago advertised that it would publish full and accurate debates of the proceedings of this Convention for a certain price—the usual price of that journal—say for three months, I am very confident that the additional subscriptions would be abundantly sufficient to defray this cost. For, Mr. President, I understand this to be the state of facts, that we of the Convention, as we have been virtually instructed through the Legislature, have elected a Stenographer, competent, prompt and able, who reports at our expense, and not that of the journals of Albany, the debates of this body. It is our report, paid for by the people of the State of New York, that these journals will publish, if they publish any; they simply take the report—as is very proper and entirely right—and I hope it will be always open to every journal—for which the people pay, which we have employed competent persons to make, and they print it in their journals, it having cost them nothing up to the time it is prepared for the press. It seems to me if we are to furnish this matter ready for the press, and the people of the State of New York, want to read it, and these two Journals are circulated almost exclusively within the borders of this State, and taken I may say almost entirely by people who would be likely to take an interest in these proceedings, I cannot comprehend the necessity or the justice of any payment whatever. If it were published, say in a New York City journal, the publisher might say "My circulation is mainly or largely in other States than New York, and your proceedings will not interest my subscribers or readers,"—and I think there might be a color of right in this statement. But I think there should be no claim to compensation for printing matter of interest to the great body of their readers; but for these two journals I say, and I trust with sufficient humility, that I believe the proceedings of this Convention will be as interesting to their readers as almost any other matter with which they can fill their columns, and, therefore, I conclude if we furnish the matter ready for the press and they print it, the bargain will be a fair one on our part and favorable to them, in case we give them no money and ask them for none. In that conviction, Mr. President, and believing that we should be very careful in expending money which is not provided for by the act calling us together; believing that only a very urgent necessity should constrain us to expend so much as $12,000 for the purpose of enlightening a very moderate portion of the people of the State in regard to our doings, I object to the resolution, and I ask the ayes and noes on its passage.

Mr. FULLER—This subject of the publication of the debates of this Convention, is one of considerable importance, and one upon which I, being ignorant of these matters, desire more light. I do not understand that this Convention have, as yet, made any order upon this subject, or have contracted for the publication in any form. I understand that the report of the committee contemplates their publication only in these two daily papers. If that is the only publication there is to be made of the debates of this Convention, I am free to say that while I should desire to read them, from day to day, yet it will be a very unsatisfactory way in the end, and I desire that the debates of this Convention, which will be, in importance, second only to its journal, shall be in some more permanent and some more accessible form, to which we may have recourse hereafter for the construction of the Constitution which we may adopt, as well as, from day to day, during the sitting of this Convention. It seems to me this is the more important publication of the two, and it is very desirable that the debates of this convention, which will be important not only to us, but to those who are to come after us, and to courts and Legislatures, should be published in a permanent form, as were the debates of the last Convention, and also in a convenient form.

Mr. DUGANNE—I would answer the gentleman who spoke last, [Mr. Fuller] by informing him that a contract has been made by the Comptroller for the publication of the debates of the Convention in a pamphlet form, and that this press publication in the daily papers, is added to the original contract, or is a supplementary contract to be made by them.

Mr. FULLER—Then I would like to make this further inquiry, whether this cannot be done without all this additional expense, by a simple transfer of the type of the papers into the pamphlet form.

Mr. ALVORD—I understand the fact to be mainly as stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Duganne,] but still it wants this explanation—that the contract is to be made by the Comptroller of this State, in case the Convention require it; that we have got to act affirmatively in regard to the matter before these debates can be printed at all. The question seems to me to resolve itself simply into the question, whether or not we shall go outside of the liberty and the power which has been given to us by the Legislature with regard to this matter, and undertake to make a debt for a future Legislature to pay. It strikes me that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is eminently right, that if these papers in Albany do not publish these debates they will be the losers, and that they can well afford to take from the hands of our Stenographer each and every day this matter, without any expense to them in its preparation, and put it in their daily journals as a means of their support among those who are the patrons of the papers, and it would be invidious on our part to select the two papers of this locality, because they happen to be here, and pay them six thousand dollars a piece, for publishing these debates, when as a matter of necessity they are so curtailed in their circulation, that there are many papers in the interior of the State that absolutely go to more people than the papers of this city which are here spoken of. But, above all else, I am opposed, except when driven by absolute and sheer necessity, to violating, in any regard, the financial programme laid down by the Legislature. The people of this State have complained over and over and over again, in regard to the Legislature itself, that either by implication or by direct violation of law, they have gone on and made expenditures of large sums of money, under the name of the contingent expenses of the two houses in their annual sessions, to such an extent that it is necessary, if we do our duty here, for us, by absolute constitutional prohibition, to put an end to it. We shall, with a very bad grace, come forward and undertake thus to tie up subsequent legislation in that direction, if we commence here at the very outset to violate the principle ourselves. I, therefore, am decidedly in favor, so far as this matter is concerned, that we should live within the limits of the law, which has, to a certain extent—not created us here, I agree—but limited the power of our expenditure, and that we should go on and order, as we necessarily must, under the contract made by the Comptroller, that there shall be a certain amount published of our debates in a certain form, and laid upon our tables from day to day, and leave to these local papers of the city of Albany the option to print, as a part of the matter for the general benefit of their patrons, each and every day these proceedings, which we thus give to them without charge.

Mr. MURPHY—This question is presented to the Convention in two lights; first, as to the power of the Convention; and second, as to the expediency of printing in the form proposed. I am decidedly in favor of the report of the committee, for reasons which I will state, in view of these two considerations. Undoubtedly, the Comptroller will not pay for the expenses now proposed, because his warrant for the payment of moneys is the law under which we are acting, and he will pay only so much money as is authorized by this law to be paid by him, as directed by this Convention; but it must be obvious to this Convention, that we are not to be restricted in the performance of our duties, in carrying out these matters which have been entrusted to us by the people under this law. Whether the Comptroller will pay is one question; and whether this Convention may, or should contract beyond, is another question. We have ordered these partitions to be taken down, and have directed the Secretary to have them taken away. It certainly has been attended with some expense which is a proper charge, which must be paid, and which undoubtedly will be paid. We ordered yesterday that clerks should be appointed to certain committees. That expense is not contemplated by the act, and yet, if this Convention deem it necessary and proper that these Committees should have clerks, no one can doubt the propriety of their being paid, or that the Legislature will make provision for their payment. The point is this; where the people have ordered this Convention to assemble to do their duty, they have, also resolved that its members shall have all the power necessary for the proper performance of its duty. We, therefore, come back to the consideration of the second point—Is this necessary? Is this proper? Is it required for the convenience of this Convention, and for the performance of its duties? The point has not been presented in my view upon the ground upon which it has struck my mind. It is not whether these debates will, by means of these local newspapers, go to the people at large, or not. For I suppose that, by any newspaper publication and distribution, these debates will not reach the people in time to react in any manner upon the action of this Convention. It is not, therefore, for that purpose that I support this resolution, and deem this necessary for our own convenience. It is impossible, from the way we are seated in this Convention, as well as for other reasons, to know exactly all that may be said in the course of debate; some of our discussions here will be continued for days, and on important questions, perhaps for weeks, and it is proper for the true consideration of the questions that we should know all that is said, and that all points should be met, we should have before us the words as they may fall from the members. I wish to know and to be able to read for myself when I shall not have heard the remarks of the member or delegate, what he has said, and by means of this simultaneous publication in the newspapers I shall know what I should not be able to find out otherwise. The publication of these debates in this form, I regard also as important in another point of view. I think if we have the full debates published at the time, members will be more careful in what they say, and, it will have a wholesome influence upon the tone and character of our debates. If they are not published in this form, and we merely have a summary in the newspapers of what members may say, we shall leave it, in the first place, for correspondents to caricature what may be said; and in the second place, we shall often have the precise point of the speaker, and perhaps, his statements, misrepresented. But it is said that the Comptroller has provided that these debates shall be published in pamphlet form, which will obviate the necessity of the proposed publication. I apprehend this publication in pamphlet form will not be on our desks as promptly as the newspapers, because with the newspapers it is a very necessity, to appear by a certain hour; so that they will be in every member's hands at the breakfast table, and he will know what has been said the day before, in consequence of the rule which prevails with regard to the publication of newspapers. Not so with these documents, which may come to us one, two, three, four or five days after the debate has taken place. Another point of view is, with regard to the expense. If it will be less expensive to print it in pamphlet form, I think we may obviate the objection which arises from the consideration that we should have this in pamphlet form, as well as in this newspaper form, by making some arrangement with the printers to have the matter in their columns transferred to pamphlet form at a much less rate than has been contracted for by the Comptroller. This is not an unusual thing; the Congress of the United States publishes its debates at its own expense in the Congressional Globe and I do not know why we may not do the same. In all the views of this question, therefore, I shall sustain this report.

Mr. BARKER—I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after "resolved," and inserting the following:

"That the Comptroller and Secretary of State be requested to contract with two daily papers published in the city of Albany, to publish daily reports of the proceedings and debates of this Convention, as furnished by the stenographer, providing the same can be contracted for at just and reasonable rates, and not exceeding in the entire amount twelve thousand dollars."

The objection to adopting the resolution, as reported by the committee, seems to be based upon the idea that this Convention has not the power to make this recommendation, or incur this debt. I concur somewhat in that sentiment, but it seems to me that, by the provision of the 8th section of the act, the power is conferred upon the Comptroller and Secretary of State, and that they are vested with the discretion to decide what printing is necessary for the use of this body, and, with that view, I have offered this amendment. I will read the 8th section, as my argument seems to be suggested by that.

"Sec. 8. The Comptroller and Secretary of State are hereby authorized and required to receive proposals and make contract, for all the printing necessary for the said Convention, under the provisions of this act, and all such printing shall be done under that contract. Such proposals shall be called for on public notice by advertisement as they shall determine."

It seems to me it was the intention of the Legislature that these two State officers should decide what printing is necessary, and if this body requests them to make a contract of this character, they will concur in the suggestion, and we shall thereby relieve ourselves of the delicate question which some gentlemen have raised.

Mr. A. J. PARKER—Mr. President, I should prefer the resolution as reported by the committee, to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker], though I should be most willing to vote for it in that form, if the other cannot be adopted. I concur entirely in what has been said by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], in regard to the power of this Convention to incur such expense as is necessary for the performance of our duties. Certain it is we cannot be trammelled by any legislative action. Of course we must all agree with what he has said in regard to the convenience, and that these reports will be of use in understanding from day to day the course of debate, and from the light it will give us as to the votes we are to cast. And I beg leave to add another consideration, which strikes me as important, and which I think should induce us to vote for this resolution, and that is this: This Constitution is to be submitted to the people at the November election. They are then to pass upon it, and they should have, before that time, not only the proposed Constitution itself, but they should be informed with regard to the whole course of debate that has taken place in the discussions of the Convention; and I know of no form in which this information will be so likely to be given to the people as in the mode prescribed, if these debates are published verbatim, as proposed, in the two leading papers of this city, each representing one of the great political parties of the State, and which if thus spread throughout the entire State will be brought within the reach of every intelligent voter, who may wish to be informed of the reasons that have influenced delegates in the votes they have given. I believe it is the best mode of informing the public mind and qualifying it to judge of the wisdom of the conclusions to which we may arrive. The expense has been spoken of, but it seems to me, that is trifling, compared with the importance of having this whole matter understood by the people, and of enabling them to judge of the propriety of these clauses of the Constitution, with all the light we have had in considering them and in voting upon them. I shall, therefore, Mr. President, very cheerfully support this proposition as it now stands, without regard to the substitute of the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] because, by that amendment, some little time will elapse in order to advertise for proposals, and it is high time that these debates should be laid on our tables daily.

Mr. ALVORD—I wish the gentlemen who urge the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee, to answer me this one simple question: The Albany Argus and the Albany Journal are taken in the county of Onondaga to the extent, probably, of seventy-five copies of both—I possibly may have put it too high, but I have not probably got it very much too low. Now, what is the result in my county? This proposed publication is for the purpose of giving information to the people from day to day in regard to the debates of this Convention. The result is simply this, with regard to the seventy-five who take it—and many of them take it merely because of their desire to ascertain the state of the market in this locality, and without any regard to what may be otherwise contained in the paper,—that to those men is confined the entire knowledge of this whole matter, or else our local papers, taking these papers in exchange, are compelled, at their own expense, to go on and set up the type, taking the debates from these papers, and put them into their local journals, which are distributed broadcast all over the country, in order that they may reach the entire mass of the people. Why should we go on and pass a resolution that the papers here shall be paid six thousand dollars apiece for publishing these reports from the hand of the stenographer? Why not also say to each and every one of the local papers of the counties, "if you will go on in addition thereto and publish them in your papers you shall be paid five or six thousand dollars apiece!" If it is for the purpose of giving information to the people, it seems to me this is more appropriate and more proper than the original resolution. Then Sir, there is another thing; the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker,] has offered an amendment here. I think he misunderstands the purport and intent, and the absolute meaning of this eighth section. It is this—that the Comptroller and Secretary of State are not the proper persons to judge of what is the necessary printing of the Convention, but the Convention having determined that matter, they have advertised for proposals and entered into a contract with parties for the performance of that duty for the Convention. It also strikes me, and in fact I think I have been so informed, that the Comptroller and Secretary of State have already made the contract authorized and required by the eighth section of the law giving form and complexion to this Convention, and I will leave it to the lawyers to determine this simple proposition which I make to them. If they have made this contract, which says in terms that they shall do all the printing necessary for the Convention, will it not be that these contractors, on their part, have got a vested right; and if you undertake to take this printing out of their power, under that contract, and put it into these papers, will they not have an equitable right, at least, if not a legal one—because they cannot sue a sovereign State—to demand that all the profits arising out of this printing should result to them, and should be paid to them, under the contract they have made with the Comptroller and Secretary of State. Therefore, I am of the opinion, that we should not proceed further in this direction, until we shall have had before us, from the Comptroller and Secretary of State, a copy of that contract or agreement, which they have made with the printers, to do the necessary printing for this Convention, to see whether it does not, in the broad terms of the section itself, compel those contractors to hold themselves in readiness to perform all the printing we shall order. If it does sir, it strikes me that there can be no question whatever, but what these printers will have an equitable lien upon all the profits which may arise to these papers that have this outside printing.

Mr. BARKER—I desire to ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] a question. Suppose this Convention directs the printing of a report, then I suppose the Comptroller and Secretary of State are to provide for that printing; is that your understanding of it?

Mr. ALVORD—My understanding is, that the Comptroller and Secretary of State have made a contract of this kind—a contract with A. B. that he will hold himself in readiness to do and perform all the necessary printing. The contract requires the printing of all matters that shall be ordered by the Convention, without any reference to reports, or anything else; and they shall have the privilege of doing the work.

Mr. BARKER—That, I apprehend, does not take from them the power to make a further contract for printing, in the mode and manner which this Convention will suggest, and I think it is the duty of these public officers to follow the suggestions of this Convention in that direction. It can be easily arrived at by the provisions of the same section, by advertising for proposals, which can be done in a few days' notice, and the next section has provided for the fund out of which it may be paid.

Mr. CORBETT—I think that section 8 contemplates an entire contract, how the work of printing shall be done, and I think gentlemen are mistaken when they assume that the committee propose to contract with the two papers named in the report. A recommendation is not a contract. These two papers come here and state that they will publish the debates of this Convention for the sum named, and that they will take the risk of getting their pay from the Legislature. There is no contract whatever; they simply enter into an arrangement, we, on our part, agreeing to recommend to the Legislature to pay this sum. That is all there is of it. I do not see that there is any violation of the eighth section in the recommendation of the committee. Yesterday the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] said that the papers named in the resolution had not a very extensive circulation in his locality, but I trust in the matter of circulation of newspapers, and perhaps in the matter of reading them, the village which the gentleman has the honor to represent will not be taken as an index to other portions of the State. My colleague from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] states that seventy-five copies of the Journal are taken in Syracuse, and probably as many of the Argus.

Mr. ALVORD—I said of both.

Mr. CORBETT—I think the gentleman is mistaken. I think that at least fifty copies of each paper are taken at Syracuse, and a copy of each is in all our public libraries, and each paper has a large number of subscribers in Syracuse, beside all the newspapers published in Syracuse receive the Argus and Journal in exchange, and in that way the entire county receives the benefit of the news. With regard to pamphlets—they are mainly for the use of the Convention. We have eight hundred copies ordered for our own use, and supposing we mail six hundred to our constituents, there is an expense of $12 a day for postage, to say nothing of the manual labor of preparing these documents for mailing. If the character of the discussions here is at all proportionate to the interest and the importance of the subjects discussed, the people ought to know something about them. It is barely possible that the interest in the doings of the Convention will not be permanent, and if so, I wish the people to have these debates while the interest is at its height. Beside, sir, we shall pay the Stenographer a large sum of money for his services here, and we do not want this large pile of manuscript lying useless for one hundred days, or as long as the Convention may remain in session. We want the public to know something of what is going on here, and we cannot give the requisite information by the small number of eight hundred pamphlets. I am therefore decidedly in favor of the report of the Committee.

Mr. GOULD—With a view of enabling members of the Convention to ascertain precisely the terms of the contract, which has been made by the Comptroller and the Secretary of State, I move that this subject be laid upon the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Gould it was declared to be lost.

Mr. FERRY—Since this Committee was authorized to make this report, the Convention have appointed a Committee on Contingent Expenses, and it seems to me that this is a subject which is eminently appropriate to be referred to that Committee, and I make a motion that this whole matter be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope, Mr. President, that motion will not prevail—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that a motion to refer is not debatable.

Mr. E. BROOKS—May not a reason be given for not adopting the motion, without trespassing on the rules of the Convention?

The PRESIDENT—It may, if it does not involve the merits of the question.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I will not go into the merits of the question at all; I simply wish to say to the Convention, we must meet this question now, or hereafter. We have had a long debate upon it; we understand it now, and we had better dispose of it at once.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Ferry, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. NELSON—It has been suggested, that the Convention must meet this question as it presents itself. It occurred to my mind, not as an editor or professional man, that it would be well to determine first, before voting upon this question, whether this publication shall be made. It is suggested by some gentleman, that it ought to be made for the convenience of the members of the Convention. It is also suggested, that it is well for the publication to be made for the benefit and advantage of the people who may read it. Looking at it in this two-fold view, so to speak, which will then be most convenient for members of the Convention? It must be apparent I think, that the most convenient manner or mode of its being placed in the hands of the members of the Convention, is in the public newspaper, which reaches us, as has been suggested, every morning at the breakfast table; at all events it will reach every member, before he comes into this Convention and he will be enabled to review everything which has been said on the previous day in the Convention. But to my mind the most important aspect of this question is that which affects the public. We know, in looking back over the votes which have been cast in reference to this Convention, that the public have taken really but very little interest in it. The question whether a body of men should be elected to alter, or to propose alterations in the fundamental law of the State, called out, in some of the districts, not a single vote of one of the parties. In the counties of Orange and Sullivan. I am told that but one ticket was voted for. So throughout the great body of the State, the vote, which was perhaps as important as any which has been cast within the last twenty years, was so small that it has even suggested the inquiry whether this Convention is legally and properly here. Although that question has not been passed upon, yet, adopting the old rule, which is pretty well established, that bodies never lose any of their jurisdiction by their own consent, I will assume that the Convention is properly here. And I think we may assume another thing; that it is the desire and opinion of the gentlemen composing this Convention, that their action will do some good, and be of some advantage to the future prospects and history of the State; and that it will be important in the future to the people of the State who adopt the action of this Convention. Knowing, as we do, the little interest the public have taken in this question, would it not be well, when you send to the people who live in the rural districts and the cities, the result of that action, that you send also the words, reasons and arguments which have induced the action you may take, and led to the results at which you may arrive. There is one other question—that is the question of expense. I take it for granted if it is well to publish these debates, those having charge of such publication will so order and direct the matter that it will be in the cheapest form, and at the same time so as to satisfy the wants of the people. It is not alleged or claimed, if I correctly understood the report of the Committee, that there is any power in the Convention to create a legal obligation for the payment, but it is proposed by the gentlemen at the head of these papers, that they take upon themselves the risk of publishing these reports, and submit it to a future Legislature to pass upon, or to ratify the action of the Convention and pay the bill. It is suggested that but few of the people of the different counties will receive the Albany papers, and it is stated that in the county of Onondaga there are but seventy-five subscribers to these papers. If that is so, and these seventy-five get them, then I would like to ask the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] if he thinks that by any means the pamphlets would reach any more than the same number of persons? The people who feel an interest in this Convention, editors, publishers, and the public newspapers, will know, or have a right to think, that the local papers where the Convention meets, will give accurately the occurrences and debates of this Convention. If that is so, and seventy-five copies go to the county of Onondaga, reaching all the newspaper offices of the county; and five, six, or ten go the county of Dutchess, and so on throughout the State, whatever is of interest or importance, the local papers will publish and send forth, so that every single voter in the State will understand exactly what the Convention has done and the reasons and arguments by which the Convention was induced to do it.

Mr. CLINTON—I have listened to this argument with great interest. I am opposed to the passage of this resolution in any form; but if it is to be passed in substance in any form, I prefer that the course pointed out by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] be pursued. It strikes me that is the legal and proper form. As to the merits of the question, I am not convinced that the publication of these debates in these two newspapers will increase the amount of information, and result to the benefit of the people of the State, and will voluntarily and of necessity and with a view to their own circulation and respectability, be diffused by the papers throughout the State. Mr. President, there is another objection, to this matter in my mind; as I understand the report of the Committee, the Secretary of State and the Comptroller in the determination of what is necessary in the way of printing, as provided by the law under which we have assembled, have made a contract, and they have provided in that contract for the printing of the debates. The Committee state that under this provision, a contract was made with Weed, Parsons & Co., dated, May 16th, 1867, for the printing of documents, for such a compensation and at such a rate, for the printing of the journal at such a rate and for the printing of the debates at such a rate and in such a form. If we are to have these debates printed and laid upon our tables in this pamphlet form, it strikes me, with all deference to the gentlemen who take the opposite view, that for our use and our purposes, it will be the most convenient form. Then the resolution submitted by the committee requires a thing which under no circumstances could I vote for; but not being in favor of the resolution itself I shall not propose any amendment. I wish to avoid all appearance of evil! I do not wish any imputation, such as we have heard with reference to legislative bodies, to be thrown upon this Convention. We all take our own newspapers; we all take these newspapers every morning and every evening; there are probably very few gentlemen here who do not purchase them. The law also provides that we shall have these debates in this form. This resolution provides, that each of these papers thus singled out, is to receive $6,000 apiece for printing in full these debates; and shall furnish to each of us, without compensation, two copies of their respective papers. That I cannot vote for.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The consideration which will control my action on this subject, refers especially to the question of my own instruction. The people of the State have sent us here for the purpose of taking such action as in the light which we should become possessed of, we shall believe will be for the well-being of the State. And I conceive it my duty to obtain here the best information under the circumstances I am able to possess as to the mode in which I shall discharge my duties. I believe that the debates of the Convention are among the best modes of instruction that the minds of the members can resort to for the guidance of themselves in the votes which they shall give. Now there is nothing to be done without some expense. Members sit here and listen to debate, and every minute of debate costs the State money, and yet no gentleman will believe that we are doing a wrong to the State in putting the State to the expense of the Convention listening to a reasonable and well intended discussion of matters that come before it. If then it be right to put the State to the expense of listening, and have the members listen to protracted discussions which must necessarily ensue here, I take it, it is not more wrong to have these discussions put in a shape by which the people and members will be instructed as to what has been put forward in this body. It is because I believe that these debates are necessary to our instruction, that I shall vote for the adoption of the report.

Mr. SPENCER—With due deference to the opinions which has been expressed here as to who is to determine upon the necessity of any printing that may be required, I desire to submit whether these gentlemen who have expressed the opinion that it is to be determined by the Comptroller and the Secretary of State are not mistaken. The language of the act relating to this subject is this: "The Comptroller and the Secretary of State are hereby authorized and required to receive propositions and make contracts for all the printing necessary for the State Convention." This act does not provide that they shall determine upon the necessity, nor does it leave that inference. If I correctly understand the language of that act, the inference is left that the Convention itself shall determine upon what printing is necessary for its purposes. And in accordance with that understanding, the Comptroller and the Secretary of State, as I understand, have made a contract in which they have provided not only for a certain class of printing, but for every class of printing that could be possibly required by the Convention — and under one of the clauses of that contract, as I understand it, the Convention is authorized to require the printing of these debates, and not only the printing of these debates, but printing in the form which is suggested under the resolution reported by the committee. I make these remarks merely by way of suggestion, in order that gentlemen who have not carefully considered this subject, may determine for themselves by whom this necessity is to be determined, and without indicating upon my part whether I will favor this resolution in either form proposed or not.

Mr. CARPENTER—I do not wish to add one word to the discussion that has been had upon this question, but I rise simply to offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved." and insert the following:

"That the Stenographer of this Convention be, and he is hereby directed to furnish to the Albany Evening Journal and Albany Argus, within twenty-four hours, if possible, after the debates and proceedings of each day, a legible manuscript report of such debates and proceedings, if said papers should desire to publish the same."

Mr. FOWLER—I offer the following amendment—

The PRESIDENT—A further amendment is not now in order, there being two amendments already pending.

Mr. McDONALD—I do not rise to argue this question, but simply to explain and state some facts. Since the resolution offered by the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould], to lay the resolution on the table in order to procure copies of the contracts, has been voted down, it would be proper to state what the contract contains, for I have seen it. The contract as set forth by the report of the committee provides for three kinds of specified printing. Then there is a provision for miscellaneous printing which the contract provides shall be paid for at the rates current at the date of the contract in the city of Albany. Then the contract provides in these words in reference to the debates (and I read from a literal transcript from the contract): "For debates, each 800 copies of eight pages, each page to contain not less than 3,000 ems of brevier and nonpareil type, to include all charges, $5.88, and for each additional one hundred copies, of eight pages, one dollar." Then there is a provision for documents and then another provision for the Journal. I hold in my hand a calculation, made by Mr. Parsons, one of the contractors, in regard to the debates, which is as follows: 800 copies, of 1,000 pages, regular order, $735 each; additional 1,000 copies, of 1,000 pages, $125. That is what the contract contains. I now wish to explain a little in regard to what I read in the Argus of this morning. It alleges that I offered a proposition to have printed a large number of copies of the debates. I offered a resolution which appears on the files and which does not provide for exceeding 600 copies of the debates. The article alleges that the pamphlets are to contain sixteen pages each. There is no such provision in the resolution. The resolution provides only for so many copies under the contract, and the contract fixes a price for eight pages and not sixteen pages. As I see a representative of the Argus present, [Mr. Cassidy,] I will state what I understand the facts to be, and if I am not right he can correct me. I understand the facts to be that that contract for printing the debates was let at the low prices at which it was let, because they were intended to be published in the newspaper any way, and being published there, the type could be transferred for publication in the pamphlet, and in that way the contractors could get their pay.

Mr. CASSIDY—There was no such understanding as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. McDONALD—That was the reason stated by the Journal to the Comptroller, not the Argus.

Mr. FRANCIS—I will say in reference to the Evening Journal, that the proprietors of that paper have stated distinctly, that under no circumstances will they publish these debates, unless they receive pay for the same, as is now proposed, and they were quite anxious, that there should be an early report, so as to settle that question.

Mr. McDONALD—I only state what I understood from the Comptroller, that such was stated to him, that the reason of their taking the contract at so low a rate, was that they intended to set the debates up for the paper and they could then transfer the type, to publish them in pamphlet form. I will further state that the parties who made the award, were a day in determining which was the lowest contract. In getting at the award they had to calculate upon what the Convention might order. If this Convention ordered a certain number of the debates, it would be the lowest contract. If it did not, it would not be, and so they had to calculate upon the probabilities. I understand this as another fact; that each day's proceedings set up in this way are being stereotyped just as they appear in the paper, without amendment or change, to be printed in the pamphlet. I see before me a statement in the Argus that the proceedings and debates of the Constitutional Convention of 1846, were published by both papers. I would ask for information, as I understand the fact to be, that at that time both papers not only published the debates without cost, but furnished their own reporters and paid the entire expense throughout, neither getting one cent from the Convention, nor asking for it. And, although these two papers do not intend to publish the entire debates, they do intend to publish the greater portion of them—at least, so I understand. Now with regard to another matter. There is a clause which gentlemen have forgotten to read. After providing that they shall contract all printing necessary, the law says, "that all such printing shall be done under such contract." If this printing is not necessary it ought not to be done. If it is necessary it should be done under the contract. The contract is let. It is signed by the officers of the State, and I cannot see why the contracting parties on the other side are not at liberty to claim that they are freed from the contract if they see fit to do so. I may say further that I have inquired of several editors and they tell me that they would much prefer the pamphlet edition. I refer to editors in the country. They say that if they have the pamphlet edition they can extract what they desire to publish and then lay the pamphlet on the shelf and if any opposing editor should criticise them they have the pamphlet by them for further reference. The debates are laid out before them and they are ready at any time to be used in the discussion of the subjects involved. But in the case of a daily paper, the debates would be looked over—whatever was found immediately requisite would be cut out and then the paper would be thrown away. These are the considerations which weigh with the men with whom I have advised. But I have no doubt if the two newspapers mentioned choose to publish the debates in their daily issues the people will subscribe for the papers as they did in 1846, and the publishers will be fully recompensed as they were when they published the debates of the Convention of 1846. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] considers that this Convention has the power to order this printing to be done. Has this Convention any power whatever? Does the gentleman propose to insert in the Constitution a clause providing that the Albany

Mr. MURPHY—I did not propose, I may say in reply to the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] to put into the Constitution a provision that this expense should be paid under authority of an article of the Constitution, or that a proposition in regard to it shall be submitted to the people. The proposition which I presented to the Convention is simply this: that it is not in the power of the Legislature to limit the powers of this body in respect to the performance of its duty. What the Legislature has done has been to pass an enabling act by which the expenses of the Convention can be paid. When they gave to this body the power to form a Constitution or to amend it, they gave to it all the powers necessary for the performance of that duty. And although a legal claim might not be raised against the State, yet certainly an equitable claim would be raised in this case which the Legislature would sanction and pay. It is ridiculous to suppose that the Legislature would say that this Convention must travel in just such a route. Does anybody suppose that they meant that we should not have all the facilities which may be necessary for the purpose of correctly doing our work? Not at all. We who are entrusted with such great power as the forming of a constitution, certainly may be entrusted with the minor power to determine what is convenient and necessary for the performance of our duty. That is the principle which I meant to assert, and which, I think, is incontrovertible. I put this simply upon the ground of its being for the convenience of the Convention. I will state to the gentleman a simple fact called forth by his remark. He states that the debates were published in 1846 by two of the newspapers in this city. They were. There was the Atlas report and the Argus report—reports by two papers on the Democratic side of the House, if I may be permitted to allude to a political designation here. There was a rivalry existing between those papers premonitory to the split which broke up the party two years afterwards. They were anxious to get the start, and I believe that both of them were made nearly bankrupt by the operation. And here is another fact that I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to, that these reports did not contain a faithful account of what transpired in that body. Look into those debates, and you will not find a single syllable in regard to the question of the calling of future conventions, and yet that subject was discussed in that body. There was a debate upon the subject. I recollect it, and other gentlemen who are here, and who were members of that Convention, remember it also. There was quite a discussion as to the language of the provision of the Constitution providing for the calling of future conventions. If we had had that reported, there would have been some light upon and some signification as to what was intended by that provision. You find nothing there. Then too, those reports are full of errors—if I may be allowed such a paradox—full of omissions. Probably if the debates had been fully reported, they would have extended to double the size in which they appear in the published volume. I want to have these debates fully reported if possible, and laid upon our desk the day after they shall have taken place, in order to have any error corrected which may have crept into the report of the Stenographer, and also that I may know what may have been said by gentlemen who entertain different views from myself, and whom I may desire to answer or to acquiesce with if I deem their views just and right. I say it is impossible that every member should know what has taken place in some of the debates. We are doing this for our own convenience and enlightenment, and instruction, and in that view, it is for the benefit of the State at large to give us full and prompt reports of the debates. For what is the benefit of having discussion if our ears are not open to hear them, and we cannot know what is said. I certainly hope the Convention will adopt the report.

Mr. GREELY—I shall support the amendment last proposed by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] on this floor. I think that the proposition is liberal towards the newspapers and is fair towards the people of the State. It has been admitted by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], who was a member of the former Convention, that no paper was paid by that Convention for the printing of its debates. And I may say that no former Convention has paid money either for the reporting of its debates or the printing of them, or its proceedings, in any newspaper. We meet here and have provided for skillful, able and full reports of our debates. We have provided for that at the expense of the people of the State of New York. Now, are these debates worth printing? They will be printed in our documents, at any rate, and the final report of our debates will be published for record and for reference. Shall they also be published for the present information of the Convention? I think they ought to be; and I think that unless we are to be exceedingly dull and trivial this summer, if we provide that the debates shall be skillfully and accurately reported, the leading journals of Albany can very well afford to take the reports which have been provided at a very considerable expense by the people of the State of New York, and publish the debates in their succeeding issues without further cost to the people. Hitherto they have done it at their own cost, and now the entire cost of reporting is saved to them. The other amendment offered by the gentleman from Chautauque [Mr. Barker], I am opposed to, because I am opposed to making a payment in any form for the publication of the debates. I do not want to advertise to the people of this State that our debates are to be so poor and worthless that the journals of Albany cannot afford to print them. If they are to be of that character that the printer must be paid to print them, the people will naturally conclude that they cannot afford to read them unless they are paid also. [Laughter.] If they are too poor to be printed in journals which circulate among the people, unless the printing of them is paid for, the legitimate inference will be that the readers should also be paid for being informed of what we have done. The gentleman has spoken about the circulation of those journals. I live in a county more populous than the county of Onondaga, which the gentleman [Mr. Alvord] represents. We have there 120,000 inhabitants, and yet there is probably not fifty copies of the Albany Argus and Journal taken in the county. It seems to me that people among whom I live should not be taxed as largely as they will be if the report of this Committee is adopted, to enlighten people in other parts of the State, and that a more fair and equal distribution should be made. If twenty copies of the debates are given to each delegate, I would try to have mine sent to people I represent to the best advantage for giving a fair understanding of what we are doing. But if the circulation is to be made through the Albany journals, and they are to depend upon them to enlighten the people, I do not believe that 500 copies will find their way below the Highlands, although below that point is more than one-third of the population of the State. I think that we should deal generously with the publishers of these papers, and in my view, we do so, if we give them the debates which we have had taken at the expense of the people without cost. For that reason I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter].

Mr. FRANCIS—As a practical matter, it may be well to state the fact that unless this publication is provided for as proposed, there will be no newspaper publication of these verbatim reports of the proceedings that are supplied by the Stenographer. That point is settled. Then with reference to the question raised by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that we are very generous to offer a verbatim report of these proceedings, free of cost, to the newspapers for publication, and that if what we say is worthy of being printed at all, the newspaper publishers will be glad to receive and publish the reports. When the Constitutional Convention of 1846 was held, the Atlas and the Argus, each as a matter of individual enterprise, did publish the reports of the Convention in extenso, as has been stated, but their publication involved a loss of many thousand dollars, and under the pressure of that experience it is not very probable that private enterprise will undertake the publication of our proceedings now. Now, as suggested by Gentlemen, if we want these proceedings published in the newspapers, then we must provide for the payment for doing the work, and the terms proposed I considered exceedingly liberal indeed, they being one-half the legal rates of publication. It is for this Convention to decide whether they prefer a publication in pamphlet form, or whether the report shall go into two leading newspapers of this city which go over the entire State, and are received by newspaper editors in every county, and through which the people may be apprised of what we are doing, as our work progresses. This is the practical question for us to decide.

Mr. TILDEN—I do not desire to take up any considerable time of the Convention in respect to this subject matter, but I confess it seems to me desirable that we should attain a somewhat clearer view on one or two questions which have been discussed. Now, in the first place, I think it is quite apparent that the contract entered into by the public officers, although I have not had the opportunity to read that contract, relates merely to what is known as job printing; whereas, the object contemplated by the resolution now pending relates rather more to the publication than to the printing of the proceedings of this Convention. Sir, there are two objects to be attained by the publication proposed. The one, and the most important and primary object is the convenience of the members of this body. Now, it will happen in the course of our proceedings, when the Committees get into full operation, that members will desire, in their attendance upon these committees, to withdraw temporarily from the House, without its formal assent. It will very often happen, also, that we shall be obliged to ask permission of the House, for Committees to sit during the sessions. How is it going to be possible for us to keep up with the current of debate, unless we can have, daily presented to us, a complete, exact and authentic record of the debates and proceedings? I do not see any other mode in which this can be accomplished, and I think that is an object of very grave importance to the proceedings of this body. Sir, it might shorten debate very much if gentlemen could know precisely the position occupied by those who differ in opinion from them; and how far the subject has been discussed when they have not had the opportunity to be present. I would not give much for these reports, if they are to be delayed two, or three or four days, as is usually the case where the attempt is made to submit them in book form. I do not think they would be of much value. I do not know as I would vote for any of the resolutions pending unless there was attached to them the condition which I understand is attached, that we should have daily the reports proposed to be given. I think, that if in the Evening Journal, so far as practicable, and in the Argus of the next day certainly, the entire report of the proceedings of the day can be had, it would greatly facilitate the proceedings of this body. I am in favor, therefore, of that system, and I am in favor of it, without any sort of consideration of generosity to either of these journals in the city of Albany. It is not a case where I should feel at liberty to exercise any generosity. But this is necessary, in my best judgment for the convenience and purposes of this body. And, sir, it is not very costly. The cost is perhaps, not more than five per cent of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this Convention, and I shall not hesitate to apply that amount to an object which I deem among the most beneficial to which we can appropriate any of the funds placed at our command. Sir, a second and subordinate object of the proposed publication is, to inform the people of our proceedings and discussions preparatory to their vote upon the Constitution which we shall frame, in the fall. In respect to that I will simply say that there is a convenience in taking the existing established journals for circulation. If I want to go to Buffalo, I will not wait to build a new railroad to get there, but I will take one that already exists. These journals are established concerns. They have their affiliations everywhere; and though their circulation is not very large among my own constituents compared to our own journals, either in the State or in the country at large, still through this channel we reach all the other journals of the State and country. If I do not prefer to publish these debates in the New York city papers, it is simply because the New York city papers are not printed here, and because we do not sit in the city of New York. We must take the Albany journals because the Convention sits in Albany, and because the journals are printed in Albany. There is a convenience and fitness in doing it in this mode—in taking the existing methods to meet our wants. Now, sir, if we should have laid on our desks twenty or thirty copies of our debates published in pamphlet form, these have all to be addressed and put in the post office in order to reach our constituents. Even then they would not be found at the libraries, or found by the other journals, or found at those places where people congregate. They would not, in my judgment, pass through the other journals into general circulation throughout the State, and I should fear that our pamphlet copies, as all my experience in similar cases has shown, would be several days behind the proceedings of this Convention, and thus become practically of little value for the members for whose convenience the publication is intended. And it is, sir, because of my belief that we shall find this money one of the most useful appropriations that we can make of the funds at our disposal, that I shall vote in favor of the original resolution as reported by the Committee.

Mr. COOKE—Mr. President: It seems to me, sir, that there is one principle involved in this discussion that is worthy of being settled now. When the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] sent up his amendment to the resolution reported by the Committee, the argument was started by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that this Convention was barred from taking any action in determining what printing should be done for its purposes. I could not understand until the argument had progressed to a considerable extent how it was that the Secretary of State and the Comptroller had entered into a contract with Weed, Parsons & Co., or any other firm, before the assembling of the Convention, for doing certain printing, and that that was to foreclose all action on the part of the Convention in regard to any printing that it might deem necessary and proper. I have always understood that it was the business of a body like this to determine what record it should make of its own proceedings, and how it should be published. I never supposed that such a body was to be interfered with or controlled by officers who were not connected with it, and particularly under a statute such as we have here. This section 8 provides that the Comptroller and Secretary of State are authorized and required to receive proposals and make a contract for all the printing necessary for the State Convention under the provisions of this statute. Now, the simple question is, how shall it determine what printing shall be the necessary printing for this Convention? I do not apprehend that the Legislature ever intended to invest this power in these two officers; but it evidently means that whatever this Convention deems necessary and proper printing for its purposes, they shall upon the requisition of the Convention enter into a contract for. It is said that the Comptroller and Secretary of State have contracted for all the printing to be done for this Convention. And it is claimed that the contractors under that contract will be entitled to all the profits of any printing which we may hereafter require, and allot to other publishers. It is enough for us to know that we have a right here to determine these questions for ourselves, and we are not to be directed or controlled by the Comptroller and Secretary of State in that particular. It seems to me, sir, that the amendment of the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker], presents this question in its true light and takes the true position. This Convention has no right to contract a debt against the State for this printing. This Convention can create no liability. It has no power to give the proprietors of these two journals, a demand that they can enforce against the State, and that the Legislature will be required to respect when the claim is presented to them. The Comptroller and Secretary of State have that power. The Legislature intended to place that power to enter into a valid and binding contract, somewhere, and they have done it by this provision requiring the Comptroller and the Secretary of State, upon the requisition of the Convention, to enter into a contract to do any printing that the Convention may deem necessary. It may be said that there is an appropriation made of only $250,000 to cover all the expenses of this Convention. Is it proper, if that was the Legislative intent, that the $250,000 should be sufficient for all purposes, including the printing, for this Convention to go on and pass a resolution, requesting the next Legislature to allow this claim to newspaper proprietors? Is it not better to create a sort of moral, honorable debt against the State for that purpose, than, provided the expenses of this Convention shall extend beyond the $250,000, to leave that deficiency to be made up in some manner at the discretion of some future Legislature? All this Convention can do toward securing the payments of the Evening Journal and Argus for that printing will be by its moral influence upon the Legislature. If we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Chautauqua, [Mr. Barker], whenever the Comptroller and Secretary of State enter into that contract it is binding upon the State, and the Legislature will have to audit the account. Perhaps this is not the best possible medium of communicating with or reaching the public mind in regard to the proceedings of this Convention. Perhaps these two newspapers will not be capable of sufficiently disseminating the important debates of this Convention. My friend from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson] seems to have fallen into the error of supposing it to be the duty of this Convention to force this information upon the people. I do not exactly like the general tone of the gentleman's remarks. I certainly do not like the logic by which he came to the conclusion that the original resolution must be supported. He says there was so little interest in the election of delegates to this Convention, that, in some localities, the citizens hardly came out to vote, and that in many instances, only one ticket was run in a district. If that is so—if they were so indifferent to the fact of the Convention, it is reasonable to suppose that they will be somewhat indifferent to its proceedings. He ought certainly to devise some way by which he can make these indifferent men read the proceedings of this Convention, so as to be able to take final action upon our proceedings by adopting or rejecting the Constitution we shall frame. I feel, sir, that it is necessary to inform the public in some way or manner of the proceedings of this Convention. The time, according to the predictions of many gentlemen upon this floor, which the people will have to deliberate upon the action of the Convention, will be quite short. There will hardly be time enough for a full and elaborate discussion of all the measures proposed by this Convention. It would be well, in my judgment, if the people could be put in possession of the requisite information upon which finally to determine this question. With a view that this information may be afforded, and promptly afforded, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker.]

MR. HALE—I rise merely for the purpose of obtaining information in regard to the contract that has been already made. If I understand the facts aright, a contract has already been made by the Comptroller and Secretary of State, with Weed, Parsons & Co., for the printing of these debates for the Convention. The gentleman from Ontario, who spoke yesterday [Mr. McDonald], stated that he had understood from Mr. Parsons that within three days, at the farthest, after these debates are had, the printed report can be laid on our desks, and that usually they can be within one or two days. If the contract was made, as I understand it to have been, before the organization of this Convention, I wish to ask the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald,] why it is that we now, after seventeen days have elapsed since the organization of the Convention, have not on our files the report of a single days debate.

MR. McDONALD—If the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] will allow me, I will state that that contract does not provide absolutely for the publication of the debates. It provides the price, if this Convention shall order the publication of the debates, at which they shall be published. This Convention has not made any order on the subject; and, therefore, the journals of debates has not been placed upon our desks. In regard to the statement of Mr. Parsons, I will state just what I understood from him. I went there to frame a resolution, at his dictation. He said that within three days after the approval of the debates they could get them out and have them placed upon our desks, no matter how long the debates might be.

Mr. HALE—The answer of the gentleman [Mr. McDonald], does explain the question I asked, but I would suggest that it is important that we have a daily report of our proceedings before us, and that a delay of three days, if it can be avoided, ought not to be made—that on the following day, at least, we should have before us the report of what transpired on any given day.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Carpenter, and it was declared lost—yes 42, noes 76.

Mr. FIELD offered the following amendment:

Strike out the words "and that the next Legislature be requested to make the requisite appropriations for payment of the service," and insert as follows: "and that the cost of such publication be paid pro rata by the members of this Convention, to be deducted by the Comptroller from their compensation."

Mr. FIELD—I offer the amendment, Mr. President, for the reason that I believe it to be highly important that the members of this Convention should, for their own convenience, have the debates before them as soon as possible, and because I believe there is no authority under the act by which this Convention has assembled, to publish the debates in the manner proposed by the resolution to refer the question of payment to the next Legislature.

Mr. WEED—Mr. President: I would like to ask the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Field] if he thinks that it would be proper and right to deduct from his pay and the pay of the gentlemen sitting along on the outer lines of the seats on the south side of this Chamber, the amount of the cost of taking down the partitions and finishing up the parts thus defaced, and which was done to suit their convenience?

Mr. FIELD—Mr. President: In regard to that I will state that I have understood from the Comptroller that he has authority of law to make these alterations; but I do not understand that he considers he has the authority of law to pay for the cost of making the newspaper publication of our debates which is here proposed.

Mr. DUGANNE—I think this question of authority ought to be settled here. I believe that the supreme authority is generally supposed to reside in the people; and the people, not the Legislature, have constituted this Convention. The people have ordered us to do certain work in the way in which we shall determine shall be best, and have authorized us to contract such debts or incur such expense as we shall consider necessary in the performance of our duties. I think, Mr. President, that we are going far wide of the mark in assuming that the Legislature has power to restrict this Convention in this regard.—This is a Convention formed by the primary power of the people, and the Legislature has merely provided certain ways and means to meet the necessary expense of doing the work. It has appropriated $250,000 to meet that expense. I believe, the amount will be amply sufficient and think we have authority to determine that the increased expense for printing shall be paid out of that sum. And, if we should recommend to the Legislature that the payment of it be provided for, by law, then we should merely be recommending a specific appropriation to cover this additional expense not specified in the enabling act. That we have ample authority so to do, there is, I think, no question.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Field, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BARKER—As I am convinced that the Convention desires to come to a direct vote upon the report of the Committee, I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

Mr. McDONALD offered the following substitute for the resolution of the Committee:

Resolved, That this Convention hereby orders nine hundred copies of the debates to be printed under the contract, and deliver the same to the Sergeant-at-arms. That the Sergeant-at-arms furnish five copies to each member of this Convention, and forward ten copies to the Constitutional Convention of Michigan, and furnish ten copies each to the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, Comptroller Treasurer and State Librarian—and that the balance be given to the President.

Mr. CORBETT—I would inquire if a substitute is in order.

The PRESIDENT—A substitute is in order if offered by way of amendment.

Mr. CORBETT—I would like to inquire what would be the effect of a motion to lay the substitute on the table—whether it would lay the whole subject on the table.

The PRESIDENT—It would lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. FOWLER offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That the Comptroller and Secretary of State be, and they are hereby authorized to contract for the publication of the daily debates of this Convention, in pamphlet form, and that there be laid upon the desk of each member of the Convention, from day to day, one copy thereof.

Mr. GOULD—It seems to me that this is much the most preferable form in which this subject has come before us. I wish to meet the line of argument that was made by the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke]. I did not understand the argument of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], to contend that the Comptroller and Secretary of State had a right to dictate as to what shall be printed by this Convention. I understood him to contend that whatever printing was authorized by this Convention, had already been settled upon as to terms by an absolute contract made by those gentlemen, who were authorized to contract by the law, and that they had made a contract with Weed, Parsons & Co., so that whatever is printed, no matter what it is, by authority of this Convention, is to be printed by them, and no one else, in the very language of the law. Now, sir, if that is so—if the printing that is to be done, under authority of this Convention, is to be done by them, it seems to me that it is illegal, in every degree, that we should order the printing to be done by any one else. It is evidently beyond the power of this Convention. Whilst I am on my feet, I wish to protest against the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Duganne], that there is any inherent sovereignty vested in this Convention. This body is as much a creature of law as any other. Sir, what would be the result if this Convention were a sovereign body? Would they have the right to authorize the transfer of funds in the custody of the Comptroller? Would they have a right to set aside a statute already existing? Would they have a right to change any existing law whatever? Sir, the very statement is sufficient to confute it. Now, sir, I hope that the Convention will adopt the last resolution which was offered. If I understood the reasons which actuated the people of this State in calling this Convention, (and I am sure I understand the reasons of my own constituents,) they were that this Convention might devise ways and means for preventing the unauthorized expenditure of the public moneys by the Legislature. They have been grieved and distressed at the lavish, and I may say, brutal and wasteful squandering of the public funds of which some Legislatures have been guilty. Their object in instituting this Convention was, that we might provide means to prevent this reckless expenditure in the future. Now, sir, if this Convention enters upon an unauthorized and illegal course, it would be like the cat which sat around to catch rats and turned into breeding rats instead of catching them. I hope nothing of this kind will be done, because the law is direct and explicit, and requires the persons who shall contract with the Comptroller to do all the printing of every kind. Then, again, with regard to the absolute necessity which is supposed to exist for the publication of the debates of this Convention in these papers. If, as the gentleman argues, they will refuse to publish our debates as they have done heretofore, I am very certain that the Troy papers will take up the publication. I am sure that journalistic enterprise is not so utterly dead in the cities of Troy and Albany that no one paper will be willing to furnish so important a branch of intelligence to its readers. But, sir, if such is the case, I know that in one city, at least, near by, there are two enterprising papers, The Hudson Daily Register, and The Hudson Daily Star, which will accommodate this Convention and will publish regularly the reports of the debates of this Convention. Gentlemen, need not be at all alarmed but what the people will know what is going on in this body. There are gentlemen, I know, who speak so low that it is difficult to understand them; but if these gentlemen make statements which are germane to the subjects, enterprise will diffuse information of their utterances; but if their utterances are not germane, then, certainly it is not of the slightest consequence whether they are heard or not. I think there is no doubt that the pamphlet form is absolutely sufficient, and we have no right whatever, under the law, to go any further.

Mr. MURPHY—I wish to make one statement in reference to the proposition that this printing shall be done by contract. In my view there is no power under this act, in the mode suggested, to make a contract as the State officers have, embracing the contract for printing the debates of this Convention. As I understand this act, which was passed by the Legislature, it was simply for the purpose of enabling the proper printing to be done, to enable us to proceed with our deliberations. The printing of the debates of this Convention is not the printing contemplated by this act. What was meant by printing for the Convention was merely the printing of the reports and other matters which are usually embraced in documents of bodies like this. Printing the debates of the Convention is not "printing for the Convention." Therefore, when the Comptroller undertook to make a contract for printing the debates of the Convention he himself stepped outside of the law in my opinion. We do not get within the law, if that be the object of the amendment, if we should adopt it, and have a contract made with these newspapers. We propose to have these debates printed for our own personal convenience. We can have this convenience subserved in no other way than by having the debates published in the newspapers. To print them in the form proposed and distribute nine hundred copies among members, what does that amount to? According to the statement of one gentleman [Mr. Greeley], there are five hundred copies of the newspapers distributed below on the river. According to the statement of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], there are seventy-five copies circulated in Onondaga county. Make a computation upon that basis and you will see that there are several thousand copies of these journals which go through the State. They supply the reading demand, if I may so express myself, three or four or five times more than it would be supplied in the form of the pamphlet that is proposed. Now, sir, I regard the whole of this matter as outside of the act. You cannot get it within the act by adopting the amendment last proposed. You do not get within the act, if my views of the construction of the eighth section be correct, that is, that it merely contemplates all printing for the Convention, not including the debates, which are extrinsic and outside.

Mr. DUGANNE—I rise to a question of personal explanation. I was misrepresented by the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould]. I did not say that this Convention was a sovereign body in the unlimited construction of that term. I said that, as emanating from the people, who are the primary source of authority, and sent here for the purpose of doing a specific work, the Convention was sovereign over the methods which it conceived best to accomplish that work, and over the expenses necessary for its performance.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise, not for the purpose of protracting this debate, but to thank my friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould] for his correction of the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke]. I was absent from the body of the Convention when the gentleman from Ulster made his remarks. The position which I took in that regard was I suppose in hostility to the position taken by the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] who introduced his amendment. My position was that this Convention had the power to order whatever printing they might see fit, but that the Comptroller and Secretary of State were to contract with the printer to do such printing as we shall choose to order. I wish to answer for a single moment the position taken last by my friend from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. He says his examination of the law shows to him conclusively that the Comptroller has stepped outside of his province by undertaking to contract with these gentlemen, the printers, for printing the debates. I take it, sir, that as a good lawyer, he will take up the whole of that act and look it over from the beginning to the end before he makes judgment in regard to any particular feature in it. That authorizes us to appoint a Stenographer. Now, it must necessarily follow if we appoint a Stenographer to take daily debates from the mouths of the speakers, that we must have some way or other to preserve the results of his labor, and it follows as a matter of necessity, therefore, that the printing of the debates of this Convention is part of the printing which is necessary for this body. I think this explanation clearly and indisputably shows in regard to that fact, that the Comptroller has not stepped beyond his province; that if the Convention conclude these debates should be published, the printer will be bound to publish them under the arrangement made by the contract.

Mr. WEED—I wish to say one word in reference to the last amendment. It has been admitted by every gentleman who has spoken on this question (and the question has been fully discussed by both sides), that it was important that the members of this Convention should have these debates, that they should be able to have them and read them, so that they may more fully understand what is going on in this Convention. Now the amendment proposed is, that the State printer may publish them and place them upon our files in pamphlet form. I simply wish to say this, that you may resolve what you please about the State printer; you may pass resolutions that he place them upon our files within twelve hours or within twenty-four hours, and you will not get them; you will not get them for a week; it will begin as you resolve, but in just about three days that matter will be disposed of, and they will publish them when they get around to them, and you will read them when they publish them, or, in other words, you will never read them at all, because no man will read debates a week or two old. If you want those debates, and if it is necessary for the members of this Convention to have them so that they can fully inform themselves, it seems to me there can be no question but that the only way you can get them is by having them published in some daily paper. They publish their paper daily, and, in their daily issue, you will get this report, otherwise you will not. Some gentlemen may say, as some have already said, that we may resolve that they shall not be paid, unless they are printed according to instructions. They do not care anything about such a resolution. I have seen it tried time and time again; they know that that will all blow over before the time comes for payment, and they will publish them when they can conveniently, and you will never get them on your files in time for the service of the Convention.

Mr. COOKE—I wish to say to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] that I did not observe that he was absent at the time I alluded to his remarks. I think he has been misinformed in regard to the purport of what I said. I understood the gentleman to argue that because the Comptroller and Secretary of State had contracted for all the printing of this Convention, therefore we should not order this printing. I understood the gentleman to give that as one reason why we should not order this printing. The gentleman disclaims the argument which, as I understood him at the time, was that as a contract was made before the organization of the Convention, it was practically, though perhaps not legally, a bar to our making a contract now, for the publication of the debates.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Fowler and it was declared lost.

Mr. CONGER—I will not detain the Convention with any extended remarks, but I shall keep within the letter and the spirit of this law. That we have a right to publish debates, I suppose is incident to the right and the duty of appointing a Stenographer under the act, and that the Comptroller and Secretary of State were justified in the purview of that provision of this act, in making proposals for the printing of the debates, I suppose cannot be disputed. And these proposals having been once made, and the contract entered into by the parties to the proposal for the printing, I take it that the parties who have got the contract have a right to print the debates of the Convention, and that no other person can exercise that right without their consent. If we look at the contract itself, we find that if we order only 800 copies of the debates under the rule, the parties accepting that contract will receive—providing the debates when published will amount to 1,600 pages—the beggarly sum of $1,176,—less than $1,200 for printing, under the rule, 800 copies of a work of 1,600 pages; and I take it we are forced in advance, upon the very consideration of the contract, or at some future day, if not now, to order more than 800 copies of the debates. These parties having the contract, their rights can only be modified with their consent, and I suppose they would give that consent on a reasonable proffer by this Convention, that they should have the right to publish more than the usual number of copies. As the matter stands, both the Convention and the State officers and the printers are in a snarl. If we insist upon the contract, and adhere to the regular number under the rule, we can force the printers to a very great loss under the contract. Moreover, one object of printing the debates will be defeated by the limited number of copies which will be issued, for eight hundred is barely sufficient for the use of the members of the Convention, and the number amounts to nothing in view of the rights of the public, or of those who wish to know what we may say or do. I take it therefore for granted, whether we do it now or at some future day, we must increase the number of copies that we will order of the debates. I suppose, if it were practical, we could induce the State officers and printers so to modify the existing contract, not as to terms, so as to violate the law—but as to the number of copies that would be printed, and we could effect that result without either violating the law or doing any injustice to any party. It may be too late to submit any proposition, but for the purpose of enabling me to vote on this question intelligently and in accordance with my construction of that law, I offer the following amendment, leaving it to the Convention to designate how many more than the usual number of copies they will order.

The SECRETARY read the amendment as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller and Secretary of State be requested to receive proposals and make contracts for the printing and publication from day to day, in the Albany Evening Journal and Argus, of the debates of the Convention, in such wise that the type used in such Journals may be used in book form, so as to furnish to the Convention twice the usual number under the rules. Provided, however, that such contract shall not interfere with any previous arrangement made by such State officers, which the contractors are not willing to modify on the above condition of furnishing double the usual number.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to have it understood that I do not insist upon double the number of copies; the Convention may wish to have ten times the number; and I do not insist upon the manner in which the type is to be set up.—perhaps that better be stricken out—I only want to get before the Convention this idea, that without interfering with any contract or violating any law, we can have this printing done by these papers, on the understanding that they will order ten or twelve times the usual number of copies.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Conger, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. BELL—If I understand the resolution right, there seems to be some discrepancy between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] and the original resolution. If I understand the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] the papers shall receive $6,000.

Mr. E. BROOKS—That is not necessarily so, but the amendment provides that the compensation shall not exceed $6,000.

Mr. BELL—I so understand it; then would it not be well to amend it by saying, that each paper shall receive the sum of $6.50 per column, which in the aggregate shall not exceed the sum of $6,000.

SEVERAL MEMBERS—That is what it says.

Mr. BELL—I do not understand the resolution to be in those words.

Mr. E. BROOKS—If the gentleman will allow me. The aggregate sum is limited to $12,000, that being for the entire publication of the debates of this Convention, and then, that it may be equitable, this sum of $6,000 is apportioned to each of the two journals named.

Mr. BELL—Then the idea is, as I understand it, should the Convention not continue its sessions sufficiently long, so that the sum of $6.50 a column should not amount to $6,000 a piece, they will only receive $6.50 a column for the amount published. If the resolution clearly expresses that, it is all I desire.

The question then recurred on the resolution reported by the committee as amended, and it was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Bergen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Burrill, Cheritree, Chesebro, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Cooke, Corbett, Corning, Curtis, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ely, Endress, Francis, Garvin, Gerry, Grant, Gross, Hale, Hammond, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hatch, Hitchman, Huntington, Jarvis, Kernan, Ketcham, Kinney, Landon, Law, Livingston, Loew, Masten, Mattice, Merrill, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, A. Mr. MERRITT offered the following as a substitute for the article in the existing Constitution 'on the militia':

SECTION 1. A militia force shall be maintained in order to repel invasion, insure protection and security to life and property; to preserve domestic tranquillity, and to aid, when necessary, in the enforcement of the laws; and such force shall at all times be armed, equipped and disciplined, and to that end it shall be maintained at the public expense.

§ 2. It shall be the duty of the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, to fix by law, the number of the organized militia force of the State.

§ 3. All able-bodied male citizens, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years, shall be kept constantly enrolled under such regulations as shall be established by law, and the Legislature shall provide for the expense of enrollment and the support of the organized forces.

§ 4. All persons who have been honorably discharged from the army or navy of the United States, shall, in time of peace, be exempt from service in the militia; and all such inhabitants of this State, of any religious denomination whatever, as, from scruples of conscience, may be exempted therefrom, upon such provisions as may be provided by law.

§ 5. The Governor, or the person exercising the functions of Governor, shall be Commander-in-Chief of all the military forces of the State; he shall appoint and commission the chiefs of the several staff departments, aids-de-camp and military secretary, who shall hold office during his pleasure; their commissions to expire with the term for which the Governor shall have been elected.

§ 6. The Governor shall nominate, and with to select, appoint, all major officers and all ranks of militia, and to determine for the term of one year the appointment.

to provide that all the enrolled militia, not embraced in any regiment of battle, and who are not exempt from service on foot or on horse, shall pay such annual city or town tax, not exceeding, as the Legislature shall determine after the adoption of this Constitution, more than one dollar, which sum shall be placed to the credit of the militia fund of the State to be used for the maintenance of the militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

to be referred to the Committee on Militia.

The question was then put upon the resolution of Mr. Harris, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. LOEW offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Legislature, etc., to consider and report on the expediency of electing members of the Assembly from counties instead of Assembly districts, and for a period of two years instead of one, as provided, every elector to vote upon one ticket for as many persons as the county in which the elector resides is entitled to have to represent it in the Assembly; and no person shall be elected who shall not be a citizen of the United States, for two years an inhabitant of the State, and a resident of the county for one year next preceding the day of election.

The question was put on the resolution, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. LOEW also offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights, to consider and report on the expediency of a constitutional provision, by which a married woman shall, in respect to all matters and things necessarily arising or growing out of the marriage relation, have the same authority, rights, privileges and powers that she now has by law, but in respect to all other matters and things whatsoever, not necessarily arising or growing out of the marriage relation, she shall have the same authority, rights, privileges and powers, and be subject to the same liabilities in all respects, as if she were sole and unmarried.

Also, on the expediency of giving to persons accused of criminal offenses, the right to testify and be examined as witnesses in their own behalf, the same as parties to civil actions and special proceedings now have.

The question was put on the resolution, and declared to be adopted.

Mr. SPENCER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to the Convention a statement containing—

1. The number and names of the Indian tribes residing or holding lands in this State.
  2. The number of Indians belonging to each tribe.
  3. The location and quantity of lands held by each tribe, distinguishing, so far as practicable, and as appears by the records of his office, lands held in common, and lands held in severalty.
  4. Such agricultural and other industrial statistics as may be conveniently and concisely stated.
- Such statement to be prepared from the latest census, and other records pertaining to the subjects referred to.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. GERRY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the powers and duties of the Legislature to consider the propriety of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from passing local or special laws in the following cases:

1. Granting to private individuals or corporations franchises and the right to their use and enjoyment within the corporate limits of cities.
2. Creating or declaring any new divisions of the State with reference to the local government of any part thereof.

3. Creating any local commissions, boards, corporations or officers for the government or regulation of any part of the State, or of any of the cities thereof.

4. Providing for the regulation of the exercise of the elective franchise in any part of the State.

5. Regulating the internal police and the administration of justice within the corporate limits of cities; except for the creation of local tribunals of civil jurisdiction therein.

6. Providing for the imposition or collection of annual or other taxes.

Mr. WEED—May I ask what committee that is to be referred to?

Mr. GERRY—I propose to have it sent to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature other than as specially referred.

Mr. TILDEN—I desire to move the reference of this resolution to the committee mentioned by the gentleman who offers it. I do it for the purpose of suggesting that a more appropriate disposition of these resolutions would be, that the mover of them should move a reference to the appropriate committee, rather than the adoption of them by the Convention. There is a tendency to some extent, perhaps, to make an expression of opinion on the part of the Convention, if it adopts the various resolutions submitted. I do not apply this criticism to the particular case, but present it in reference to this case for the purpose of enabling the Convention to settle its policy hereafter. I think, in all such cases, the more orderly and parliamentary mode, would be for the mover to move the reference of his resolution to the proper committee.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Tilden] that has been done in most of the cases; sometimes they put it in the form of a resolution which necessitates an adoption by the Convention.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Gerry, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. KINNEY offered the following resolution:
Resolved, That the Committee on Education be requested to inquire into the propriety of excluding from our public schools all children under the age of seven years.

Which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Counties, Towns and Villages, their Organization, Government and Powers be instructed to inquire into the propriety of prohibiting the Legislature from granting power to towns to bond themselves for the purpose of constructing railroads; and to devise some uniform and just system of appropriating money for local improvements.

Which was referred to the Committee on Towns, Counties, etc.

Mr. GOULD—I move that the Convention take up for consideration the resolution, offered by me yesterday, calling for information from the County Clerks, etc. It is necessary for the action of the Convention, it should be considered.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution of Mr. Gould as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be directed to procure from the several county clerks in this State, as soon as practicable, a statement embracing the following particulars from the years 1857 to 1866, both inclusive.

1. The number of indictments found in each year in all the criminal courts of the county.

2. The number of persons admitted to bail in each county in each year by said courts.

3. The aggregate amount of bail taken in each year in the courts of record.

4. The aggregate amount of bail ordered to be estreated in each year.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to procure from the several County Treasurers of this State, the amount of money paid to them on account of forfeited bail, in each of the years from 1857 to 1866, inclusive.

Mr. GOULD—I ask that an amendment be made to the last part of the resolution by adding the words "criminal cases."

There being no objection the resolution was so amended.

Mr. McDONALD—I wish to make an amendment requiring the amount of bail collected to be returned.

Mr. GOULD—That is embraced in it.

Mr. MASTEN—The resolution is defective in another particular. There are quite a large number of courts in the cities having extensive criminal jurisdiction which would not be embraced within this inquiry, in respect to which the county clerks would have no information.

Mr. GOULD—I only expected the information which was on the records of the county clerks.

Mr. BARNARD—I will state to the gentleman from Columbia County [Mr. Gould] that his information will be very imperfect. I know in the case of the county of Kings, all the bail bonds and bail pieces are filed in the office of the District Attorney, and if he will direct his inquiry in that direction, then it will embrace all the criminal courts in that county; but if he applies to the County Clerk he will get no information at all.

Mr. GOULD—I see there is some mistake or misunderstanding in regard to this resolution, and therefore, I will ask that it be laid over until tomorrow.

Mr. HADLEY moved to call up the resolution offered by him yesterday in reference to the Court of Appeals.

The Secretary then proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Court of Appeals report to this Convention with all convenient speed:

1. The total amount of all funds and securities now held by him in trust, under any order, judgment or decree of any Court, including the late Court of Chancery, and that he specify the total amount of such funds and securities which has remained with said Clerk or his predecessors for more than twenty years, if any.

2. The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for fifteen years, and less than twenty years.

3. The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for ten years, and less than fifteen years.

4. The total amount of such funds and securities that has so remained for five years, and less than ten years.

5. In what manner such funds are invested and secured, and at what rate of interest.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Hadley, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOLGER—I move to call up the resolution offered by me on the 18th, calling for information from the County Clerks. It is suggested by the gentleman on my right that the proper disposition of that resolution would be a reference to the Judiciary Committee; therefore I make that motion.

There being no objection the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. WEED the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 21 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. E. HALLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY.

Mr. FULLER—In the Journal it is stated that I presented a memorial of Hon. Henry R. Selden, late Judge of the Court of Appeals. The Journal in that respect is incorrect. Judge Selden is now in Europe, and has been for a year past. I merely said I presented a memorial from a late Judge of the Court of Appeals.

The PRESIDENT—The Journal Clerk informs the Chair that the memorial was endorsed Henry R. Selden.

Mr. FULLER—It was not so endorsed by me, sir.

The Journal was corrected.

There being no further objection, the Journal was declared approved.

Mr. MERWIN—I desire to present a plan for the reorganization of the Judiciary, prepared by a Justice of the Supreme Court, and I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Which reference was ordered.

Mr. GROSS—I present a petition from several progressive Societies and individual Citizens of the State of New York, praying for such changes in the Constitution of the State, as may secure a more equal share of religious liberty to all of its citizens. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Which reference was ordered.

Mr. FOLGER—From the Committee on Judiciary offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any one or more of their number whom they may designate, have power to take the testimony, or in their discretion, the written verified statement of such persons as they may see fit, who have heretofore been appointed or designated under rule of court, to examine into the condition of funds held under order of court by or in the name of any or all of the County Treasurers or other officers of the respective counties, such statement or testimony shall concern,

First. The general condition and amount of such funds.

Second. The security or insecurity of their investment.

Third. The losses or depreciation which may have been sustained.

Fourth. Any other matter bearing on their custody and control.

Fifth. The opinions of the persons in question as to the necessity and nature of any further checks, safeguards or other provisions for the care and protection of such funds.

The question was then put upon the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOLGER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

TO THE CONVENTION:

The Committee on Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Pond of Saratoga, instructing it "to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the Constitution, as to permit juries in civil causes to render verdicts upon the agreement of a number less than the whole; and into the propriety of so amending the Constitution, as to prohibit the receipt by judicial officers including Justices of the Peace, of any fees or perquisites of office as a compensation for their services, or otherwise."

Do respectfully report that, as to the first branch of the resolution, they do not perceive that it is necessarily a matter for the consideration of a body charged with the revision and amendment of the organic law, but is rather a matter of detail for the action of the Legislature of the State, unless the question is affected by the second section of article first of the Constitution, which is in the words following:

"§ 2. The trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law," or by the following passage in section sixth of the same article: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law."

This article is found in what is commonly called "the Bill of Rights," and as the Preamble and Bill of Rights have been made by the Convention the subject for, and have been committed to a separate standing committee of the body, the Committee on the Judiciary have conceived that so much of the resolution as is above specifically indicated does not come properly within their jurisdiction, but that it should be committed to standing Committee No. 1, on "the Preamble and Bill of Rights."

The Committee on the Judiciary therefore submit the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of so much of the resolution of Mr. Pond, of Saratoga, as relates to the subject of juries and their verdicts; and that the same be committed to the standing Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

CHAS. J. FOLGER,

Chairman.

Dated June 21, 1867.

Mr. POND—I am not particular to which committee this subject is referred, but it strikes me, sir, that if it is proper in any point of view to refer this subject to the Committee upon the Bill of Rights, it is equally a subject proper to be referred to the Judiciary Committee, and perhaps it ought to be considered before being finally acted upon by the Convention to ascertain which committee it is most appropriately to be referred to. It certainly comes within the section of the Constitution referred to by the committee, but it certainly has reference to subjects which pertain to the Judiciary Committee, of which they shall take cognizance, and it might be equally well if referred to the committee indicated by the report of the Judiciary Committee; but, if sent to the Committee upon the Bill of Rights, it strikes me to be equally proper for them to say that it pertains to subjects coming properly within the cognizance of the Judiciary Committee, and they report it should be referred to them. For the purpose of examining the subject, I move to lay that report upon the table for the present.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Pond and it was declared carried.

Mr. SEAVER from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report in relation to a communication from the State Librarian of Michigan.

The Committee on Printing to whom was referred the communication of the State Librarian of the State of Michigan, embodying a resolution of the Constitutional Convention of that State, proposing an exchange of journal, debates and proceedings, with this Convention, beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the proposition of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Michigan, now in session to exchange ten copies of the Journal and Debates and Proceedings of that Convention, for a like number of the Journal and Debates and Proceedings of this Convention, be and the same is hereby accepted; and that the Secretary of this Convention be instructed to cause the said number of copies to be regularly transmitted to the State Librarian of the State of Michigan, and that a sufficient number of copies in addition to the usual number are hereby ordered to be printed to conduct such exchange.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

Mr. SEAVER—It is not deemed by the committee necessary, perhaps, to print any extra number, so that the usual number of 800 copies will supply the demand required by the exchange. But if 800 copies are found not sufficient, then an additional number can be printed.

Mr. MURPHY—I do not know that the gentleman is aware of the fact that there is another State Convention now in session, some of whose debates I have seen and read with great pleasure, and I hope, therefore, that this resolution may be amended so far as to extend the same courtesy to that Convention. I refer to the Convention of the State of Maryland. I move therefore an amendment that a like number of copies of our proceedings, be transmitted to the Convention of the State of Maryland now in session.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inquire whether the usual number of copies would allow that to be done?

Mr. E. BROOKS—The Chairman of the Committee, on Rules [Mr. Sherman] is not now in his seat. But I think I can say that the number authorized by the Committee on Rules to be printed under the regular order, would supply both of these extra copies which have been moved.

Mr. WEED—I understand that this report is in reference to a resolution in answer to a communication from the Convention of the State of Michigan. I submit to the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], that his amendment is not strictly in order; that it should be an independent resolution of this Convention, proposing to exchange with the Convention of the State of Maryland. They have not made any proposition to us, but the Convention of the State of Michigan has, and this is an acceptance of that proposition and provision for the exchange. I would gladly go with him in asking the Convention of Maryland to exchange with us.

Mr. MURPHY—In all matters of this kind, I am for the substance—the form is immaterial. I would like myself, to have the benefit of the debates and propositions presented to the Maryland Convention. As I said before, I have read some of them with a great deal of interest, especially their reports upon the Executive Department of that State. I do not see any incongruity in amending this report by appending a further resolution to the effect I have mentioned, coupled with a request that the Maryland Convention will reciprocate and exchange. However, if it is the sense of the Convention that we should have a separate proposition I am willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. ALVORD—I renew the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] with this addition that it be coupled with request that they send us a like number. It seems to me entirely germane to the matter. It might as well come in here instead of having a distinct, separate proposition; and under the advice of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] the usual number printed will be sufficient.

Mr. WEED—I, like the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], desire to have the substance, but at the same time I think there is a proper way of doing it. We have here a communication sent us from the Constitutional Convention of the State of Michigan. We are now to pass a resolution accepting that; it is to be returned to that Convention through the proper channels, and then there will be an exchange between this Convention and the Convention of Michigan. I cannot see why we should engraft upon this resolution of acceptance a proposition to exchange with the Maryland Convention and have that sent to Michigan. It seems to me that the only proper way to get at it is to pass a resolution asking the Maryland Convention to exchange with us. It is a matter of no great moment; at the same time I can see no propriety in adding this to the acceptance of the simple and direct proposition tendered to us by the Convention of Michigan.

Mr. McDONALD—As I understand the fact to be this Convention has not yet ordered any debates, at all, and the contract only provides that we may order them if we see fit. I, therefore, move to amend the resolution by adding, that this Convention order the usual number, of 800 copies of the debates, to be printed so that we can have them to send. Perhaps, however, I had better withdraw my amendment, and offer it as a separate proposition.

The question was then put upon the amendment offered by Mr. Alvord and it was declared adopted.

The question then recurred on the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing as amended and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FIELD—I move a reconsideration of the vote of yesterday on the resolution reported by the Select Committee of which the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis] is Chairman, in favor of publishing in two daily papers in this city, the debates of this Convention. If it is proper, at this time, I desire simply to state that the object of this motion is not to defeat the publication of these debates, but to have them published in what is thought by many to be the only legal and proper way; that is in the way proposed by the resolution of the gentleman from Chautauqua [Mr. Barker] unless it can be done in some better way.

Mr. MURPHY—I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. FIELD—I rise to a point of order, that a motion to reconsider lies on the table under the rule.

Mr. BROOKS—As the House is very thin, and the question is an important one, I hope the gentleman who made the motion, [Mr. Field] will allow it to be postponed until Tuesday next.

Mr. FIELD—As I have said, it does lie on the table, under the rule.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken. The resolution will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. GERRY offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Board of Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police be requested to furnish the Secretary of this Convention with fourteen printed copies of the last annual report of such Board to the Legislature of this State; such copies to be distributed among the members of the Committee on the Pardoning Power and the Committee on State Prisons, and the prevention and punishment of crime.

Mr. GERRY—I would like to ask the Convention to suspend the rules; and for the reason, that we shall probably adjourn to-day until Monday or Tuesday of next week, and in the judgment of many of my colleagues on the Committee on the Pardoning Power, it is necessary to have this document, and the intervening time may be employed in the procurement of it, as I do not suppose there will be any difficulty in obtaining it.

Mr. FIELD—I rise to a point of order, that the rules cannot be suspended except upon one day's notice.

Mr. GERRY—It can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT—The chair holds that it may be done by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the question was put on the resolution, and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. E. BROOKS offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Cities, to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution as follows: The Legislature shall, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, pass a general act of incorporation, prescribing a form of government for every city in this State having a population of ten thousand souls. All authority conferred by said act is hereby vested in the qualified voters of the cities respectively, who shall be authorized to govern themselves, through a Mayor and one or more legislative bodies, to be elected once in every year. Future cities shall be authorized to come under the government of said act, which shall continue in force during the existence of this Constitution.

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. HAND offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rights of Suffrage, &c., be directed to inquire whether persons addicted to habitual drunkenness to such extent as to unfit them for ordinary business (requiring care and skill) should be excluded from the right of suffrage.

2d. Whether in cities persons repeatedly convicted of crime or misdemeanor below the grade commonly deemed "infamous crime" should not be deprived of the right of suffrage in the election of all municipal officers made elective by this Constitution.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. ARCHER offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That there be printed 500 copies of the rules and standing committees together, in pamphlet form, for the use of the Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Committee No. 9 on Finances, be requested to consider and report to this body, upon the policy of providing that so much of the expenditures of this State, as are required to be raised by taxation, for General or State purposes, be allotted to the several counties, solely upon the Basis of Population—the proper equivalent of Representation.

Which was referred to the Committee on Finances of the State.

Mr. MONELL offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Committee on the powers and duties of the Legislature, be requested to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting, by a constitutional provision, the Legislature from passing any bill within five days of its adjournment; and also into the expediency of so amending the Constitution, as to require that every bill, after its passage before it shall become a law, shall be signed by the Governor, during the session of the Legislature, at which the same may be passed.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. SMITH offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature be requested to consider the expediency of reporting a constitutional provision giving the Legislature power to authorize individuals and corporations to appropriate lands and unimproved water privileges for manufacturing purposes, on making compensation to owners and persons injured thereby.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GOULD—I desire the Convention to take up the resolution offered by me, calling for information from the county clerks etc., and I ask leave to withdraw that resolution; as it has been suggested to me by several gentlemen, that there are some courts whose decisions would not be reached by the resolution as I have drawn it. I have accordingly prepared another resolution under the advice of these gentlemen, which will embrace all the information I seek to obtain.

There being no objection the resolution was taken up and withdrawn.

Mr. GOULD offered the following resolution for reference.

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be requested to procure as speedily as possible, from the Clerks of the several Criminal Courts of this State, including County Clerks; the Clerk of the Court of General Sessions of the city and county of New York; of the Superior Court of Buffalo; of the Mayor's and Recorder's Courts of cities having criminal jurisdiction, as well as District Attorneys in the respective counties, information upon the following points for each year between 1857 and 1863, both inclusive:

1. The number of indictments that have been found in each county.
2. The number of accused persons admitted to bail.
3. The aggregate amount of bail estreated in each year.

And that he also be requested to procure from each of the County Treasurers and the Comptrollers of cities, the amount of money received by them in each year on account of estreated bail.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I desire to submit an amendment to that resolution, by adding "also the number of cases in which sentence has been suspended, and the number of cases in which, after such suspension, sentence has been actually rendered." I wish to say a word with regard to the object proposed by this amendment. It is well known to gentlemen who are conversant with criminal jurisprudence that there has sprung up in England and in this country, a practice—not sanctioned regularly by legislation, but grown up by usage—of suspending sentence in criminal cases. Persons who have given attention to this subject regard it as a direct violation of the great principles laid down by Beccaria and other standard writers on criminal jurisprudence, that sentence ought to follow upon the conviction of the prisoner, in such a way that it will be associated in the minds of the criminal classes like cause and effect, coming as it were in the regular sequence of effects, from the operation of causes in nature. And moreover, that the assumption of this power to suspend sentence is in effect an assumption of the pardoning power by the individual officer who exercises it; and for these reasons I have thought it best to present this amendment in order that the facts can be produced before the Convention for the consideration of the propriety of inserting a clause in the Constitution similar to that which is found in the Constitution of several States, that the natural effect of a law shall not be suspended.

The amendment was accepted.

The question was then put upon the resolution, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. A. J. PARKER offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved That the Committee on Cities, their organization and powers, be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to provide for the government of all the cities of the State, and for the organization and government of all the cities hereafter to be organized in this State, under general laws, and that all special legislation in regard to the organization and government of cities be prohibited.

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities.

Mr. LAPHAM—At the request of the Chairman of the Committee on the Pardoning Power, I desire to call up a resolution offered by me on Tuesday last.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Governor of the State be requested to communicate to this Convention, as soon as practicable, a list containing the number of the applications made to the Executive for pardons, during the years 1864, 1865 and 1866; the number of such applications granted, with the nature of the offenses in classes.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that the mover of that resolution will consent that it lie over for a day, as I want to examine the Manual which has been placed upon our tables, to see what information we have already upon the subject.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Mr. President, I would state that a great part of the information called for, is found in the first pamphlet of the Manual. On page 5 of the first pamphlet, will be found nearly the precise information called for by the resolution except as to its details. I can state in a word, that since the commencement in the organization of this State and the existence of the pardoning power, some eleven thousand pardons have been granted, and during two years of the administration of Governor Fenton, he reports that 299 pardons have been granted. If gentlemen will take the pains to examine this Manual in detail, they will find a great deal of the information which is being called for.

Mr. HARRIS—I hope that the mover will consent that this resolution lie over. I had prepared a similar resolution myself, but at the suggestion of some one that this information was coming in the Manual, I withheld it.

Mr. LAPHAM—I have no objection if the Chairman of the Committee is satisfied.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I suppose that the report of the Committee on Pardoning Power need not be among the earliest which is submitted to this body; necessarily it would be later, and therefore, I presume no time will be lost in suffering the resolution to be laid over.

Mr. BELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be respectfully requested to report to this Convention, as soon as practicable, the following particulars in regard to the "Salt Reservations" of the State:

1. The quantity of land originally set apart by the State for the purpose of manufacturing salt.

2. The quantity of land now owned by the State and devoted to that object.

3. The towns and counties in which said lands are located, and the number of acres in each locality.

4. The present value of such lands, if the same can be readily ascertained; or the nearest possible approximate value thereof.

5. Cost and present value of the salt wells, structures and improvements thereto, made and owned by the State.

6. The probable value of the Salines connected therewith.

7. The yearly expense to the State for the care and management of the same, including new structures, repairs, superintendence, etc.

8. The yearly revenues received therefrom.

Which were laid over under the rule.

Mr. MILLER offered the following resolution for reference.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolutions as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a constitutional provision, prohibiting the Legislature taking cognizance or having jurisdiction of any claim against this State, that has not accrued within the preceding six years.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. MERWIN offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the Constitution be so amended (1) that senators shall hold their office for four years, and one-fourth of their number be elected each year; (2) that assemblymen be elected for one year, and every 25,000 of population be entitled to one member, and that they be elected by single districts.

Which was referred to the Committee on the organization of the Legislature.

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That it be referred to the proper committee to inquire whether the agricultural or other industrial interests of any portion of the people of this State are injuriously affected by feudal tenures or other anti-republican conditions or restrictions.

Which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

Mr. A. R. LAWRENCE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 3, "on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature," to inquire as to the propriety and expediency of amending section 13 of article 3 of the Constitution, so as to read as follows: "All bills for the imposition of taxes, or for the raising of revenue, shall originate in the Assembly, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills."

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. McDONALD called up a resolution offered by him in relation to printing of documents, and offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That this Convention hereby order eight hundred copies of the debates to be printed, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing to report as to the proper disposition of the same.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Ontario that rule 41 already provides for that, and they will be printed, of course, without any special order.

Mr. WEED—I would suggest that rule 41 does not provide for the printing of the debates, it provides for the printing of documents that may be ordered, but as I understand it, the debates have not yet been ordered to be placed on our files.

The resolution was then referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. LANDON offered the following resolution for reference.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending section 5, of article 1, of the Constitution, as,

1. To prohibit capital punishment.

2. To require the Legislature to provide by law for the immediate taking, in criminal cases, of the testimony of witnesses who cannot give bail for their appearance at the trial, and thereupon discharging such witnesses.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. GRAVES—I move to take up the resolution offered by myself, and which is to be found on page 45 of the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to report to the Convention at as early a day as practicable, whether, in their opinion, a provision should be incorporated in the Constitution, authorizing the women in this State to exercise the elective franchise, when they shall ask that right by a majority of all the votes given by citizen females over the age of twenty-one years, at an election called for that purpose, at which the women alone shall have the right to vote.

The question was then put on the motion to take the resolution from the table, and it was declared carried.

The PRESIDENT announced the pending question to be on the resolution as read.

Mr. GRAVES—Mr. President: I do not desire at this time to discuss the merits of the resolution; but allow me to suggest that there are four persons who are interested in the questions involved in it. The first class is what is opprobriously known as the strong-minded women, who claim the right to vote upon the ground that they are interested and identified with ourselves in the stability and permanency of our institutions, and that their property is made liable for the maintenance of our government while they have no right to choose the law-makers, or to select the persons who are to assess the value of their property liable to taxation. They claim that they are not untaught in the science of government to which the right of administration is denied to them. The second class includes both males and females who sympathize with the first class and who claim that there is no disparity in the intellect of men and women, when an equal opportunity is afforded by education, for progress and advancement. They also claim that our country is diminishing all the time in moral integrity and virtue, and ask that a new element be introduced into our governmental affairs by which crime shall be lessened and the estimate of moral virtue be made higher. The third class is a class which urges that there should be no distinction between males and females in the exercise of the elective franchise, and they claim that it is anti-democratic that there should be a minority in this country to rule its destinies. There is a fourth class who believe that the right to exercise the elective franchise is not inherent, but permissive, and that the people are the government, and that this power of the elective franchise is under their immediate control, and they claim the right to become part and parcel of the government which they help to support and maintain. Now, these four classes, differing in opinion upon this great question, constitute a very large body of very worthy and high-minded and intelligent men and women of this State who have long sought to enlarge the elective franchise, and they claim the deliberate consideration of this body upon the ground of equality. Now this resolution gives to women themselves, the power of discussion and comparing of minds, etc., to settle the question whether they will avail themselves of the desired right to exercise this power of voting. And as it differs from all other questions which have originated here with reference to this right of women to vote, I submit it is a proper resolution to be referred to a select committee to be appointed for that purpose.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following amendment to the resolution:

Strike out the words "votes given by."

Mr. BICKFORD—The object of this amendment is this: That the women of this State shall not be forced to vote even on this question. There are a great many ladies of the State who will not vote on any question, and the object of the amendment is that their voices may be counted against the proposition, even if they do not vote: so that they shall not be compelled to go to the polls even for the purpose of saying that they do not want the privilege of voting.

Mr. WEED—Without discussing the merits of this question at all, it seems to me that as Committee No. 4 has this question especially in charge, and as this resolution was introduced prior to the appointment of that, and before any committee was authorized on this subject, it is proper and right before this question takes up the time of this Convention, it should go before the ordinary committee, and come before us upon their report. I therefore move that this resolution be referred to Committee No. 4 on the Right of Suffrage and the qualification of voters.

Mr. VEEDER—I would inquire whether that motion precludes any further amendment before it is referred? I submit that we should have a fair opportunity of amending the resolution, and then—

The PRESIDENT—Under rule 23, the motion to commit takes precedence of the motion to amend.

Mr. VEEDER—Then I hope the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] will withdraw his motion, that I may offer an amendment, and then let the whole subject go to the committee.

Mr. WEED—Any amendment that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Veeder] may see fit to offer, can be offered as an independent resolution, which could be referred to the committee. If my motion is withdrawn it will open discussion upon the question.

Mr. VEEDER—If the gentleman will withdraw his motion, I will offer my amendment, and then renew his motion.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—Are amendments now in order to the proposition to go with the resolution to the Committee?

Mr. CONGER—I would suggest a point of order; that a resolution specially directing a reference to a special committee cannot be referred to a standing committee. The subject-matter only of the resolution can be referred.

The PRESIDENT—The subject-matter of the resolution of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], it is moved by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], shall be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Weed to refer the subject embraced in the resolution of Mr. Graves to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and it was declared carried.

Mr. CARPENTER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the standing committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights, to consider the propriety of erasing from section 3 of article 1 of the present Constitution, the last clause of said section, to wit: "and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact."

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. GRAVES—I desire to call from the table the resolution to be found on page 74 of the Journal.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas, The use of adulterated, intoxicating liquors has become an alarming evil, increasing domestic sorrow, creating pauperism and crime, thereby adding to the burdens of taxation; therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of one from each judicial district be appointed to report:

1st. Whether, in their opinion, under our republican form of government, any authority should be granted to sell, or any prohibition enacted against the sale of intoxicating liquors, either by a legislative or organic law of the State.

2d. Whether, in their opinion, the sale of intoxicating liquors should be denied to all except such as shall receive a certificate under the hand and official seal of a person properly qualified and duly appointed, showing that the liquor offered for sale had been carefully analyzed, and was unadulterated, pure, and contained no poisonous drug.

3d. Whether, in their opinion, any law authorising or prohibiting the sale should not be organic instead of legislative, thereby creating a rule controlling and regulating public opinion, and relieving each successive Legislature from the pressing importunities of those in favor of or opposed to the sale of intoxicating drinks.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Graves to take the preamble and resolution from the table, and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the preamble and resolution, and they were declared adopted.

Mr. BALLARD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the Convention adjourns this day, it adjourns to meet on Monday next at 7½ o'clock, P. M.

Mr. GREELEY—I move to amend by making it 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. BALLARD—I made the time 7½ o'clock, instead of 6 in the afternoon, as by putting the meeting at that hour it enables us to hold an evening session; whereas, if we made it at 6 o'clock, it being the usual hour for tea, members would not be able to be present.

Mr. GREELEY—I move to amend by making the hour 11 o'clock, A. M., instead of 7 P. M.

Mr. MONELL—I move to further amend by striking out the word "Monday" and inserting Tuesday.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Monell, and it was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on the amendment proposed by Mr. Greeley, to make the hour of meeting 11 o'clock on Monday, instead of 7 o'clock.

Mr. MILLER—I would suggest that if it is intended that we should go home during the recess, it would be impossible for us to reach here by 11 o'clock, without traveling on the Sabbath. We can have just as long a session if we begin business at half past seven o'clock, as if we had a session at 11 o'clock in the day-time. I understand that 7½ o'clock is the time fixed by the original motion of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard].

Mr. SEAVER—I trust that this motion will not prevail. If there is any business for this Convention to do, let us be about it and do it. It is very convenient for those who live within a few miles of the Capital, to adjourn until Monday or Tuesday, and leave those who reside at a greater distance here in idleness. An adjournment or recess of this Convention destroys the power of committees to do anything by taking away those who live in the immediate neighborhood, and there is nothing for those who remain here to do because they cannot get a quorum. If there is no committee going to transact any business, it is trifling with the time and the patience of the people of this State. We are here in the service of the people, and I hold that we ought to serve them certainly more than half of the time. If there is nothing for this Convention to do, let us adjourn for a week, or two weeks, until something arises for us to do, and then we can come back and attend to it, get through with our business, and go home.

Mr. BICKFORD—It is utterly impossible, Mr. President, to keep committees together and make them do any work, unless this Convention holds daily sessions; and it is important that we should proceed to consider the various subjects that are to be discussed in this body. As has been said by the gentleman from Franklin [Mr. Seaver], the delegates will disperse during the recess, and it will be impossible to do any business in committee. I, therefore, hope that both the resolution and the amendment to adjourn to any hour on Monday will be voted down, for many of us cannot go home.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on the original motion of Mr. Ballard.

Mr. LEE—I move to amend the resolution so that it shall read that when this Convention adjourns it will adjourn to meet on Saturday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HAND—Such an adjournment would follow as a matter of course if the motion of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard] is lost. It does not require an amendment.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE—I trust that the last amendment will prevail. I am sorry to see the Convention adjourn for such long recesses to accommodate gentlemen who live on the river, in the city of New York, and on the lines of the railroads. There are many gentlemen in this Convention who find it impossible to get home and return in time for business, and those who are compelled to remain here have nothing to do as soon as the adjournment occurs.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair regards the motion of the gentleman from Oswego [Mr. Lee], and the voting down of the motion of the gentleman from Cortland [Mr. Ballard], as being equivalent questions.

Mr. LEE—I understand that, but I wish to call attention more prominently to the fact by making the motion. When I was a boy and went to school, if we had every other Saturday for a play-day, we thought we were doing pretty well. I think that, having now reached the age of manhood, and having assumed the responsibility of discharging certain important duties intrusted to us by the people, we should now expect, except for due cause, to remain here and discharge our duty, rather than leave our work to go home. As has been already said, I think it entirely unjust to those members of the Convention who, from the very nature of the case, are unable to return home, and are therefore compelled to remain here with their hands tied, and await the convenience of other gentlemen to enable them to resume work. We have already had adjournments for two or three days each week since we have been in session, and at this rate we shall not be prepared to submit the work of committees to the Convention for it to decide for a long time to come. I hope that gentlemen will seriously consider this matter, and continue sessions without an adjournment of more than a single day. In a few days the 4th of July will be upon us, and that being a national holiday, we shall adjourn of course. At the rate at which we have been going on, we will spend more than half of our time in idleness.

Mr. BALLARD—It is well known that after these committees were formed and organized, the suggestion was made and adopted by most of them that each member prepare and submit his ideas to his committee, for future consultation in reference to the matters referred to it, to enable its members to properly mature a report. Whether the Convention adjourns or not this afternoon, there will be certain members of the committees who will remain here, and they will devote their time to the subject-matters which are to come before their respective committees. If we continue in session, they will be interrupted in their labors in this regard by the sessions of the Convention, and as has been suggested, there will manifestly be scarcely a quorum of members here to-morrow. Again, it is well known that our courts are now being held in many parts of the State, and many members of the Convention have business at those courts which must be attended to. In a few days that pressure will be over. I think that instead of our business being interrupted by the proposed adjournment, it will be promoted by its taking a recess until Monday at 7½ o'clock. With the view of not interrupting, but promoting the labors of the Convention, I made the motion.

Mr. BICKFORD called for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. McDONALD—I move, as an amendment, that when we adjourn to-morrow, we adjourn to meet on Monday evening, at 7½ o'clock.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. McDonald, and it was declared to be lost.

The question then recurred on the resolution of Mr. Ballard, and it was adopted by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, Armstrong, Andrews, Archer, Ballard, Barto, Beadle, Bergen, W. C. Brown, Burrill, Carpenter, Cassidy, Chesebro, Clinton, Cooke, Comstock, Corning, Curtis, Daly, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Farnum, Ferry, Flagler, Folger, Fowler, Francis, Garvin, Gerry, Goodrich, Grant, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hand, Harris, Hitchman, Huntington, Jarvis, Krum, Lapham, Law, A. Lawrence, Jr., Livingston, Masten, Mattice, McDonald, Miller, Monell, More, Morris, Nelson, A. J. Parker, Pond, Prindle, Robertson, Roy, Rumsey, A. D. Russell, Schoonmaker, Sheldon, Silvester, Smith, Stratton, Tilden, S. Townsend, Veeder, Weed, Wickham, Young—71

Nays—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Alvord, Axtell, Baker, Barker, Beale, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, Case, Clark, Cochran, Conger, Duganne, Eddy, Ely, Field, Fuller, Gould, Graves, Greeley, Hammond, Hitchcock, Ketcham, Kinney, Landon, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Paige, President, Reynolds, Root, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Van Campen, Wales, Wakeman, Williams—46.

Mr. GREELEY—I offer the following resolution—that this Convention now take up and consider the communication from the Commissioners of the Canal Fund in answer to a resolution of this body.

The PRESIDENT—There is no need of a resolution. The communication can be taken up on the call of the gentleman.

Mr. GREELEY—Then I call up the communication for consideration.

The PRESIDENT—The Secretary will proceed to read the communication referred to.

Mr. GREELEY—I think it is hardly necessary, Mr. President, to have it read again, it has been read once and is on our files.

The PRESIDENT—Unless the reading is desired, it will be dispensed with.

Mr. GREELEY—Mr. President, I offered the original resolution, to which the communication of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund on our files is intended as a response, because I desired more compact and condensed information in regard to the canals. I wished gentlemen in this Convention to see—

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a question of order. I am not aware that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] can address the Chair or this Convention except there is some distinct motion before the body.

Mr. GREELEY—I did make a distinct motion, but the Chair decided that my call for the consideration of the communication was all that was necessary.

Mr. ALVORD—That does not bring the matter of the communication substantively before the Convention. To do that requires some motion.

Mr. GREELEY—Then I move its reference to the Committee on Canals. Will that do? I offered the original proposition. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] that in discussing a question of reference the merits of the subject cannot be discussed under the rules.

Mr. WEED—I rise to a point of order. A motion to refer is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has informed the gentleman that on a motion to refer, the subject-matter involved is not debatable.

Mr. GREELEY—May I ask the Chair upon what motion I would be allowed to address the Chair with reference to this paper? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will leave the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] to take his own course, not deeming it to be its province to instruct the gentleman. The Chair simply calls attention of the gentleman to the rule providing that on a motion to refer, debate on the principal question is not permissible.

Mr. GREELEY—Then I move that the report be returned to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. Will that be in order?

The PRESIDENT—It will.

Mr. GREELEY—Mr. President, I will state my—

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman [Mr. Greeley] has not withdrawn his original motion to refer it to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. GREELEY—I do withdraw it, Mr. President, and I now make the motion that this paper be returned to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. Mr. President, this is a very remarkable paper. I will read the first statement in it:

"The Commissioners understand that the net cost or profit of the several canals is to be established by a comparison of the aggregate expenditures, including interest, with the aggregate receipts, and they assume that it was the intention to state an interest account on receipts as well as payments, although the language of the resolution fails to express it."

Sir, what I desired to arrive at was the actual net cost of the canals to the people of the State of New York, as they stand to-day, by such methods as should seem most in accordance with the spirit of that resolution. I am very sorry (though the Commissioners say that they comprehend very well what the resolution meant) that the words did not express the intent. In the next place they tell us this:

"On this construction of the scope and purpose of the resolution, the Commissioners conclude that the exigency under which, in accordance with the proviso, they are required to report, has not arisen"—(I feared that, Mr. President, when that proviso was put in),—"as the information called for will be given substantially in the detailed statements of the Auditor of the Canal Department, included in the manual prepared for the use of the Convention. Such of the statements as have not already been published will be included in following pages of the volume devoted to statistics, and laid on the tables of members in a few days."

Mr. President, the third week of this Convention has nearly closed and we have voted to close it to-day. On the first day of our session, I think it was, I offered the resolution of inquiry, and I was then told to wait a few days and the information would be furnished. We are now told that by-and-by this information will come in certain detailed statements. A very intelligent member of this Convention informed me that he had devoted six hours to the study of the documents emanating from the Canal Auditor, and that he thinks he understands about how this matter stands. Now what I wished, was to have the means afforded this Convention of understanding how the State account stands with the canals, without wandering through many documents, and devoting six hours to their study, as my friend has done. They say that in certain detailed statements that have been or will be given us, we will find the leading material facts called for. What I wish, is a single statement, whereby we may see, as at a glance, how the State stands in its account with the canals. I have no doubt, if members of this Convention were able to give two or three weeks to the study of canal documents, running back through a number of years, they might obtain a very fair understanding of this subject. But certainly, that cannot be necessary. It must be within the power of the State officers to give these facts within a small compass. I have before me a document—a volunteer document—which has been laid on our desks, entitled "The Canals, by James Barnes." I see in this account stated, such as I wish to have; and all within a space of two inches in width by four inches in length. It states what is the original cost of each of the canals of this State, and how much has been returned to us from each of the canals. According to this statement, the canals of this State have cost us $125,000,000, and they have returned us $98,000,000, so that to-day, the State has paid out for canals, more than it has received from the canals, about $27,000,000. That is a very intelligent statement, and just such a one as I desire to have, and to have it from an official source. I find it here in a volunteer document. I would like to have it from a State officer. I do not find any such information from State officials. I find here, in this manual, statistics in reference to the canals, but nothing like that which is called for by the resolution I introduced. Let us know what each canal has cost the people of the State, and what amount has been returned from each canal. I find in the statistics sent us by the Canal Auditor, what each canal has cost to run it, I may say, for twenty years back. I am very thankful for that, if it is all we can get. But I wish to know from State officers what each canal has cost us, as clearly as may be, and how much it has returned to us. This volunteer document of Mr. Barnes says that the Erie canal has cost $83,000,000, and that it has returned $73,000,000; that the Champlain canal cost $7,500,000, and that it has returned $4,750,000; that the Oswego canal has cost $6,250,000, and that it has returned over $9,000,000; that the Genesee Valley canal has cost $11,000,000, and has returned less than $1,300,000.

Mr. ALVORD—I would suggest to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] that as he has read the facts, the statements are directly the reverse of what is true. He must have read the returns for the outgoes.

Mr. GREELEY—I am reading it exactly as it is here, except that I am giving the sums in round numbers. To be accurate, it says that the estimated cost of the Genesee Valley canal is $11,160,306.27, that the total revenues from that canal are $1,295,850.09.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman read the figures in reference to the Oswego canal again?

Mr. GREELEY—Estimated cost $6,273,641.01; total revenues $9,177,171.35.

Mr. ALVORD—Then that volunteer statement is not correct.

Mr. GREELEY—It may not be correct. I am not reading it as a correct statement, but only as the kind of concise statement of the facts which I desire to be laid on our tables under the authority of a State officer. I am reading it to show what I want this Convention informed of on authority. I have not quoted it as true, but I am showing how simple a matter it would be for a State officer to make a statement that we may see, as on the fingers of one hand, what each canal has cost the people of this State, and what each canal has returned to us. I now take up some of the statistics furnished us by the Canal Auditor. He gives statistics for the last twenty years. It was estimated that when the canals were enlarged, the revenues would increase at the rate of three per cent per annum, and on that basis it was estimated that there would be $75,000,000 of revenue in twenty years; or rather that the estimated aggregate receipts for the last twenty years would be $75,000,000, the estimated outgoes $12,500,000, and the estimated net income $62,500,000. I give the sums in round numbers. The actual receipts have been $62,500,000, instead of $75,000,000; the actual outgoes have been $20,000,000 instead of $12,500,000, making the actual net income $42,500,000, which is $14,000,000 less than the estimated net income. In another part of these statistics I read that there have been claimed during the last twenty years $9,250,000 for canal damages, and that $3,250,000 have been awarded on such claims. The rest, I suppose, will come in here from year to year, until the claimants weary future Legislatures into paying them. Here is another fact which appears in the documents which we have. The estimates on which the enlargement of 1846, or thereabouts, was made, assumed that the canals would cost for repairs and superintendence per annum, $600,000. The actual expenses of superintendence, collection and repairs in 1846 was $641,000. From that time they varied from $700,000 to less than $1,100,000, down to the year 1865, when they jumped up to $1,927,000, and last year the amount was $1,435,000. So that during 1865 and 1866, when it was estimated that the cost of superintendence, collection and repairs would be $1,200,000, the actual expense was over $3,250,000—almost treble the amount of the estimate. Now I would like to look a little at the profits of some of the canals for the last twenty years. The aggregate amount of tolls received from the Genesee Valley canal for the last twenty years is $533,000. But it is also stated that by reason of the existence of the Genesee Valley canal, there has been an augmentation of the revenues of the Erie canal to the amount of $576,000. I do not see the justice of that mode of computation. I insist that the revenues of the Erie canal, from the region penetrated by the Genesee Valley canal would be very nearly as great if that canal had not been built. People would have to send their produce to market, and it would reach market through the Erie canal. However, that mode of estimate, as proposed, received the high sanction of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], who moved the amendment to my original resolution; and I will say no more on that, except this: that, estimating what the State has received in tolls from the Genesee Valley canal for the last twenty years, and estimating all that the Erie canal has received from tolls on freight that has come from the Genesee Valley canal, the total revenues of the State from those two sources have only been $1,109,000, while the cost of running the canal has been $1,346,000, making a net loss to the State, during the last twenty years, of $236,000. But that, by no means, is the worst aspect of the case; for while the expenses have been enormously increasing on the Genesee Valley canal, the revenues have diminished. During the last three years the tolls collected on the Genesee Valley canal have amounted to only $64,000, during which time it has added to the receipts of the Erie canal $42,000, making a total, according to this mode of computation, of $106,000 receipts to the State, from this canal, within three years. But during that time, the expense of keeping up this canal has been $522,000, so that beyond all the money received from this canal, and from the Erie canal, on account of the Genesee Valley canal, there has been an actual dead loss to the people, in three years, of $415,000, besides interest. In other words, we collect one dollar of tolls from the Genesee Valley canal and pay out five dollars. Apart from the total cost of making that canal, I submit, Mr. President, that it is right we should have these documents in such a form that we can determine whether the people ought to continue this ruinous and losing business forever, or whether there shall not come some time, when the Genesee Valley canal shall cease to call upon the people of this State for more than $100,000 per annum, for the mere cost of keeping it up, apart from the very large sum stated in this outside document of $11,000,000 which the canal has actually cost them, up to this time. I wish this document to take that form, so that we can have the debt and credit of each canal, and know precisely what they have cost. The Commissioners seem to understand very well what it is that we want, although they think I do not know how to state the matter. I wish a statement like this. We will say, for instance, that the State pays out $20,000,000 from 1842 to 1862, on the canals, and in that time it gets back $20,000,000; but in the mean time the State has lost the interest on this outlay, admitting that the whole sum paid out has been paid back. But instead of that, the Commissioners, in their communication, favor us with this statement:

"As an additional reason for this conclusion, it may be stated that the records from which the information sought for must be derived, are not in the possession of the Commissioners, or under their control. By the act, chapter 162, Laws of 1848, creating the office of Auditor, that officer was invested with some of the most important powers that had previously been exercised by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, from the organization of the Board in 1817."

Mr. President, the distinguished gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], who has been both Comptroller and Lieutenant Governor of this State, and in both capacities a member of the Canal Board, if not one of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, suggested that this resolution should be addressed to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, as a body which includes all the persons from whom the information might be obtained. The Comptroller of the State is one of the Commissioners, and the Auditor of the Canal Department is the Secretary of the Commissioners, and as their Secretary, would of course be ready to bring up any book or paper on the order of his superiors, the Commissioners. The Commissioners meet in the State Hall, where the Comptroller occupies a room, adjoining which is the room of the Canal Auditor, or at any rate, their rooms are on the same floor, and near together. The Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and the Auditor of the Canal Board, both have their records there, and they could answer our inquiries without difficulty. When we say that we want this information to act upon, in reference to the canals, all they would have to do, would be to say, "Mr. Secretary, will you go to your department and furnish what is required?" I have no doubt that such orders must be given every day to their Secretary when the Commissioners meet, to have such documents produced as will enable them to intelligently determine upon grave questions arising before them. But they report to us that they cannot answer this inquiry, because these documents are not in their possession.

sion, although they are in the possession of their Secretary. They cannot give this condensed, compact and intelligent information which I require, because their Secretary has it. Mr. President, if this answer does not combine evasion and effrontery in a very superior measure, then I totally fail to comprehend its tenor; and in that view I move that this response be returned to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund.

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. President, I leave to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] the whole meed of good taste upon this occasion, of drawing into this discussion an extended oration upon the subject of canals. He has taken this opportunity, and I leave him this opportunity: but I shall endeavor to speak directly to the question which is at issue. Sir, I took the liberty when upon the floor, on this question, the other day, to say to the gentleman from Westchester—as I had the right to say to him, in regard to the affairs of the State as connected with the canals—that his inquiry was in the wrong direction. I also took the liberty to say, as I had the right to say, from the information I had received, that every particle of the inquiry which he had made would be answered in the course of due time, under the requisition of the Legislature preceding us here. Now, sir, so far as regards this question, permit me again to say that it is true that the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church] stood up in his place here on this floor, and said it would be better to change the original direction of the enquiry of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] from the Comptroller to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. I am sorry that gentleman is not now in his place, but I have authority to say that he himself has since stated that he was mistaken in what he said, and under the circumstances he took the advice of members of this Convention, whether he should not move a reconsideration of that reference in order to direct the inquiry as it should have been, to the Auditor of the Canal Department. So much, sir, as regards the position assumed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] in reference to the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church]. Now, sir, another thing. The statute in regard to this matter is peremptory. All of the books, papers and documents relating to the financial matters connected with the canals, are transferred, by the law of 1848, to the Auditor and he has the entire control and custody of them, and only by courtesy can the Comptroller, or the Commissioners of the Canal Fund enter his department for the purpose of getting this information. He, sir, it is true, occupies also, the position of Secretary to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, but he does not occupy that simply as Auditor, for as Auditor, under the law, he has specific duties to perform, outside of and beyond their jurisdiction. He is also, by virtue of his office, Clerk of the Canal Board, but he is none the less Auditor and is compelled by the law to do and perform the duties which the law gives into his hands. Another thing, sir: the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], undertakes to say that we have been three weeks in session, and that he, upon the very first day of the session, asked for this information, and has been again and again told that it was to be laid upon the table of members. Why, sir, I know the fact, and the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], if he would believe his fellow men, can find out the fact by just crossing the distance from here to the State House, that the entire force of the State Department, and an additional force thereto also, have been employed diligently, earnestly and laboriously from the time the Legislature passed that portion of the act requiring a manual to be laid upon our tables here, in the furtherance of the performance of that duty. They have, sir, worked diligently and well, as I have said. They have looked at all these questions in the various lights and phases in which they could look at them, and they are about to put upon our tables—and were originally intending so to do, and are working in that direction—each and every item of information which is asked for by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], in his original proposition, and by the amendments connected herewith; and they would have done so without any regard whatever to the resolutions. I am at liberty to say and to state distinctly here, so far as the matter is concerned, they are working with the utmost rapidity to that end. And if the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] had even been right when he called for this information, and he was entitled to it from the source from which he had called for it, the labor necessary to respond to the inquiry, would have compelled them to work beyond the present time in which we are now speaking, and then they would have been unable to have done it accurately and correctly as required by the resolution. Now sir, the Comptroller of this State, the Secretary of State of this State, the Attorney-General of this State, and the Treasurer of this State, are—together with the Lieutenant-Governor of this State—Commissioners of the Canal Fund. They have received this resolution respectfully; they have treated it respectfully; they have respectfully said to this Convention, that they would gladly give them this information; and when the proviso says, if the information is in the Manual, they may forego the giving it into the hands of the Convention as a separate and distinct matter, they answer you in terms, that the Manual is to contain this information; and they say what is entirely proper, not by way of insult, not standing upon their dignity, because of attempting to take them out of the province in which they move; but by the way of information to the Convention, for its future action, that if they desire any future and other information with regard to this matter, they can get it more readily, more speedily, more easily and more satisfactorily by going to the head of the department, in whose custody the information is, and asking him the question, rather than by sending to a body who has it not, honestly and under the law, in its control, and asking them to deal it out second-handed to this Convention, they getting it from the source from which this Convention can receive the information. In regard to the question, of the results of the canals to revenue and finances of the State, I take it, that the proper time will come to speak with regard to that; but that time, in my judgment, has not arrived. It is better to wait, as we are waiting in these various cases, for the reports of committees. When they shall have examined these things critically and carefully, from one end to the other, and when shall they bring them up in the body of this house, and we take them up in parliamentary order, in Committee of the Whole, I shall be very happy to cross lances with the gentleman from Westchester, [Mr. Greeley], if we shall disagree, or to march arm in arm with him (I hope not either of us weeping) on to the result of the Convention's labors.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I desire to say a word with regard to the propriety of the original reference to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund and the propriety of returning this communication to them. I do not desire to enter into the general discussion. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] moved to return this report to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, because they have referred the Convention to the Auditor. That question of the status of the Auditor has been a matter of discussion and decision in the Court of Appeals. Some years ago the Auditor refused to pay a draft drawn upon him by the Canal Commissioners, on the ground that there was no authority of law for drawing the draft on him. The Auditor refused to pay the draft, and the Supreme Court granted a mandamus to compel him to pay. It was first granted at the Special Term, and an appeal was taken to the General Term, and the order for mandamus was affirmed. The Auditor then took the appeal to the Court of Appeals, and the question of the status of the Auditor and the authority of the Auditor came directly in question before that court. I quote the language of the court in the case as reported in 13 N. Y. Reports, p. 241.

"GARDINER, Ch. J. The demurrer was sustained and a peremptory mandamus awarded upon the grounds insisted upon by the relator, first: That the powers of the Auditor are strictly ministerial; that the draft being in the proper form, he had no discretion in the premises, but was bound to issue his warrant for its payment without the right to inquire as to the authority of the commissioner, or to act upon his own knowledge, that that officer, in making the draft, had transcended his powers. And secondly, upon the ground that the facts alleged in the return were insufficient to establish a want of jurisdiction in the commissioner.

In 1848 the Legislature provided for the appointment of an Auditor of the Canal Department, and transferred to him the powers, and imposed upon him the duties in relation to the canals originally exercised and devolved upon the Comptroller, with a single exception. [Laws of 1848, 271, § 1, 2.] It was the duty of the Comptroller, prior to the passage of this law, to superintend the fiscal concerns of the State; to draw warrants on the Treasurer for the payment of all moneys directed by law to be paid out of the treasury; but no warrant could be drawn unless authorized by law, and every warrant must refer to the law under which it was drawn. He was to countersign and enter all checks drawn by the Treasurer, and all receipts for money paid to the Treasurer; and no such receipts were evidence of payment unless so countersigned. [1 R. S., 170, § 1, subd. 9, § 4.]

"In giving a construction to these provisions we are not embarrassed by consideration of the official rank of the parties whose views may chance to differ in respect to their respective rights and obligations. The Comptroller is, in official station at least, the equal of a Canal Commissioner."

The opinion then goes on at some length to show the authority of the Auditor in such cases, and then says:

"The same duty is imposed upon the Auditor by the law of 1848, not only in general terms, but the language of the Revised Statutes, above quoted, is copied into the eleventh and twelfth sections of the act. [Laws of 1848, supra.] He is Secretary, ex officio, of the two Canal Boards; in all other respects, his power in respect to the canals are the same as those formerly vested in the Comptroller. He is the custodian of all papers pertaining to the duties of the boards above mentioned. The Canal Commissioners and their subordinates account to him, the superintendents are to be removed when he is dissatisfied with their accounts, and the payments from the collectors enforced by his warrant, and all moneys from the Canal Fund must be drawn on his warrant, and, as the head of the canal department he reports directly to the Legislature. That an officer, clothed with powers thus extensive and complicated, should differ in opinion with a Canal Commissioner, as to the existence or construction of a law, may be unfortunate, but can hardly be deemed presumptuous."

There, sir, we have a case decided, showing clearly that the Auditor is virtually the head of the canal department.

Mr. CONGER—Without undertaking to question what the effect and purport of the decision of the Court of Appeals was in that case; it is still very clear that the question there was not one between the Auditor and the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, but was between the Auditor and the Comptroller, who is the financial officer of the State, vested with certain powers under the law of 1848, to take charge of the canals, draw drafts and the like. It is well understood, that while the Constitution intended that the custody of the Canal Funds, as such, should be devolved upon the body designated in the Constitution as the Commissioners of the Canal Fund; yet there was a modification of the Constitution which gave to the Legislature the power to prescribe the duty of all these several officers, and it is well known that in 1848, on a strenuous effort being made, the whole fiscal power with regard to the canals, was transferred from the Comptroller to the Auditor, who had heretofore been the clerk. I beg leave to draw the attention of the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Schoonmaker], to that provision of law which has not been repealed, and which does not gainsay or come within the purview of that decision, he has just read. That section of the law is as follows:

§ 27. "As soon as possible after the close of each fiscal year, the said Auditor shall submit to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, a statement of the receipts and payments on account of the canals and the canal debt, and the balances of the funds on hand, the depositories of the same, and the conditions thereof, which statement shall accompany the annual report of the said Commissioners to the Legislature."

It is very clear, sir, whatever the duties of the Auditor were with regard to preparing any of the business, they were to be submitted as a part of the report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund to the Legislature, and therefore I think that my associate from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] was right in seeking to get the information he wanted from the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and I think that the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], who is now absent, was right when he moved to amend the original resolution, so that the information should come from the proper custodians of that information. It is true, the Auditor might furnish it to them; but as they are responsible by law to the Legislature, for the transmission of that information; so I contend, under the Constitution which is now operative, we are to regard the Commissioners of the Canal Fund as the sole depositories of that information, and we have a right to call upon them; and I do not think it is very fair, that they should undertake to put off the information and ask us to wait until the Auditor reports. I think it is right and proper that that Board should have obtained the information called for by the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], or to have referred it to us. I am not prepared to go as far as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] does, in saying that the Commissioners of the Canal Fund are guilty of evasion and effrontery to this Convention in not responding, because there is an admitted difficulty, owing to the conflict of powers, generated by the law of 1848. I am willing, if the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will consent to modify his proposition in this way, that the report be referred back to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, with the request that at an early day as practicable they will furnish directly to this Convention all the statistics required in the resolution, to go for it.

Mr. ALVORD—Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a single moment?

Mr. CONGER—Certainly.

Mr. ALVORD—My best recollection about this matter, and I think I am not mistaken, is that since that date, this very law which the gentleman last quoted here, has been altered, in requiring that duty to be performed by the Auditor, and that the Commissioners do not now report to the Legislature.

Mr. CONGER—I still think the gentleman is in error. Why, in the last edition of the Revised Statutes, should that provision stand as unrepealed, unless the repeal has taken place within a very few years, or within the last year. On the contrary, I think the honorable gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] will admit, that every report submitted to the Legislature for the last few years, as presented by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, has contained this very information—compiled, it may be, by the Auditor. Now, Mr. President, I am not disposed to stickle about the peculiar functionary who is to give us this information. The Constitution says the Commissioners of the Canal Fund; the law says the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. This is not, as I said before, a conflict between the Auditor and the Comptroller, or a conflict to be settled by the law of 1848, but it is a conflict now, here on this floor, whether we shall supersede the functions recognized by the Constitution and the law, as inherent in the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and set them aside and ask this information from the Auditor. I certainly hope, whatever may be done as to the obtaining of the information sought for at an early date, we will not, in the face of all these facts and the authority I have quoted (and which I think settles the question beyond a peradventure or a doubt), undertake to say we will recognize the Auditor as the only person who can give us the proper information, as to the whole history of the debt, resources and expenditures of the canal fund.

The PRESIDENT—Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], to propose an amendment?

Mr. CONGER—I will, with the permission of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and if he will accept the modification, I move to amend as follows: "That the report be returned to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, with the request that at an early a day as possible, they furnish directly to this Convention, all the statistics called for."

Mr. GREELEY—I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I think the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] will find, by referring to the law of 1861, that the financial reports which were formerly made by the Auditor to the Commissioner of the Canal Fund, are now directed to be made directly to the Legislature, and, I think he will further find, by the law of 1848 (I have not that law at hand), that that self-same law makes the Auditor the custodian of all the papers belonging to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund; and it declares that after the 31st of October, subsequent to the passage of that law, all accounts formerly kept by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund shall be kept by the Auditor when those documents and papers are in his possession, and those accounts are to be kept by him, not as Secretary of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, but as Auditor. He is simply, ex officio, Secretary of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund.

Mr. GREELEY—I move that this subject be laid over until next Tuesday.

The question was then put, on the motion of Mr. Greeley, to postpone, and it was declared carried.

Mr. VEEDER—I offer the following resolution for reference.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage are respectfully requested to consider the propriety of incorporating in the Constitution a provision authorizing the women in this State who now are or hereafter may become citizens thereof, to exercise the elective franchise when they shall have attained the age of twenty-one years, and generally to enjoy all the rights and privileges of male citizens thereof.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. COOKE, moved to take up a resolution offered by him on Tuesday last.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the several county clerks in this State be required to furnish to this Convention a statement showing:

1. The aggregate number of days' session of the Circuit Courts and Courts of Oyer and Terminer, in their respective counties during the year 1866.

2. The aggregate number of days' session of the General Term of the Supreme Court in their respective counties in the same year.

3. The whole number of civil actions for libel, slander, assault and battery, and malicious prosecution, tried in such counties respectively, during the same year, and the aggregate amount of the recoveries therein.

4. The number of causes, originating in Justices' Courts, in which the amount in controversy did not exceed fifty dollars, carried to the Supreme Court by appeal during the same year.

Mr. ANDREWS—Mr. President, a resolution embracing inquiries of a similar character to the one which has just been read, was yesterday referred by the Convention to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I suggest that but one inquiry should be made of the various county clerks, embracing all the information required on the several subjects stated and that such a resolution should be prepared by the Judiciary Committee; to that end I would suggest the reference also of this resolution to that committee.

Mr. COOKE—I hope that reference will not be made. The gentlemen from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] is mistaken with regard to the purport of the resolution offered and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary yesterday. It was for an entirely different purpose from this one. This one calls for certain information which ought to be spread before this Convention; it is information that ought to be in the possession of every member who will be called upon to act upon the question of the re-organization of the judiciary of the State. I have no doubt of the ability of the Committee on the Judiciary to perfect an excellent plan for re-organizing the courts of the State, but yet it is hardly possible that any report they may make will embrace the views of the hundred lawyers of this Convention; and it is probable that whatever report they submit to this Convention will undergo a severe scrutiny and extensive discussion. The information, called for by this resolution, is designed to aid the Convention in determining whether or not the report of the Committee on Judiciary shall be finally adopted, or what plan shall be devised for re-organizing the judiciary. It is true the information obtained will be referred to the Committee on Judiciary, but I claim that the information received should not be confined to the Committee on the Judiciary, but should be laid before the Convention.

The question was then put upon the resolution and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BURRILL—A resolution was offered by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Francis], which was referred to the Committee on Cities, in reference to providing a constitutional provision to prevent towns from bonding themselves to build railroads, and I desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which that reference was ordered, and to have the resolution referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature. I ask a unanimous consent, at the present time, to have that motion considered now.

Mr. ALVORD—I think that the parliamentary way to reach what the gentleman [Mr. Burrill] desires, would be to move to discharge the Committee on Cities from the further consideration of the resolution, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. WEED—I understand that the resolution referred to was not referred to the Committee on Cities, but to the Committee on Towns and Counties.

Mr. FRANCIS—The resolution was referred to the Committee on Towns, Counties and Villages, and I assent to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Burrill], that it be referred as he proposed, and I hope the motion will prevail.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Burrill to discharge the Committee on Towns and Counties from the further consideration of resolution referred to, and to refer it to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, and it was declared carried.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights be requested to inquire into and report upon the expediency of amending article six, section one of the Constitution, by excepting from the exemption of an accused person from testifying, against himself—cases in which he shall be offered as a witness on his own behalf.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. SMITH—I desire to call up the resolution offered by myself on Wednesday in relation to the disfranchisement of persons who sell their votes.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is informed that the resolution referred to by the gentleman was lost, and the motion should be rather to reconsider the vote by which it was lost.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and qualifications to hold office, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a constitutional provision permanently excluding from the rights of the elective franchise all persons who may be convicted by a court of record of having received money or other valuable thing, to influence or reward their vote, and to make the offense, with or without such conviction, a cause of challenge and disfranchisement at the polls.

Also the pending amendment of Mr. Seaver, to insert after the words "having received," the words "or who have paid or offered to pay."

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. FIELD—I rise to a point of order, that a motion to reconsider cannot be considered without one day's notice.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is informed that the motion was made some days since.

Mr. SMITH—I do not desire to discuss the question involved in this resolution to-day. I desire simply to state, my object in offering it is to get it before the proper committee so that their attention shall be called to the evil aimed at by that resolution, and the committee have it for their consideration, and to have them report upon it. I believe there is no question that will come before this body for its consideration more important than the question of the purity of the elective franchise, and providing some remedy for the grave evil that now exists. Therefore, it is, that I desire that the committees shall have this question before them for consideration, and at a proper time to submit a report, to enable the subject to be discussed before this body.

The question was then put on the motion to reconsider, and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT—Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] to have accepted the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Franklin [Mr. Seaver].

Mr. SMITH—I did not. The resolution as printed is not as it was written and read.

The PRESIDENT—Then the question will recur on the amendment of the gentleman from Franklin [Mr. Seaver].

Mr. VERPLANCK—I desire to further amend by striking out the words "with or without such conviction."

Mr. MERRITT—I move that the resolution with the amendments be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage without further action of this body.

Mr. SMITH—I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Verplanck], will not prevail. The resolution proposes this inquiry for the consideration of the committee—whether upon conviction in a court of record, a person who sells his vote shall not be permanently disfranchised. The last clause of the resolution proposes this inquiry—whether it shall not be made a cause of challenge at the polls whether a person offering his vote has in fact trafficked in the elective franchise, and if it shall be determined on that occasion by the proper officers and inspectors of the election that he has sold his vote or received a reward for it whether he shall be disfranchised on that occasion, whether he has or has not been convicted. The object is to have an inquiry and examination on the part of an able committee of this body into this subject, and I hope they may have the whole matter before them without being restricted by any vote at present.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] state his motion.

Mr. MERRITT—I move that the original resolution, with the pending amendments, be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BICKFORD—I wish to call up a resolution offered by me and laid on the table, and which will be found on page ninety-four of the journal, allowing native born male citizens of this State, between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one years to vote.

The SECRETARY read the resolution in words as follows:

Resolved, That Committee No. 4 on the Right of Suffrage, be instructed to inquire and report as to the expediency and propriety of extending the elective franchise to native-born male citizens of this State between the ages of 18 and 21 years.

Mr. BICKFORD—I move to strike out the words "and report."

There being no objection, the resolution was amended as requested by the mover.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL—The Committee on the Right of Suffrage, have such a resolution before them now.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Bickford, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FIELD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, that it be referred to the Committee on the Organization, etc., of the Legislature, to consider the advisability of providing for the apportionment and election of members of the Legislature, substantially, in the following manner.

1. To divide the State into eight legislative districts; the city and county of New York to constitute one district, the other seven districts to consist of the remaining portion of the State, and to contain, as nearly as practicable, without dividing any county, an equal number of representative inhabitants.

2. Each legislative district, except the district comprising the city and county of New York, to have four senators, to be elected by the electors of the whole district; the first four to be elected at the next senatorial election, and to continue in office respectively, one, two, three and four years, and thereafter, one senator to be elected each year for the term of four years. The district comprised of the city and county of New York, to have such number of senators as its representative population shall entitle it to on the basis or average ratio of representation in the other seven districts; these senators to be elected in a similar manner as those of the other districts; but the full senatorial term in this district to consist of the same number of years as the district has of senators.

3. The members of assembly to be elected for one year. Each legislative district except the first named, to have sixteen members of assembly, and the first named district, a proportionate number, reckoning as in the case of senators.

4. The members of assembly in each legislative district, to be elected by the electors of the whole district, and the election to be conducted in such manner as to enable each party or combination of votes to elect such share of the members elected in the district as it has of the whole vote of the district.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage be requested to inquire into the expediency of extending the right of suffrage to all male Indians of the age of twenty-one years, residing in this State, who are able to read and write in the English language.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. REYNOLDS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, not otherwise referred be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution, as to prohibit the legislature from passing any law, conferring power upon the constituted authorities of any of the counties, towns, cities, or villages of this State, to borrow money by the issue of bonds, or otherwise, or to contract debts in their corporate capacity, without first having obtained the requisite power therefor, from the popular vote of the communities to be affected thereby.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and the Duties of the Legislature not otherwise referred.

Mr. HARRIS—Some ten days ago I offered a resolution calling for information in regard to the business of the Court of Appeals. It went over at the request of some gentlemen, and I now ask for its consideration.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the Court of Appeals be requested to furnish this Convention with a statement of the number of appeals now pending in that court, distinguishing the years in which, and the districts from which, such appeals were brought. Also the number of cases which were determined by the Court of Appeals during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, 1865 and 1866, respectively.

Also the amendment by Mr. Robertson, by adding the following:

"And also the amount involved in each case where the matter in dispute be a sum of money."

Mr. ROBERTSON—I would state that the Clerk of the Court of Appeals has informed me that the examination suggested by my amendment would require so much time and labor that it would be hardly worth while to delay the inquiry to pursue it in the direction suggested by my amendment although germane to the subject of the resolution. I therefore withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BARKER offered the following amendment:

After the word "brought," the words "and from what court the appeal was taken."

Mr. HARRIS—I accept the amendment.

Mr. PAIGE—Mr. Kernan proposed an amendment to the same resolution, if I recollect right.

Mr. HARRIS—Mr. Kernan's amendment was accepted, and is incorporated in the resolution.

Mr. RUMSKY offered the following amendment:

"And that he includes therein the number of cases decided by said court in each of the said years, which were entitled to a preference under the existing laws."

Which was carried.

The question then recurred on the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. PAIGE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Committee No. 4, on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualification to hold Office, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution by providing that every person elected to fill an elective office, shall, before he takes the oath of office, or enters upon the discharge of its duties, take an oath that he has not directly or indirectly paid or advanced any money or property to promote his election to such office, or agreed to do so; and that on his refusal or omission to take such oath, his election to such office shall be void; and that in case such candidate shall be convicted of, directly or indirectly advancing or paying after he shall have entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office, or after he shall have taken the oath last above mentioned to any person or persons, any money or property, as a payment to such person or persons, or indemnification for advancing money or property to promote his election to such office, such candidate shall forfeit such office, or the right to hold the same.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. MERRITT moved that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. SEAVER—I hope that the gentleman will withdraw the motion to allow me to offer a resolution of importance at this time.

Mr. MERRITT withdrew the motion.

Mr. SEAVER submitted the following report:

The Committee on Printing to which was referred the following resolution, viz:

On motion of Mr. McDonald.

Resolved, That this Convention hereby order eight hundred copies of the debates to be printed, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing to report as to the proper disposition of the same.

Respectfully recommend the adoption of the said resolution, and submits the following:

Resolved, That one copy of the debates be placed upon the files by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The committee ask permission to make a further report as to the disposition of the remaining copies of the debates at some future day.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

There being no objection made the Chair announced that the resolution would be considered now.

Mr. CONGER moved that the resolution lie on the table until the Convention take up the resolution on the same subject moved by Mr. Field.

Which was lost.

The question recurred on the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. AXTELL—I offer the following resolution and ask its reference to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Before the resolution was read, on motion of Mr. Merritt, the Convention adjourned to Monday evening, at half-past seven o'clock.

MONDAY, JUNE 24.

The Convention met at 7½ o'clock P. M., pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. E. P. WADHAMS.

The SECRETARY read the Journal of Friday, and there being no objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Mr. BELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State, Taxation, etc., and the Powers and Duties of the Legislature in respect thereto, to examine and report upon the propriety of requiring the Legislature to provide a more uniform and equitable system of assessment and taxation; whereby all property, whether real or personal, liable to taxation, shall be assessed at the just and true value thereof, as estimated in ordinary business transactions.

Also, whether the law, which allows deductions and abatements, on account of indebtedness, to be made from the valuation of personal property, and withholds such deductions from the valuation of real estate, is not unjust in principle, and subject to much abuse in practice.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State.

Mr. SPENCER— I desire to call up the resolution offered by me the other day, requesting the Secretary of State to furnish certain information in regard to the Indian tribes of this State.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to the Convention a statement containing

1. The number and names of the Indian tribes residing or holding lands within this State.

2. The number of Indians belonging to each tribe.

3. The location and quantity of lands held by each tribe, distinguishing, so far as practicable, and as appears by the records of his office, lands held in common, and lands held in severalty.

4. Such agricultural and other industrial statistics as may be conveniently and concisely stated.

Such statement to be prepared from the latest census and other records pertaining to the subject referred to.

The question was then put on the resolution and it was declared adopted.

Mr. OPDYKE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage be instructed to consider the propriety of restricting the exercise of that right, after the year 1871, to those who can read and write.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. A. F. ALLEN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be requested to report to this Convention the amount of accrued interest remaining unpaid, belonging to the Common School Fund, arising from money loaned, also upon bonds, for lands sold; and the cause why annual interest is not paid. Also, if, in his judgment, any of the bonds for money loaned, or bonds for land sold, are insecurely invested. If so, what amount, and that the amount of each be reported separately.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. BOWEN offered the following resolution:

Whereas, A resolution has been adopted, instructing the Committee on Education to inquire into the expediency of inserting a provision into the Constitution, making education compulsory; and

Whereas, The perpetuity of our government may depend upon the general diffusion of education and intelligence; yet it is deemed more compatible with our free institutions that the acquisition of education be voluntary on the part of the citizens rather than compulsory; and therefore, as forming a powerful incentive to the voluntary acquisition thereof, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualification to Hold Office, be respectfully requested to inquire into the expediency of recommending a provision of the Constitution, forbidding any person, who, on January 1st, 1870, is not entitled to the right of suffrage, from thereafter exercising such right unless he be able to read and write the English language, and that the Legislature prescribe what evidence of such ability every such elector shall furnish when he offers to vote.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. BALLARD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights inquire into the expediency of abolishing presentments by grand juries, and of inserting into the Constitution other modes of presentment for the punishment of offenses.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights.

Mr. E. P. BROOKS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire and report as to the expediency of providing, by constitutional enactment, a limitation for claims against the State; or providing a general law defining the kind and character of claims, other than which the State shall not be liable; limiting the time in which the same shall be prosecuted; and creating a tribunal to be designated "the Court of Claims," to hear and determine the same.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CARPENTER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, to consider the propriety of incorporating in the Constitution the proposed amendment to section two of article two, as

Resolved, That the State Engineer and Surveyor be requested to report to this Convention the names of all contractors now constructing new work on any of the canals of the State, or on the extension or improvement of any such canals; the number of the sections held by each under his contract; the approximate cost of the work in each section, if completed in accordance with the original terms of the contract; what changes, if any, have been made in any contract; by whom such changes, if any, were recommended, and by what authority the same were finally made; and the approximate cost of each of such sections when completed in accordance with the plans and specifications as amended.

Which was laid over under the rules.

Mr. W. C. BROWN offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That the Constitution should contain a provision, in these words, relating to the Court of Appeals :

SECTION The Court of Appeals shall continue, and, after the first day of next, shall be composed of the judges then in office elected to that court, and five or more in addition, so that the whole number shall be nine. Each shall hold office for life or until arriving at the age of sixty-five years, or until resignation or removal. In case a vacancy occurs during the recess of the Senate, the Governor may fill the vacancy by an appointment which shall terminate at the end of their next session. The Governor cannot create a vacancy by removal nor re-appoint one whom the Senate shall have omitted to confirm.

§ One of the said judges shall be appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate as chief judge to hold by the above tenure.

§ A General Term of the Court of Appeals shall be held as soon as practicable after the adoption of this Constitution, upon the call of the chief judge or of a majority of the judges. Afterward, general terms shall be held as the court may prescribe, but not less than four each year. A majority of those in office shall constitute a quorum.

§ The judges shall divide into two or more classes, each of which shall be a co-ordinate court, and shall hold sessions at such time and places as the general term shall appoint; and the chief judge shall divide the calendar equally and in regular succession.

§ The decision of either class shall be the judgment of the court, and decisive as authority; except that, if any judge of any class dissents from his associates, he may certify the case to the general term, where it shall be reviewed with or without further hearing of the parties, as the general term may, by rules or special order direct; and the dissenting judge, with the concurrence of the chief judge, may suspend the execution of the judgment in such cases and on such terms as may be proper, until a final decision can be made.

§ If two classes differ at the same time upon the same question, their decisions shall be conclusive upon the respective cases, unless the Legislature otherwise provide; but the general term shall by resolution expound the law as it shall govern the court in future like cases.

§ By a vote of two successive Legislatures, three additional judges may be added and an additional class formed.

§ Whenever the calendar shall be so reduced as that in the opinion of the court they can perform the whole duty sitting as one body, they shall hold only general terms. Thereafter, no vacancy that occurs shall be filled except that the number shall be kept up to five. But the Legislature may again provide for an increase of the number, and a division into classes as before, if required by an increase of business.

§ The chief judge shall preside upon all trials of impeachments before the Senate, except that when a judge of the court is impeached the president of the Senate shall preside.

§ The Court of Appeals shall appoint their own reporter, clerk, stenographers and such other officers and assistants as the laws may provide to aid them in the discharge of their duties; and all so appointed shall hold at their pleasure.

§ Each judge shall receive a compensation to be provided by law and not diminished during his continuance in the office.

§ In case of the temporary absence of the chief judge, the court may appoint a chief judge for the time of the absence; but the court shall possess no appointing power except as herein provided.

§ The judges shall not hold any other office of public trust; and all votes given for either of them for any other office by the people or the Legislature shall be void.

§ The Court of Appeals shall have only an appellate jurisdiction from the judgments, decrees and orders of the Supreme Court, and such other courts, and in such cases, as the Legislature may prescribe. But all laws relative to that court remain in force until the Legislature shall otherwise order.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OPDYKE offered the following resolution :

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to consider the practicability of suppressing official corruption, by means of constitutional provisions, with instruction to report to the Convention.

Mr. OPDYKE.—Mr. President, as some objections have been raised in the Convention against appointing special committees, I desire, if in order, briefly to state my reasons for asking for this committee. I believe that no one doubts that an immense deal of corruption exists in this State, and no one can deny that it is a most serious evil. In my judgment it is the most malignant and dangerous malady, that has ever seized upon the body politic; it pervades all departments of government and is rapidly obtaining the mastery over the incumbents of office. Whenever it gains that supremacy it converts the government into, not an instrument of good, but an engine of evil. Nor is this all dishonest acts on the part of those occupying high official position and places of honor and trust, necessarily exercise a most pernicious influence upon the community and are rapidly demoralizing the masses of the people. Unless something can be done to arrest this tendency, there is serious danger that it will ultimately get the mastery over our whole system of government, or at least make it a by-word and a reproach among the nations. Unless this Convention can do something to arrest this tendency, I, for one, feel that our labors here will be of little value to the State. No matter how wisely or how skilfully we may construct our political institutions, unless we can secure honesty and fidelity in their administration, we cannot hope they will produce good government. Mr. President it is in the hope and I may add, in the confident belief that we may do something to mitigate this evil, that I ask for this committee. I think no member of the Convention can object, at least to have the effort made. Some one has objected to the increase of special committees, in general, on the ground, that we have standing committees whose duty it is, to consider every proposition that may come before this Convention, but I think the objection will not lie in this case. Standing committees have been appointed to consider specific articles or provisions of the Constitution, but the subject-matter of this inquiry pervades every department of government; it is as broad as the Constitution itself, and therefore not a fit subject to be referred to any one of the standing committees. In a word, its nature and its high importance, alike bespeak for it a special reference, and I trust the Convention will not hesitate to accord it.

Mr. HARRIS—I prefer, Mr. President, that this resolution should lie over until there are more members of the Convention present.

The PRESIDENT—The resolution giving rise to debate, it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights to inquire into the propriety of amending the sixth section of article first of the Constitution by inserting in said section, after the words "nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," the words "except in case of accusations of bribery or attempt to bribe electors or official persons."

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. KINNEY offered the following resolution:

Whereas, There is now a law upon our statute books providing for the free education, in our common schools, of all the children of the State, but which law is liable to be repealed by any future Legislature, thus leaving the great cause of universal education, the basis of all free government, at the mercy of the ever-changing Legislatures, therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be respectfully requested to consider the propriety of a constitutional provision requiring the Legislature to provide by law for the free education by the State of all children between the ages of seven and twenty-one years.

Which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. KRUM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and Qualifications to hold Office be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a constitutional provision or provisions embodying in substance the following:

WHEREAS, The use of fermented liquors and wines as a beverage is nearly as old as mankind; and

WHEREAS, history has shown that the use of these gifts of nature and products of human industry cannot be successfully interdicted by the enactment of laws; that the cause of public morals and true temperance cannot be promoted by the passage of sumptuary laws; and that the operation of the civil and criminal laws in this respect should be confined to the regulation of the traffic in these commodities, and to the punishment of drunkenness, disorderly conduct, and offenses against decency, and

WHEREAS, it is utterly incompatible with a republican form of government, and with the existence of free institutions, to provide for the regulation of the morals of the people by legislative enactments, or by the organic law of the State, and

WHEREAS, The policy of prohibition and temperance by law, whenever attempted, has proved but an unbearable and short-lived despotism, and produced hypocrites and sly sinners, rather than moral and temperate men, and had a tendency to create disrespect for all laws, and

WHEREAS, the clamor so often advanced to the effect that all fermented liquors and wines are poison, per se, and injurious to body and mind, is neither borne out by experience nor by the teachings of science, but on close and thorough investigation is reduced to the fact that every article of solid or liquid food or drink used by mankind, may injuriously affect the human system if taken to excess, and,

WHEREAS, The character of any crime or offence should never be made to depend on the demarcation of town and county lines, therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Cities be instructed to inquire into the policy, expediency and propriety of providing by the organic law, that regulation and not prohibition of the traffic in fermented liquors and wines, shall be the rule, and that all such general regulations shall be uniform throughout the State, and that the enforcement of the general regulations and the enactment of all special regulations and police regulations, necessary in addition thereto, for the promotion and maintenance of public order, decency, sobriety and morality, shall be reserved to the municipal authorities of the cities and towns of this State.

Mr. COLAHAN offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, numerous accidents have occurred of late years upon the railroads and steamboats of this State, resulting invariably in great loss of life, and

WHEREAS, such accidents have, in most instances, occurred through the negligence or ignorance of the corporations or companies controlling said railroads and steamboats—and for the reason of the proven inability of the public to receive redress or security from the Legislature of this State and of their ineffectiveness in enforcing the civil remedy now given by statute, against such monetarily powerful and politically influential corporations,

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to consider and devise some action to be had by this body, which will hold said corporations or companies to a more strict accountability for their acts, and make them directly amenable for all losses of life and limb sustained by individuals through their neglect or ignorance, action, that will make them mindful of their responsibilities and the obligations they are under to the public at large.

Also, that this committee be empowered and directed to ascertain from the proper sources of information, the number of accidents that have occurred, and the number of losses to life and limb for the ten years last past—and report the same to this Convention.

1. The Court of Appeals should not be composed of judges of any other court. The judges proper, of the present court, or a like number, should be continued in office, not exceeding six years, until the present calendar is disposed of, and a new Court of Appeals should be constituted of sufficient force to dispose of new business as it may arise.

2. No justice of the Supreme Court should sit in review of any case which shall have been tried before him at circuit or special term, but a distinct class of judges should hold general terms, sufficient in number to dispose of the business, and another class hold circuit and special terms, and the State should be divided into districts sufficient in number and location for the convenient transaction of business.

3. County courts should have a more extended jurisdiction, and in that way relieve as far as may be the Supreme Court.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALVORD—I call up the motion offered by me to reconsider the vote by which the resolution offered by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], in reference to appointment of clerks to certain committees.

The PRESIDENT announced the question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ALVORD—In looking over the proceedings of the Convention of 1846, a Convention which assembled together here for the first time since 1821, for the purpose of re-organizing the Constitution of this State—a Convention which took up the time of some of the then most able men of this State—a Convention which lasted from its commencement (beginning at the same time of the year that ours begun) until the 8th of the then succeeding October, I find that they had no such thing as a clerk to any of their committees. They were, so far as regarded their officers, limited in the number of them, vastly below that which we have under our organization to-day. I also, sir, from my past experience, even reaching beyond that Constitutional Convention, and very late in the history of this State, find that the Legislature have not, until but a few years previous to the present time, ever employed clerks to their committees. I have had the honor of presiding, as late as the year 1858, as speaker of the House of the Assembly, collected together in this chamber, and there was not at that time such a thing known as a clerk of a committee. There were, under the rules of the House in times gone by, larger duties placed upon committees than have been subsequently, when almost every committee of the House has had a clerk. Reports had to be reduced to writing, and instead of being delivered orally and with slips printed as has been the custom in more modern times, they were laboriously drawn up, giving the facts in each case, brought by the committee to the consideration of the Legislature, and concluded with the reasons for the report of the committee. This was all the labor of the individual members or of the presiding officer of a committee and no reason was found until modern times, why this duty should devolve upon an outside person, to be called a clerk. It seemed to me at the time it was first inaugurated, that it was simply for the purpose of creating offices to be filled by hangers-on around the Legislature. My experience has been, sir, in the few past years in which this practice has obtained, that these men have been the most efficient engines in the employ of the lobby for the purpose of clogging the legislation of the State. But, sir, I trust that in this Constitutional Convention there is by no possibility any necessity whatever for clerks. What do we do, sir? We meet together for the purpose of consultation as committee men; if there are distinct and separate propositions made by any individual member of a committee, they come there in his handwriting; they are drawn up; they are only parts and parcels of our business, and require not to be re-engrossed in any proceedings which we may take, and all that there would be for a clerk ordinarily to do, would be to see that our papers were kept together, and to see that they would be kept in some little order, so far as regarded their precedence, when they are brought before the committee, and when they are being acted upon by the committee, and to keep, and take care of the room in which we as a committee may meet. Now, Sir, I think we have eight door-keepers, men who are employed here during the period of the session, some two or three hours each day; they like us, are under the necessity of being present at these sessions of the Convention; but unlike us, sir (if we do not employ them some other way), they are at liberty the moment the session is dissolved, while we have to go into our respective committee rooms and work laboriously a large portion of the day, outside of our duties here. Now, it would seem to me, eminently proper, that some three or four, or more, of these doorkeepers should be selected by the presiding officer of this Convention and given to these four great committees to act as custodians of their papers and to see to the regulation and management of their committee room; and to do all that by any possibility is necessary for a clerk to do in the capacity in which we should employ and use a clerk in our committees. I trust, therefore, while we have got together here for the purpose of endeavoring to produce economy in the future administration of the governmental affairs of this State, we shall not inaugurate this system, small though it may appear to be, in favor of a greater diffusion of expenditure and increase in the number of officers. I trust, therefore, the motion to reconsider in this case will prevail.

Mr. EDDY — I have been a silent, though not an uninterested listener to the debates of this Convention thus far, and confess that I am surprised at the course taken in what I consider an unwarranted and unjustifiable expenditure of public money. It is expected, by my constituents at least, that this Convention will set an example in that particular, worthy to be followed by future Legislatures. That the Empire State occupies a prominent position as well as an influential one among her sister States is everywhere admitted; that an odium has been cast upon our legislative body, whether deservedly so or not, for corrupt legislation, is nevertheless true. I, sir, do not envy the position of those delegates, although largely in the majority, who voted in favor of the resolution for the unnecessary and extravagant expenditure for public printing. The measure, sir, as probably the delegates have found, if they have mingled with their constituents, is decidedly unpopular with the people, and now, sir, shall we allow the vote to stand authorizing four additional clerks for this Convention. It is contended that the business of those committees, which these clerks are to serve, is much larger than that of the other committees. If I understand the matter the committees are increased in number in proportion to the business, and there will be sub-committees appointed and the work divided up, so that the work a clerk would do can be arranged and distributed so as not to press heavily on any single member of the committee. Further, if I understand the honorable gentleman, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. Folger] whose duties are probably more laborious than any other; he himself is opposed to the measure. I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail, and when the vote is taken, the yeas and nays will be called.

Mr. AXTELL — I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman who has just sat down said, "I do not envy the action of the majority of those men who the other day voted for an unwarranted and unnecessary expenditure of the public money." I should say this is a breach of privilege of this house.

The PRESIDENT — What remedy does the gentleman propose?

Mr. AXTELL — I propose no remedy.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair suggests none.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I call for the reading of the resolution in regard to which it is proposed to reconsider the vote on its adoption.

The SECRETARY, then proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, Finance, Canals and Cities, each be authorized to employ a clerk for their respective committees.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL—I find rule 32 says: "All resolutions authorizing or contemplating expenditures for the purposes of the Convention, shall be referred to the standing Committee on Contingent Expenses, for their report thereon, before final action by the Convention." I think this is a matter that ought to go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is of opinion that this resolution was originally introduced before the rules were adopted, and if so, this rule would hardly attach.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL—I shall vote for the motion to reconsider in that case.

Mr. HARRIS—I have no very great anxiety that the resolution which has been adopted, and the vote on which is now moved to be reconsidered, should be made a permanent order of this body. I had supposed when I offered the resolution that it was a thing that would commend itself to the judgment of this Convention. There are four large committees, consisting of fifteen members each; they are charged with very important and responsible duties. Now, every gentleman who is at all experienced in such proceedings knows that there is a great deal of mechanical labor—what may be called drudgery, that somebody must perform. Now, sir, I have been accustomed to labor all my life; I have had the honor of being assigned to the head of one of these important committees; I can do as much work as any other man on that committee or any other committee; and if the Convention feel and are of the opinion that I ought to perform this drudgery, this mechanical labor, which I had proposed to assign to the clerk, I shall submit to it, and submit to it cheerfully. It seems to me it will be an economy of time—an economy of labor to allow this kind of mechanical work, which we all know must be performed in these large committees, to be performed by a clerk. I should be glad to have a clerk to the committee to which I belong, but if the Convention judges otherwise, I will try to get along as well as other gentlemen here.

Mr. ALVORD called for the ayes and noes, and a sufficient number seconding the call, they were ordered.

Mr. PRINDLE—It seems to me, Mr. President, this resolution is entirely proper, and one which ought to have been adopted by this body, notwithstanding all we have heard said against it, and notwithstanding all that has been thrown out in regard to members of this Convention who voted for it and who also voted for the printing of the debates. So far as the power of the Convention is concerned to pass such a resolution, I think there can be no question about it. It seems to me that the Legislature, even if they intended so to do, had no authority whatever to restrict this body in regard to its necessary expenses. We are not here by virtue of the act of the Legislature alone, but we are here by the authority of the Constitution of the State of New York, and by the authority of a vote of the people of the State of New York. The Constitution prescribes this, and prescribes that the Legislature shall provide by a law, for the election of delegates to such Convention. It was the business of the Legislature simply to pass an enabling act, and it had no power to restrict this Convention. Suppose, sir, they had made no appropriation to pay the expenses of this Convention at all, would we have no right to act here? Would we have no right to employ printers to do our printing, or employ persons to do anything else necessary to be done for this Convention? It seems to me clear that we have that right, and just as clear that we have the right to employ these clerks, and that in doing so we do not go beyond what is necessary and proper. It is true, we might do without these clerks, although, perhaps, rather inconveniently. But I concur entirely in the remarks of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], as to the fact that these clerks are necessary and proper. There is this amount of work to be done by somebody; some member of the committee has to do this "drudgery," as it has been termed. In the first place, I think, for the convenience of the different members of the committee, a book ought to be kept, in which should be recorded the transactions of the committee. I think that every motion, every resolution, and every amendment ought to be recorded in that book, and the whole proceedings of the committee, also, in order that members who may be absent at the different sittings of the committee may have the opportunity to learn what has been done in their absence. Some member of the committee has got to take it upon himself to do this work unless the committee have a clerk to do it; they must go to this body and that body, and to this officer and that officer for information, and must prepare the reports, must see to the room; and if any one member of the committee is bound to do all this work, then he cannot participate in the deliberations of the committee, and he will have no time to spare to attend to the objects for which he was sent to this Convention. I say it is entirely proper that a clerk should be employed for the Judiciary Committee; but if the chairman of that committee does not want a clerk for it, or chooses to perform these duties himself, then there is no necessity for it to employ a clerk under this resolution. But certainly for the other large committees I think these clerks are necessary, and I shall vote against the motion to reconsider.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Alvord to reconsider, and it was carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, J. Mr. BICKFORD — I suggest another point of order. It is unquestionably true that if this position had been taken in the first place, it would have been right to have sent the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. But the Convention having taken action on the subject without objection on the part of any member, and the resolution having been considered in the Convention without going through the operation of sending it to the committee, the Convention cannot, at this stage of the proceedings, insist upon the reference to the committee without its affirmative vote.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CONGER — Mr. President, I desire to say briefly this—that I think this matter properly comes within the subject of contingent expenses. If any of these committees desire to have a clerk, it is right and proper that they should have one.

Mr. BALLARD — I rise to a point of order, that as a vote was being taken when the question was raised, and the result had not been declared and the debate on the matter was begun while members were still standing, therefore the debate is out of order.

The PRESIDENT — The Chair was under the impression that the vote had been announced on the motion of Mr. Van Campen, but it has been informed by the Secretary that such was not the fact. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], to refer the subject to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. CONGER — I have no desire to detain the Convention, but I hope—

The PRESIDENT — The question will be taken again. Points of order were taken which the Chair felt bound to recognize. The question now is upon the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. Is the Convention ready for the question?

Mr. CONGER — Am I in order, Mr. President in taking the floor?

The PRESIDENT — You are.

Mr. CONGER — Then, Mr. President—

Mr. BICKFORD — I rise to a point of order. My point is, that the gentleman is not in order in rising when the question is being put.

The PRESIDENT — The gentleman is in order, and he will confine his remarks to the question of reference.

Mr. HAND — Is it in order, when the question is being taken and members are voting, to open debate upon it?

The PRESIDENT — It is in order to raise such points of order as were raised.

Mr. CONGER — Mr. President: the proposed reference I believe to be proper. The question is within the general subject of the contingent expenses of this body. sidered and treated as necessary expenses, or within the class of contingent expenses of this body. Having made such an appropriation, sufficient in amount to cover the contingent expenses, if it is necessary for the convenience and comfort of any of these committees to have a clerk, that clerk can be so appointed, and so provided for that his pay will come out of the contingent expenses of the Convention. As we have framed our rules in constituting this body, we have no longer power to appoint a clerk; but we have appointed a Secretary to this body and given him power to employ the necessary clerks to assist him. I think it is the proper and the best way, that this Convention should detail one or more of these clerks from time to time as they may be needed by these committees, or allow the Secretary to appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to perform the service. The whole question comes within what is ordinarily known as the contingent expenses of this body. We are not obliged to do what we otherwise would have to do, having appointed clerks, to call upon the next Legislature by a special provision to appropriate a sum of money as a just compensation for their services. I am one of those, Mr. President, who desire to keep within the law. I do not deny that the Convention has powers, in some respects, higher than the Legislature; but, as we are convened for the purpose of repressing unnecessary expenses, among other objects, it seems to me exceedingly injudicious when there is an ample provision of $250,000, already made by appropriation to cover the contingent expenses of this body, that we should shiftlessly adopt a method which would oblige us in sheer necessity before we adjourn, to ask the Legislature to make an appropriation for some one object, because we have not exercised the skill to appoint those persons in some such way as to bring their compensation within our contingent and necessary expenses. Therefore, I think this proposed reference is right, and I hope the Committee on Contingent Expenses will so consider the subject that they can recommend the detailing of some person here already appointed, or who may hereafter be appointed, to do this work.

Mr. M. L. TOWNSEND—I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], and the Convention, to a provision of the third section of the act which limits the powers of the Secretary to the appointment of three assistants.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I wish to say but a single word in reference to this subject. I hope that the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], to refer the question to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, will not prevail. I should prefer to have the action of this Convention upon the matter. In reference to the appointment of clerks to the several committees, there may be a diversity of opinion as to their necessity to assist the labors of one committee or another. I can say in regard to the committee upon which I have the honor to be placed—the Committee on Canals—that if the resolution which has been adopted by this Convention this morning, which is a resolution of inquiry into the management of canals, and authorizing the committee to send for persons and papers, is to be acted upon by that committee, there cannot be the least doubt of the necessity of such a clerk. Any body who knows the extensive nature of that subject, and knows also, that if the committee shall go into its investigation and make a thorough report upon it to this Convention, must know that a clerk is indispensable. I don't know what may be the views of the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to the business before them. I do not know what mode they intend to adopt to reach their conclusions which they will report to this body; but whenever the chairman of that committee, or the chairman of any other committee of this Convention, shall rise in his place and state the necessity of the committee to have a clerk, and give his reasons therefor, I shall be disposed, for one, to grant that committee the facilities necessary for the purpose of accomplishing their work, that the subjects submitted to them may be properly brought before the consideration of this Convention. Now, sir, if this motion of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen] should not prevail, and the Convention should be brought to a direct vote upon the resolution of the gentleman from Albany, if it is practicable in the view of the Chair, I should like the question to be divided so that it may be taken upon each of these committees, and we can then decide, each member of the Convention in his own view, in reference to the necessities of these several committees for having a clerk, and vote in reference to each one separately. I, therefore, hope that the motion of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], will not prevail, and that we may come to a vote, and have this question disposed of in reference to the wants of each committee. I do not know with regard to the committee of which the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], is chairman. I am willing to take his word, as he is at the head of that influential committee, to which important resolutions have been referred, and who are now seeking information, statistical and otherwise, as to their necessity for a clerk. I do not know but it will be necessary for that committee to employ a clerk in order to embody the results of their inquiries addressed to different parts of the State; and certainly I am willing to take the gentleman's word that he needs a clerk for the purpose of embodying that information, so that he may lay it before this Convention. I know certainly that it will be necessary for the Committee on Canals, if they go into the investigation which has been indicated by the resolution of the Convention this morning that they should have a clerk. As to the Committee on Finance, and other committees, they can speak for themselves. I hope therefore, that the motion of the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], will not prevail, and that the Convention will come to a direct vote (for it is time that we had settled these questions), with reference to each committee separately.

Mr. HARRIS—I move to amend the motion by referring the resolution to the four committees named in the resolution, that they may each report upon the subject to the Convention whether or not they need or desire clerks.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I accept the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS—We certainly do not want to force a clerk upon a committee that does not desire to have one. With respect to the committee of which I am chairman, I certainly should be glad to have the services of a clerk. But I am not anxious. But there is a good deal of work to be done; but I can do it. I can be clerk as well as chairman; I can serve the notices to call the committee together; I can take care of the room; and if necessary, I can sweep the room; I can keep the records and perhaps keep them better than a clerk, and make a better clerk than I would a chairman. But I am not very anxious that we should have a clerk. I feel, however, that much of my time could be saved for the performance of my duties as a member of the committee by having a clerk, and I hope that the committees will be allowed themselves to decide this matter.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris].

Mr. DUGANNE—I voted for the resolution to reconsider because I thought the proper method of doing business in this Convention is to refer all matters which come up for discussion to their proper channels, that they may go there to be examined and reported to this Convention. I shall, therefore, be in favor of giving this whole subject to the Committee on Contingent Expenses; and I shall, also, be in favor of a reconsideration of all other matters including that in reference to the debates.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Duganne] that that proposition is not now before the Convention.

Mr. DUGANNE—I am aware that it is not. I merely alluded to the fact. I hope that this resolution will go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, that they will report upon it, and we shall then be ready to decide upon the question. That committee can ascertain the facts as well as if we should refer it to the four committees named, as the one committee can ascertain which of the four committees desire clerks, and can report the fact to this house. Then the matter will come before us presented in the shape of a report stating whether or not the appointment and payment of clerks is a necessary and contingent expense of the Convention.

Mr. FOLGER—Lest there be some misunderstanding as to the views of the Judiciary Committee, I will state, that so far as I am entitled to speak for that committee, they would be very glad to have a clerk. They can foresee and anticipate much labor in the performance of their duties, which has been aptly termed by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] "drudgery." But have they a right to have a clerk? That is the question with the committee. I may be traveling over a dusty road, on a warm day on foot, and some person passes me in a comfortable carriage with fleet horses, I may desire to avail myself of that equipage, but I have no right to. I must trudge on, on foot, because that is where fortune and necessity has put me. So it is in this matter. It has been said by the gentleman who sat behind me [Mr. Prindle], that this Convention is above the Legislature, because it is called in pursuance of the Constitution, and does not owe its life to a legislative act. I differ with the gentleman in that view, although I do not intend to go into any discussion of the question. I think that it has its whole life from the Legislative act and from nowhere else. In my view we are tied to the provisions of the legislative act and cannot step outside of the provisions of that act to incur any expenditure. That act does not contemplate or provide for the appointment of clerks of committees. It was drawn with reference to the public clamor, not unfounded, in reference to the unnecessary expenses of the legislature. This Convention was to be concerned in questions of economy; before its close it would ring with denunciations for the want of economy on the part of the Legislature, and would be very much concerned in measures providing for the economy of future Legislatures, and the act was drawn with reference to all that. It was designed to keep the expenses of this Convention as limited as possible. I hold that we cannot go outside of the provisions of the act and incur any expenditure. Is there a provision in the act for a clerk of a committee? Is there any provision for his payment? There is, to be sure, the physical power to appoint clerks of committees; but when the clerk thus appointed takes his certificate from the chairman of the number of days he has served, and goes to the Comptroller of the State, how does the Comptroller fix the amount of his compensation? Does he ask a per diem? Where is the law which fixes the per diem? Does he ask for his pay by the folio? Where is the law which fixes his pay by the folio? Does he ask a gross sum? Where is the law which fixes that gross sum? The necessity exists right at the threshold of referring the amount of compensation and the manner in which it shall be paid to some future body, which shall be occupied with details of legislation and not with general principles. We cannot pay a clerk, for the reason that we have not the right to appropriate money out of the State treasury; and the Constitution which we have sworn to support when we took our seats, expressly prohibits the payment of money out of the treasury, except it be under the authority of law, and an act appropriating it. We are not law-makers for the purpose of making appropriations of money, and for this reason we have no right to appoint clerks, for there is no authority existing for their payment. As much as I would desire to have a clerk to the committee of which I am a member, and as much as other committees may desire to have clerks, they cannot be legally appointed, and it was for that reason that I voted in favor of the motion to reconsider the resolution offered by the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris].

Mr. HARRIS—I agree, Mr. President, with the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], that this body has no right to make an appropriation to pay the clerks of committees, but I do not agree with him that therefore, we are to go without the necessary clerks. There are expenses which this body have already incurred, and which they will continue necessarily to incur, and which will have to be provided for by law. In the course of our proceedings, we passed a resolution inviting the clergy of this city to open our sessions with prayer. Now, sir, we cannot pay these clergymen; we do not expect to pay them, nor will the Comptroller now audit any account for their compensation. Yet, the next Legislature will provide for their payment, for it is the ordinary usage followed on such occasions. We have already, by a very emphatic vote, provided for the publication of the debates of this Convention, and we have agreed that those who publish them shall receive for their publication a large amount of money. We have no power to provide for the payment of that account. It will be necessary for the next Legislature to provide for it; so, I suppose in relation to various other incidental contingent expenses which will arise in the progress of our sessions. We shall have occasion to incur expenses, and these expenses will have to be provided for by the Legislature, not having been provided for in the act under which this Convention is organized. I do not suppose that there is any impropriety in it. It is a simple question of whether we need the services of clerks, or can do without them, and the payment of those clerks if we determine to have them, will be a matter in the discretion of the next legislature.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—On this question to refer the resolution to the committees I desire to notice two or three points. I hold that in the law authorizing the meeting of this Convention, by its terms, to some extent, those things which are necessary, which grow out of the very necessities of this Convention, are entirely proper for us to provide for by our action, that though they are not specified in particulars, they are implied generally. Three or four committees I understand, ask for clerks. I think that almost every gentleman in this body will concede that the work of these committees is such that they will require clerks. While there is no specific provision for clerks in the law which authorizes the meeting of this Convention, I think that by the principles of good sense, sound discretion and judgment which we must exercise in our ordinary affairs in life, there is an implied authority for their employment. The question of economy has been suggested. Every day that this Convention is in session it is attended with an expense of fifteen hundred dollars. The employment of two or three or four clerks would amount perhaps to a cost to the State of one thousand dollars, and, yet, a day is occupied in discussing this question involving a greater loss to the State than would be sustained if the clerks were employed. Where is the economy in thus protracting this debate? These are proper questions for consideration to go before the community. When gentlemen undertake to bring the question of economy up in reference to this matter there are two sides to it. I have no doubt that the employment of these clerks would save the time of this Convention, from three to four days or a week, and it is with that view, that it will be a saving of the time and add to the convenience of the Convention, and be an advantage to its labors, if the committees referred to think they need clerks, that I favor the resolution.

Mr. SMITH—I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], will prevail. I believe that the chairmen of these various committees, and all the gentlemen who have voted for providing clerks to those committees are in favor of a wise and judicious economy in the proceedings of this Convention, as well as in the administration of the affairs of the State. But, sir, there is such a thing as a spurious and buncombe economy, and there is some danger, I fear, that we may run into that. Now these committees are charged with very important duties—duties which affect the interest and the welfare of the people of this great State, and which probably will affect those interests for the next twenty years. We desire, and the people desire that in the discharge of those duties, we shall have all the time, all the ability and all the experience of the members of these committees upon the great subjects which are given into their charge; and that they shall not spend their time and devote their attention to these little matters—matters of routine and of drudgery which can just as well be performed by men who have not their experience nor their ability. Now it seems to me, it would be bad economy—it would be unwise to take up the time and the ability of these men from the consideration of these grave questions with which they are charged, by compelling them to do the work of a clerk. A simple clerk without their experience and ability might just as well perform those duties. It is said that we have not the power. I have always understood that it is a well-settled principle, and one of very general application, that wherever a duty is imposed, and wherever a power is given or enjoined, all the necessary incidental powers for the purpose of discharging that duty, and executing that power are given with it. If we are to be tied up to the provisions which were made by the Legislature when they passed this enabling act, and cannot step an inch beyond the boundary they have prescribed, or the limitations they have made, we are very much restricted and cramped in the performance of our duties. It seems to me that in the discharge of these duties, we are called upon here, whenever the necessity arises for incurring an expense, to step beyond the limitations which they have prescribed; and we may do so, provided we do not violate any of the rules and principles that ought to govern such a body in the discharge of its duties. I can see no danger in providing for these clerks and leaving it, as has been suggested, to the next Legislature to pay them such compensation as they may be entitled to. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we treat with disrespect the chairmen of these committees who come before us and say that they require the ...founded upon any law; not but what it is convenient to have red books to answer the demands of my constituents, to be paid for out of the treasury of the State, instead of out of my own pocket, but because there is no antecedent law to justify any such expense. The Constitution says that no money shall be spent, except it be appropriated by law. Yet that is what we are initiating here, without anything to authorize us. In passing this resolution we are on the edge of a revolving vortex which may draw in every imaginable expenditure.

Mr. HITCHCOCK—Every committee may ask a clerk.

Mr. FOLGER—As the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hitchcock], properly says, every committee might ask a clerk, and the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith,] says, if any chairman shall state that his committee needs a clerk, he would vote that committee one. I say that we are here to establish some principle, some restriction by which the reckless extravagance of legislation may be prevented. The very action which is proposed here, will create the extravagance in the Legislature, by the example which is set. A resolution is introduced on the moment, and is passed without any authority of law; but bye and bye, with kindly feelings toward the printer, or whatever person it is who furnishes the means to carry out the resolution, a clause is put in the Supply Bill, to retrospectively legalize the expenditure and pay the money. Sir, it is against that principle that I speak and vote.

Mr. CASSIDY—As the precedent of the Convention of 1846 has been referred to by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], I would like to call his attention to the fact—

Mr. FOLGER—I will state to the gentleman that I have made no allusion to the Convention of 1846 in the remarks I have made.

Mr. CASSIDY—Then the reference was made by some other gentleman. Chapter 267 of the Laws of 1847, is "An act for the payment of certain expenses of the State Convention to revise the Constitution." It provides for the payment of certain expenses which had not been provided for by the law of 1845, by which the Convention was called. In that there is a provision for the payment of the sum of $393 to the clergymen who officiated as chaplains; to Herman R. Howlett, for additional compensation as door-keeper, $253; and various other appropriations to door-keepers and messengers.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I did not mean to participate in this discussion, but I cannot sit still and have the vote which I may feel compelled to give upon this floor, on the question upon which my judgment has no doubt as to the propriety of my conduct, compared with corrupt legislation, charged to have occurred heretofore, and supposed possible to occur hereafter. It is charged that we cannot refer this resolution to these committees, because there is no warrant in law. Now sir, if that be an expenditure and if that expenditure shall be authorized by law, I cannot conceive what it matters to the Constitution of this State, or to the people of this State, whether the payment be made in pursuance of a law enacted hereafter, or a law enacted heretofore.

...of eliminating from the Constitution from Fulton [Mr. Smith,] says, if any chairman shall state that his committee needs a clerk, he would vote that committee one. I say that we are here to establish some principle, some restriction by which the reckless extravagance of legislation may be prevented. The very action which is proposed here, will create the extravagance in the Legislature, by the example which is set. Sir, it is against that principle that I speak and vote.

We do not propose to pay any money. We do not propose to incur a liability that could be enforced against this State if the State were an individual. Some members of this Convention believe that the expenditure on this account is necessary to carry on its business. In my appreciation, if this money be not paid until it shall be paid according to law, it makes no difference whether it be paid under the law, by authority of which this Convention is now assembled, or by a law to be passed hereafter, if the payment be made in accordance with the forms of law. I would not vote for any motion which I deemed would set an example which ought not to be followed. I believe it is necessary for the business of this Convention, that some of the committees should have a clerk for the proper discharge of their duties. The Committee on Finance is a committee of detail that will have an immense business before it, and I do not believe that the business of that committee will be properly done, however desirous the gentlemen of that committee may be to discharge their duty, without the aid of a clerk. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] says that other committees will follow the example. Certainly no excuse could be offered for the committee upon which I have the honor to be placed, for asking for a clerk. So, I think it will be with nearly every committee except those which have asked for clerks; but whether that is so or not, I should like a report from these committees as to the reasons why they should have clerical aid. I shall not fear that I am doing a wrong to my constituents or a wrong to the State if we employ clerks and leave to the discretion of a future Legislature to decide whether the employment was proper and necessary for the work of this Convention, and whether the person so employed should be paid or not. I should feel that I had been just as conscientious in the discharge of my duty, and feel that I had acted with as high minded a view with reference to the interests of this State if I had voted to authorize this employment, to pay the expense of which was a matter to be provided for by a future Legislature, as if it had been provided for by the past; and, indeed, for certain reasons, I think we may hope that the sanction of a future Legislature will confer full as much honor upon the doings of this body as the sanction of the Legislature which has just dispersed.

Mr. ALVORD—At the risk of bringing to their feet the chairmen of committees which have been designated by the original resolution, as needing clerks, I wish to say here, that so far as my hearing teaches me, there is but one of those chairmen who has appeared upon this floor in favor of having a clerk appointed, while there is another who has spoken in opposition to it. And if I recollect aright, in hearing the announcement of the last vote, the chairmen of the other two committees named, voted in favor of a reconsideration of the resolution, so that so far as the records speak, there are three chairmen opposed to the resolution, appointing clerks to committees, and one chairman in favor of it.

Mr. PAIGE—There is a wise economy, and an unwise economy; and there is the same difference in the matter of expenditure. It seems to me, sir, that giving a clerk to one of these committees, and relieving the chairman of the onerous duties devolving upon him, is not an unwise economy. I have supported this resolution to afford such relief to the chairmen of these committees, because otherwise, much of their time will be occupied by the mere clerical and mechanical work of the committees. The people of this State require from us the use of our brains, and not the use of our hands. Sir, there, may be some nice metaphysical distinction, in reference to the power of passing this resolution. There is no inhibition against this Convention authorizing either of these committees appointing a clerk, but the want of power is in the appropriation of the money to pay the clerk, which this resolution does not pretend to provide for. Now, sir, we can authorize the appointment of a clerk. We are not prohibited from doing that. We have the discretion and power to do it. The question of appropriation to pay the clerk is another question, which we leave to the Legislature of the State. Sir, this is a simple question of economy, of securing for the investigations and work of the committee the exclusive use of the intellect of its chairman. I wish to relieve the Chairman from the onerous burden of performing the clerical labor, and I hope that the motion to refer the resolution to the several committees interested, will prevail.

Mr. McDONALD—I have but a single suggestion to make. Two of the committees which are proposed to be furnished with clerks, have been heard before the Convention through their chairmen, and we are now, in my opinion, quite as well prepared to decide this question as we shall be at any future time. If we refer the subject to three or four committees, then three or four reports will be submitted for discussion, and another day will be lost in debate. It has been suggested that each day's debate is an expense to the State. By taking the vote now we shall save our time and save expense to the State. I, therefore, hope that the resolution will not be referred, that a direct vote will now be taken, and the question finally decided.

Mr. GOULD—The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], has stated a fact which it seems to me ought to engage the serious attention of this Convention, and that is, of the three chairmen of these committees who have spoken, only one has spoken in favor of the resolution. I want to call the attention of the Convention to one fact that, the distinguished gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], has expressly declared that he cares very little about this matter; so that the only authority upon which this expenditure is called for is indifferent in reference to it. The chairman of another of the committees has told us that there is no necessity whatever for such an appointment, so that we are not only going on to make these expenditures without any authority whatever, but also without the existence of any necessity for it. Gentlemen have spoken of the labors of the chairman of one of these committees as exceedingly onerous; but there is no evidence of that fact before us. It seems to me that if we vote for the employment of these clerks we are voting against evidence and against sound economy.

subject to the reference. Let this go to the committees; let them report upon it, and all will then be satisfied.

Mr. BELL.—Mr. President, as I introduced the resolution, providing that the daily sessions of this Convention be opened by the services of clergymen, and as the subject has been frequently referred to this morning, I feel called upon to state, that at the time I introduced that resolution, I was not aware of the provisions of the act for the assembling of this body, in that regard; but I did it, believing it to be fit and proper that the sessions of this body should be opened by prayer. The act does not in terms provide for the payment, but it is presumed that there will be an appropriation to compensate these gentlemen who officiate for us daily. Thus much, I think I am called upon to say in that regard. I fully agree with the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould], in regard to the strict construction of the law assembling us in this capacity. I do not believe we should overstep those bounds, but that we should be governed, as near as possible, by the provisions of that act and I fully believe, as he has said, that one of the leading motives of the people in voting for this Convention, was that we might in some way provide against the unlawful and uncalled for expenditures of money by the Legislature. The people are aware that from these small beginnings—these, what are called, small and insignificant appropriations, the State and the people thereof, have become demoralized. The practice of the Legislature, in providing for attendants upon its sessions, does more to demoralize that body than probably any other cause whatever, and it has become so common in the Legislature assembling here, that they provide, really, more employees than they have members. These employees frequently, if they are not already professed lobbyists, become so before the close of the session. They not only lobby for increased compensation and extra compensation for themselves, but in many cases they are engaged in all the outside lobby movements in the State. Thus it is, that instead of having a Legislature assembled to be conducted as provided by the Constitution, we have a Legislature which has grown up in evil practices to be a perfectly unmanageable body, with more officers than members. I am of the opinion, sir, that this whole matter can be disposed of in accordance with the law under which we are assembled, and also to promote the convenience of the different committees. I agree with the honorable gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], that there is a surplus of door-keepers and employees who could be properly detailed to discharge the duties required by these various committees—so far, at least, as keeping the rooms in order is concerned, and taking care of their papers and other duties of that kind, and I hope they may be employed for that purpose, instead of introducing other persons in the form of clerks for these several committees. Let us keep within the bounds of the law, that we may answer the great expectations of the people in calling us here to revise and amend the Constitution.

Mr. CORBETT.—If the gentlemen who are opposing this resolution anticipate such a favorable result from the committee, why do they subject to the reference. Let this go to the committees; let them report upon it, and all will then be satisfied.

Mr. BELL.—Mr. President, as I introduced the resolution, providing that the daily sessions of this Convention be opened by the services of clergymen, and as the subject has been frequently referred to this morning, I feel called upon to state, that at the time I introduced that resolution, I was not aware of the provisions of the act for the assembling of this body, in that regard; but I did it, believing it to be fit and proper that the sessions of this body should be opened by prayer. Let us keep within the bounds of the law, that we may answer the great expectations of the people in calling us here to revise and amend the Constitution.

Mr. RATHBUN.—I rise for the purpose of making a single suggestion to the Convention. As I understand it, the Convention have appointed a committee charged mainly with the duties of restricting the power of the Legislature; and, as I understand, that committee have already had under consideration, among the topics to which they propose to apply restriction in reference to the power of the Legislature to dispose of the public money, the very proposition which is now before the Convention—or they have considered a subject which would embrace this subject now under consideration. For instance, they have already taken into consideration the propriety of introducing an amendment to the Constitution of this State, which will prohibit the Legislature from granting any money upon any individual claim which may be made to them for that purpose; so as to divest it entirely of all the power which it has heretofore exercised with regard to this great question of claims.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—Mr. President, I rise to a question of order—that the gentleman is not speaking to the question which is under discussion.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has often called the attention of gentlemen to the necessity of remembering the rule in that respect.

Mr. RATHBUN—If I am out of order, Mr. President, I hope to be pardoned. I was simply endeavoring to state the objections which it seems to me lie exactly in our way. We shall be called upon by and bye to vote on this very question, which will apply to this very vote we are now about to take. If we vote to expend this money, or in other words, to incur this debt, how can we, before we get through, apply a prohibitory clause upon the power of the Legislature to pay this precise debt? I ask gentlemen where they will stand then? Because they will be called upon to meet the question squarely. It seems to me, we should come to that question with clean hands, without any mistakes which will stand in the way of our voting as we feel we ought to vote, because we have made a blunder now. That is all I desire to say. In taking the step now proposed, we put a check and control upon our own action, when we come to vote upon the questions which will be submitted to the Convention by and bye, as to any restrictions upon the power of the Legislature, which will embrace this proposition.

Mr. MERRITT—I oppose this reference, because it is unusual. If it is proper to be referred at all, it strikes me it should be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I, therefore, am in favor of that reference, and I wish also to protest against the imputation, of the introduction of clergymen here, being used as a precedent. It is well known to us all, I presume, that there is an association in this city, whose voluntary duty it is to provide the services of clergymen to any considerable number of people who really need the benefit of clergy. This law did not provide for that, but in the discharge of their duty, upon the invitation of this body, they very properly invited the clergy of the city to consider the subject. I presume, in the first instance, they considered whether we needed their services, and deciding that we did, they concluded to rotate and divide this duty among themselves, and it is not to be presumed that they come here and render their services with any expectation of compensation.

The question was then put upon the motion of Mr. Van Campen as amended, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider the propriety of adopting the following additional rules, with such modifications as they may deem advisable:

Which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KETCHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire into the propriety of limiting the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to $50, and increasing that of the county courts to $2,500, and prohibiting appeals to the Court of Appeals of any action originating in a justice's court, or in the county court, wherein the amount does not exceed $500.

Authorizing county judges to hold courts in counties other than those in and for which they are elected, and requiring the adoption of uniform rules of practice in the county courts throughout the State, and prohibiting county judges from practicing in any of the courts of the State, during the continuance of their office.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. E. A. BROWN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be respectfully requested to inquire into the expediency of organizing the several courts of this State substantially as follows:

First. The court for the trial of impeachment to be composed of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Senators, and the Judges of the Court of Appeals, substantially as provided in the existing Constitution.

Second. A Court of Appeals to be composed of nine judges, who shall be elected by the people of the whole State; the judges of the Court of Appeals in office, or who shall have been elected when this Constitution shall go into operation, to serve out the several terms for which they shall have been elected. The five additional judges to be elected for such terms that the time of one judge shall expire every two years, and the full term of office of a judge of the Court of Appeals shall be hereafter eighteen years.

That such Court of Appeals shall be divided into two or three subdivisions or sections, which shall hold courts separately, with power to hear and determine such causes as shall be allotted to each section of said court, in a manner to be provided by law or by the rules of said Court.

That the concurrence of at least three judges shall be necessary to make an authoritative decision.

In case of a difference of opinion in any case between the judges of any such section of said court, then such cause may be re-argued before the full bench of all the judges. Provision may also be made for the hearing of causes of great importance or difficulty before the whole court, in a manner to be prescribed by law, or by rules of said court.

Third. The Supreme Court shall be constituted substantially as at present, with power in the Legislature to increase the number of judicial districts, and an additional number of justices of such court, as may be required by the business of the State.

Fourth. County Courts substantially as now organized, with jurisdiction in civil actions, to an amount not exceeding $500 in amount.

Fifth. Surrogates' courts to be constituted substantially as at present. But in all cases the surrogate shall be a separate officer from the county judge, and be also authorized to discharge the duties usually performed by the justices of the Supreme Court at chambers.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That so much of the twenty-second annual report of the New York Prison Association as contains the testimony of prison officers and ex-prison officers, taken by a commission of that association under a joint resolution of the Legislature, passed in the year 1866, together with the summary of such testimony prepared by the commission contained on pages 318 to 500, inclusive, of such report, be referred to the Committee on State Prisons, etc.

Which was referred to the Committee on State Prisons.

Mr. SEEVER, from the Committee on Printing, made the following report:

Your committee, to whom was referred the following resolution, to wit:

IN CONVENTION, }
June 21, 1867. }

On motion of Mr. ARCHER,

Resolved, That there be printed 500 copies of the Rules and Standing Committees together in pamphlet form for the use of the Convention.

Would respectfully recommend the printing of five hundred copies of the Rules and of the Standing Committees, as provided in the foregoing resolution, in addition to the usual number.

And your committee would also recommend that an additional eight hundred copies of the list of committees, revised and corrected, be printed, and substituted on the files of this Convention for Document No. 9, now on the files.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

Which was agreed to.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I wish to know if in the order of unfinished business, the consideration of the question brought before the Convention by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] may now be taken up.

The PRESIDENT—It will come up properly, the Chair rules, under the head of resolutions.

Mr. W. C. BROWN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Constitution should contain a provision in these words relating to the Supreme Court.

§ 1. The Supreme Court is continued with general jurisdiction in law and equity.

§ 2. The division of the State into eight judicial districts shall remain as at present until changed pursuant hereto.

§ 3. There shall continue to be four justices of the Supreme Court for each judicial district, and as many more for districts containing the cities of New York, Brooklyn or Buffalo, or a population of over six hundred thousand, as are, or may be authorized by law.

§ 4. The justices shall be elected or appointed as hereinafter provided, and shall hold office for life, or until they arrive at the age of sixty-five years, or until resignation or removal. The justices in office at the time this Constitution takes effect, shall hold by the above tenure.

The districts shall be compact and bounded by county lines. They may at any such session increase or diminish the number of districts, only one district in each session. No diminution of districts shall have the effect to remove a justice from office. On the formation of an additional district there shall be four additional justices.

§ 6. Provision may be made by law for designating, from time to time, one of the justices in each district to be the presiding justice, or chief justice of the district. Any three or more may hold general terms; any one or more may hold special terms and circuit courts, and preside in courts of oyer and terminer, and perform such other duties in the administration of justice as the Legislature may prescribe.

severally receive at stated times, for their services, a compensation to be established by law, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office. They may be continued in office after arriving at the age of sixty-five years by special order of the Governor, and the concurrence of three-fifths of all the Senators elected.

§ 8. They shall not hold any other office of public trust. All votes for either of them for any elective office, except one strictly judicial, given by the people or the Legislature, shall be void.

§ 9. Any male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, of good moral character, and who possesses the requisite qualifications of learning and ability, shall be entitled to admission to practice in all the courts of the State. The Legislature shall provide for ascertaining such qualifications.

§ 10. Testimony in equity cases shall be taken in like manner as in cases at law.

§ 11. Judges of the Court of Appeals and justices of the Supreme Court may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, if two-thirds of each house concur therein. All judicial officers except those mentioned in this section, and except justices and judges of inferior courts, not of record, may be removed by the Senate, on the recommendation of the Governor; but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the journals, nor unless the party complained of shall have been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the journal.

§ 12. No judge or justice shall take part in the decision of any appeal from a judgment, order or decree entered by his direction, or by direction of a court of which he was a member.

§ 13. The Supreme Court shall not, nor shall any justice thereof, exercise any power of appointment to public office, except that they may be authorized by law to appoint reporters.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GOULD—In calling the order of business, the Chair, undoubtedly inadvertently, omitted to call for the reports of Select Committees.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair did call for them in their proper order.

Mr. GOULD—I did not hear the call of the Chair, and I would like now to make a report.

The PRESIDENT—If there is no objection, the report of the Select Committee will be received.

Objection being made, the report was not received.

On motion of Mr. ARCHER, the Convention adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M. Prayer was offered by Rev. H. N. POELMAN. The journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY, no objection being made thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. HARRIS—I present the petition of sundry citizens of the town of Williamsville, in the county of Erie, representing that for the last ten years, a practice has prevailed in the Legislature, and in municipal corporations and many of the Boards of Supervisors, of granting public funds to various churches, colleges and institutions of a sectarian character; and they ask that provisions may be inserted in the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature from making any such grants of funds or property and also prohibiting municipal corporations and counties or towns from doing the same. I move that the petition be received and referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. RATHBUN presented a petition for universal suffrage as well for women as for men.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. C. E. PARKER presented a petition of citizens of Tioga county, asking for female suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition signed by Mrs. Daniel Cady and 208 others, asking to have the word "male" stricken from the Constitution.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition asking for female suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. GRAVES—I present thirty-seven petitions: one from Brooklyn, three from Mount Morris, one from Washingtonville, one from Troy, one from Lima, eight from New York city, three from Buffalo, two from Skaneateles, one from Lockport, one from Mount Morris, one from Poughkeepsie, one from Dutchess county, nine from Ulster, Oneida county, one from Fairfield, Herkimer county, in all containing the signatures of two thousand and forty persons, asking for equal suffrage.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. STRATTON presented a communication from H. B. Wilson on the alleged corruptions of the Legislature, and suggesting remedies therefor.

Mr. STRATTON—Mr. President, from the peculiar and startling facts contained in the communication, I ask that it may be read.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the communication. During the reading,

Mr. HARRIS moved that the further reading be dispensed with.

Which was lost, and the reading of the communication was proceeded with to its conclusion.

Mr. STRATTON—I understand there is a proposition for a select committee to which this properly would be referred, which now lays upon the table, and I ask, therefore, that this communication be laid on the table until the formation of such committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—in relation to the extraordinary speech which has just been made by an individual outside of this Convention, and not connected with it in any way, I move that it be not included in the stenographic report and published at the expense of the State.

The PRESIDENT — The communication for the present, lies upon the table, and can only be acted upon by being first taken from the table.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the department of the Metropolitan Police, of the city of New York, in reply to a resolution of the Convention.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the communication as follows:

CENTRAL DEPARTMENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE, 300 MULBERRY STREET,
NEW YORK, June 24, 1867, }

To the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: I am instructed by the Board of Metropolitan Police to inform you that the required number of copies of the last report of the board, has been transmitted to Luther Caldwell, Esq., Secretary of the Convention, in compliance with the resolution adopted the 21st of June, instant.

By order of the Board of Metropolitan Police.

THOS. C. ACTON, President.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Secretary of State in reply to a resolution of the Convention, requesting information in reference to the Indian tribes in this State.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the communication.

Mr. E. BROOKS moved that the further reading of the communication be dispensed with, and that it be laid upon the table and printed.

Mr. SPENCER — A portion of the information contained in that report, I suppose is contained in the Manual, but there is another portion which I suppose is not.

Mr. E. BROOKS — I understand that this is a full answer to the resolution adopted by the Convention, and therefore, to save time, I made the motion.

The communication was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian affairs.

Mr. GOULD from the select committee appointed to prepare a copy of the Constitution, with comparative notes, etc., made the following report:

The select committee appointed to prepare a copy of the Constitution of the State, with comparative notes and references now

Report, That they have performed the duty assigned to them. A portion of the printing has been done, and the whole work will be laid upon the tables of members as soon as the remainder can be printed.

Many gentlemen who have seen the printed sheets, have expressed a desire that extra copies of it should be printed, in order that those gentlemen of learning and leisure, in various parts of the State, who are preparing to aid the Convention with their advice and assistance, might be furnished with a copy thereof. Your committee concur with them in the opinion that the interests of the State would be promoted by the printing of extra copies, and therefore offer the following resolution for the consideration of the Convention.

Resolved, That twice the usual number of copies of the Constitution, with notes and references, be printed for the use of the Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GERRY called up the resolution offered by him yesterday, which the Secretary proceeded to read as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk of the Assembly be requested to furnish this Convention with a list of all the titles of bills introduced at the last session of the Assembly, relating to, or affecting the city of New York.

Mr. McDONALD — I move that the resolution be amended by inserting "passed" instead of "introduced."

Mr. GERRY — My object in offering that resolution was not simply for the purpose of ascertaining the number of bills affecting the city of New York, which have been passed, but more particularly for the information of this Convention, showing the number of applications which have been made during the last year to the Legislature, proposing either amendments to local laws affecting the city of New York, or for the furtherance of private interests of individuals residing within the city of New York. I have no objection to an amendment which shall also require a statement of such bills as have been passed, but I desire for the information of this Convention, to know what bills have been presented, and which as I am instructed, the clerk of the Assembly, by reference to his minutes, can readily procure and furnish us.

The question being put upon the amendment offered by Mr. McDonald, it was declared to be lost.

Mr. KRUM — I move to amend the resolution by adding thereto "and the title of bills relating to corporations."

Mr. GERRY — I accept that amendment.

The question was then put on the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. OPDYKE — I move to take from the table the resolution offered by me on Monday last, in reference to the appointment of a select committee.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to consider the practicability of suppressing official corruption by means of constitutional provisions, with instructions to report to the Convention.

The question was then put upon the resolution of Mr. Opdyke, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. HAND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature consider the expediency of adding the following section to article fourth of the Constitution:

1. Every bill which shall have passed the Senate and Assembly, and have been approved by the Governor, as provided in the preceding section, shall be referred to the Court of Appeals, or a quorum thereof, and by them be carefully reviewed. If, after such review, the court, or a majority of their whole number, shall find the enactment in all its parts in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, it shall be indorsed

"Constitutional," and signed by the President of the court, and the constitutionality of said act shall never be called in question by any tribunal in the State.

2. For the performance of the duties indicated in these sections, the Court of Appeals shall hold a special session, commencing within two months after the opening of each regular session of the Legislature, and continue until the close of the legislative term, and as much longer as may be necessary for the careful performance of the duties herein indicated.

If any bill committed to them for review shall be deemed by them unconstitutional, they shall within ten days return the same to the House where it originated, for reconsideration, carefully pointing out the portions of the act which they regard as in violation of the Constitution. If the Legislature choose to modify the same and, the Governor approve as before provided, it shall be once more submitted to the Court of Appeals for review. Should the Legislature adjourn, before the court shall have completed its reviews, any bill they may examine after said adjournment, and find in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution, it shall be placed in the hands of the Governor, and by him submitted to the Legislature for their consideration (on the first day of their session), to be disposed of as before provided.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Committee No. 5, on the Governor, etc., be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the following provision respecting the powers of the Governor.

The Governor may approve any appropriation and disapprove any other appropriation in the same bill. In such case, he shall, in signing the bill, designate the appropriations disapproved, and shall return a copy of such appropriations, with his objections, to the House in which the bill shall have originated, and the same proceedings shall then be had as in the case of other bills disapproved by the Governor.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Governor, etc.

Mr. BECKWITH—I move to take up the resolution offered by me yesterday, which was laid upon the table.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be and he is hereby requested to furnish to this Convention the following information:

1. The original cost of the Champlain canal.
2. The cost of any and all enlargements, repairs and improvements thereof.
3. The tolls received in each fiscal year from 1846 to 1866, inclusive.
4. The cost of collection, superintendence and repairs thereof for each year during the time aforesaid.
5. The tons shipped on the Champlain canal each year during that time, stating the same separately from those of the Erie canal, so far as practicable.

Mr. BECKWITH—I move to amend the resolution by striking out from "1846 to 1866 inclusive."

The PRESIDENT—The amendment suggested will be made, no action having been had upon the resolution.

Mr. BECKWITH—I move this resolution for the reason that I find in the Manual, which has been laid upon our tables, that the cost, expenses and tolls of the Champlain canal, are stated in conjunction with those of the Erie canal. I would like to have them stated separately.

Mr. MILLER—I shall very cheerfully vote for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Beckwith]. I would like to have had it broader, so as to refer to all of the canals of the State; but I will not embarrass the resolution nor raise a discussion by offering an amendment at present. I believe, sir, that there will be no more important question come before this Convention than the question relating to the reform in the management of our canals, and the reform in the organization of the Canal Department of the State. I think, sir, that there is no question to-day commanding so much of the attention and interest of the people of the State. I believe, that the resolution which was offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], a few days since, brought out some very important information which this Convention will do well to consider; some information that will be valuable when we come to discuss the proper organization of the Canal Department of the State. It is true, sir, that we learn nothing from the response to that resolution about the canals; we do not get the information that we desire; but we do, sir, obtain much information in relation to the Canal Department. We found that, as at present organized, it was a mysterious and complicated institution, that the most intelligent men of this Convention little understood; we found further, sir, that it was an institution that as at present organized consists of a number of co-ordinate equal officers, or equal bureaus without any responsible head. Now, sir, I suggest that this organization however much it may favor the discharge of the routine business in the department, is perfectly fatal to any just responsibility and accountability in the discharge and control of their great interests.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I rise to a question of order, that the discussion of the gentleman occupying the floor is not pertinent to the consideration of the question before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair hardly thinks the point of order well taken; the question is debatable. The gentleman will confine himself to the motion.

Mr. MILLER—Mr. President, I understand that this motion is to call for information in reference to the canals of our State, and it is in that light that I am discussing it. But sir, in order to obtain this information we must go to the Canal Department of the State. Now, I notice that this resolution is directed to the Auditor of the Canal Department. I do not know but that this is the most proper direction; at all events I am in favor of piercing this Canal Department in every direction, in every board and bureau until we have obtained the information that we need and desire here. I would say, Mr. President, that the general ignorance, if I may so speak, in relation to the organization of that department, is not confined to this Convention; practical business men on the line of your canals, and who are its patrons, are as much in doubt as we are in reference to where the responsibility lies. I noticed only a few days ago a report of the proceedings of a meeting held at Troy, in this State, to protest against the mismanagement of this Champlain canal, and all the speakers were agreed that there was gross and outrageous mismanagement, but not one of them, at the time, could tell where the responsibility and blame lay. They said that the superintendent claimed it was not his fault, and the Canal Commissioner said it was not his. Some of them had visited the department in this city and could find nobody that could take the responsibility here. I have understood that since that meeting there has been another held, at which they had censured a number of State officers. But, Mr. President, when you divide the responsibility—when you censure men in gross—you have no responsibility left. You must have an official head, and then he is responsible not only for his own acts, but for the acts of his subordinates. You must have somebody to whom the people can look when there is mismanagement and say "you are the man." Now, sir, we have nobody of this class. It is some satisfaction when people are misgoverned and abused to have somebody to blame, but in this case, with the grossest mismanagement acknowledged, it is nobody's fault. We have a swarm of vultures feeding upon the vitals of the State and nobody to blame. I wish to suggest to the able Committee on the Canals that the first question for them to examine is as to providing a remedy for the gross mismanagement of the canals of this State, and until that remedy is found, and the remedy is made certain and permanent, all other questions in relation to the canals must be postponed. Now, I suggest, Mr. President, that this idea of having a responsible head to the Canal Department of this State is worthy of consideration—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will respectfully inform the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller], that he is taking a pretty wide range of debate.

Mr. MILLER—I am much obliged for the liberal interpretation the Chair has given. I have said all that I wished to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECKWITH—I find upon looking into the Manual which has been laid upon our table, that the matters for which I have inquired, are separately stated as to all the canals except the Erie and Champlain canals—as to those two Canals they are stated together, and not separately as in the case of the others.

The question was then put upon the resolution of Mr. Beckwith, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, etc., consider the propriety of requiring the payment of a tax by every elector, as a condition of the exercise of the right of suffrage, and that article three, section one of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, on this subject be referred to said committee, as affording the basis of a constitutional provision to be adopted by this Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. A. F. ALLEN—I call for the consideration of the resolution introduced by me on Monday, calling for information.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be requested to report to this Convention the amount of accrued interest, remaining unpaid belonging to the common school fund, arising from money loaned, also, upon bonds for land sold, and the cause why annual interest is not paid; also, if in his judgment any of the bonds for money loaned, or bonds for land sold, are insecurely invested, it so, what amount, and that the amounts of each be reported separately.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. A. F. Allen and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LARREMORE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Corporations, other than Municipal, to inquire into the expediency and necessity of inserting a clause in the Constitution, requiring the Legislature to pass a general act, in pursuance of which, gas companies may be incorporated.

Which was referred to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Mr. KINNEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be requested to inquire into the propriety of conferring upon justices of the peace, concurrent jurisdiction with coroners over the subject of inquests.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEYMOUR offered the following resolution and asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Legislature be requested to inquire into the expediency of an organization of the Legislature by the Constitution, so that there shall be a Senate of thirty-two members, to be elected—four from each of eight senatorial districts, into which this State shall be divided—to hold their offices for four years, and after the first election, one Senator to be elected annually from each senatorial district and that there shall be a House of Assembly, to be elected annually, to consist of 128 members, to be apportioned among, and elected from the several counties of the State, according to their population, each county being entitled to at least one member, and that the compensation of the members of the Legislature, be paid by annual salary to be fixed by the Constitution.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature.

Mr. GRAVES—As our national holiday is fast approaching, I have no doubt the members of this Convention desire to remember it in some form, and as the duties of the members increase each day, to prevent any embarrassment in the faithful discharge of their duty, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Convention keep an open session from Friday of this week until July 8th, to enable the several committees to pursue their labors, and that during said time the Convention will not meet daily at the Capitol, but the members of the several committees will meet and compare views, or examine separately the subject-matter, submitted to them, and report to the Convention in Committee of the Whole at its session on Monday evening, July 8, 7½ P. M., or as soon thereafter as consistent with their duty.

Mr. GREELEY — The only objection I have to the adoption of that resolution is that the committees will not remain in session without the sessions of this body continue. They will simply adjourn.

The PRESIDENT — The question giving rise to debate it will lie over under the rule.

Mr. POND — I wish to call up the resolution offered by me in regard to the appointment of a committee to inquire into and report on the expediency of adjourning this Convention to Saratoga.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to inquire into and report upon the expediency of adjourning this Convention to Saratoga.

Mr. PRESIDENT — The resolution having been tabled by a vote, the question is on taking it from the table.

The question was then put on taking the resolution from the table, and it was declared carried.

Mr. POND — This resolution, as I understood it, went over because it gave rise to debate, and was not laid on the table by a vote. But the subject being now properly before the Convention, I will proceed. This resolution was introduced by me with a view to the contingency contemplated by the framers of the act under which this Convention is assembled. There have been various questions presented to this Convention, in reference to which discussion has been had, to the effect that the Convention had no power over those subjects. But in regard to this, sir, the framers of this act under which we have assembled, clearly contemplated a contingency arising when it might be proper for the sessions of this Convention to be held at Saratoga, or elsewhere than in Albany. Now, sir, the hot season is close upon us, and there is, in my mind, not much doubt but that the contingency contemplated will arise; and, inasmuch as we are approaching the heated term, I think it would be proper that the subject should be examined by the committee, so that when the contingency does arise, the facts may have been ascertained, and presented in an authoritative manner, to this Convention as to where is the proper place for holding its sessions outside of this city. I do not propose to go into the merits of the question on this resolution to appoint a committee. The appropriate time to discuss its merits will be if the committee is appointed, when the committee shall have examined the question and reported upon it. I think, however, it may be proper to say that, in my judgment, the convenience and health of the members will be promoted by a change, and by holding a session of the Convention elsewhere than in Albany. For the purpose of information, without going into detail myself, I will merely refer delegates to the speeches of the members of the Legislature from Albany as to the condition of the building where the sessions of the Legislature are held: and if, as they claim, this chamber is not a fit place for the Assembly in the winter, it certainly cannot be a proper place for the sessions of a larger body during the heated term of the summer. Without, therefore, going into the merits of the question, I hope the committee will be appointed, that they may examine into the question and see whether it will not be proper to hold the sessions of this Convention at a place that will secure the safety of the constitutions of its members while they are getting up a political Constitution for the State.

Mr. STRATTON offered the following amendment:

Strike out the word "five," and insert in place thereof "one from each judicial district."

Mr. POND — I accept that amendment.

Mr. GREELEY moved to lay the resolution upon the table.

Which was lost.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following amendment:

Add, "And after the Convention has been in session at Saratoga two weeks, of adjourning to Niagara Falls, and after the Convention has been in session at Niagara Falls for two weeks, of adjourning to Lebanon Springs."

Mr. NELSON — I rise to a point of order, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Silvester] is not germane to the resolution, the resolution being for the appointment of a committee to consider the propriety of adjourning; the amendment proposes action for the Convention after they shall have reached Saratoga.

The PRESIDENT — The point of order is well taken.

Mr. SILVESTER — The Chair as I understand it decides my amendment to be out of order. It merely proposes an inquiry as to the expediency, as does the original resolution.

The PRESIDENT — The original resolution is simply for the creation of a committee.

Mr. SILVESTER — This is a proposition to amend by providing for an inquiry into the expediency of doing these things afterward.

The PRESIDENT — It is a different subject matter altogether in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. GREELEY called for the yeas and nays upon the resolution. A sufficient number seconding the call, they were ordered.

Mr. BICKFORD — It seems to me the proposition for the adjournment of this body to Saratoga is one which this Convention should not entertain for a moment. In my view it is wholly preposterous for the resolution to be entertained at all. If the resolution has any definite object, it is not perfectly expressed in its present shape. It should specify, not merely the village of Saratoga, but should specify some place in Saratoga, some building, some hall or room where the sessions of this Convention could be held. It is not enough to provide for adjourning to Saratoga without we name some place there. It is well known that the place which has been proposed for the sittings of this Convention is an antiquated opera house—

Mr. SEAVER—I rise to a point of order, that the question before the Convention is upon appointing a committee, and does not involve the merits of an adjournment at all.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken; the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] will confine himself to the question of the expediency of raising a committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—Well sir, I deem it to be in order, with all respect to the President, to state that there is no convenient place at Saratoga, as we all know, or a proper place for holding the meetings of this body. We have here every facility for doing the business of this Convention. Provisions have been made for the accommodation of the members of the Legislature, and the same accommodations are afforded to us. It is here a cool and shady place—everything to our hand and ready for use, and if we go to Saratoga, it is preposterous to think that we shall find either the accommodations or the facilities for doing business that we have here. The people do not expect that we have come here for our own pleasure, or for our own convenience—but it is to attend to the business of this Convention,—to attend to public business, and it is perfectly obvious that we can do better here than in any other place.

Mr. KETCHAM—I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman's remarks are not germane to the subject. He is talking about what would be a very appropriate subject if the inquiry were before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair has already informed the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], that he must confine his remarks to the expediency of raising this committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—If it would ever be proper to raise this committee, I think it is not proper to raise it now. It is a time of general health in Albany; there is no plague here [laughter] and no epidemic whatever, or anything of that kind. It might be very proper in case any disease were prevalent here that we should adjourn to some other place, but at the present time I think this is the proper place to stay; and, therefore, I hope the proposition will not be entertained at all.

Mr. DEVELIN offered the following amendment:

Insert after the word "Saratoga" the words "or the city of New York."

Which was adopted.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I move to postpone the further consideration of this resolution until the 9th day of July next. We shall then be in a better situation to consider the propriety of adopting this resolution than we are now.

Mr. POND—It strikes me, sir, if this committee is to be appointed at all, it should be appointed now—

The PRESIDENT—This motion is not debatable upon the main question, this being a motion to fix the time.

Mr. POND—I suppose that I am speaking to that point. I say that if the committee is appointed at all, it should be now, and not at the future time suggested. In reply to the honorable gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford]—

Mr. MERRITT—I rise to a point of order that it is not in order to debate a motion to postpone.

The PRESIDENT—A motion to postpone, the Chair holds, is debatable, and this is a motion to postpone to a day certain; the motion to postpone is debatable, if the debate does not involve the main question.

Mr. POND—Upon that question the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] has suggested, that there is no epidemic here, and we ought to wait until that comes. I think myself, sir, that wisdom requires that the committee should be appointed, and should ascertain where, if anywhere, out of this city, a session of this Convention may be held, before the exigency is upon us; because, in all probability, if this Convention holds a session elsewhere than here, they will want to adjourn by the time named by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen], to which he would have this question postponed. If this committee is appointed, they may be able to report a place to which the Convention may wish to adjourn by that time; and if there is any necessity for adjourning at all, that necessity will be apparent by the 9th day of July. Indeed, it seems to me, it would be proper for this committee to be appointed, and they might make a report before the adjournment over for the 4th of July, and then, if there is to be a session held elsewhere, there will be sufficient time in the interim between this time and the 8th or 9th of July, for the removal of everything that is necessary from this place to the place to which this Convention may see fit to adjourn. Therefore, it seems to me, to be the proper time to appoint the committee asked for in the original resolution; to which I supposed the amendment of my friend from New York [Mr. Develin], was not germane, according to the decision of the Chair upon a former amendment. But no matter for that. I don't think it will hurt this Convention to receive a report from the committee in reference to New York city as well as Saratoga Springs, and let the Convention say which one of the two places, if either, they will adjourn to.

Mr. MERRITT—It seems to me that the whole subject is pretty well understood; and in order to test the sense of the Convention, I move that it be indefinitely postponed, and on that I call the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Merritt, and it was carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Armstrong, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beals, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Carpenter, Case, Cassidy, Church, Conger, Cooke, Curtis, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Ferry, Fowler, Fuller, Garvin, Goodrich, Gould, Graut, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hammond, Hand, Hardenburgh, Harris, Hitchcock, Houston, Hutchins, Kinney, Krum, Lapham, Lee, Ludington, McDonald, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, Murphy, Paige, A. J. Parker, C. K. Parker, President, Prindie, Rathbun, Reynolds, Root, Roy, L. W. Russell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Seaver, Silvester, Spencer, Stratton, Strong, Van Campen, Van Cott, Wales, Wickham—70.

Yeas—Messrs. Alvord, Archer, Axtell, Beadle, Beckwith, Bowen, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, J. Brooks, Burrill, Champlain, Cheritree, Chesebro, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Corbett, Daly, Develin, Duganne, Ely, Endress, Field, Flagler, Folger, Francis, Frank, Fullerton, Gerry, Graves, Hatch, Hitchman, Huntington, Ketcham, Landon, Larremore, A. H. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Mattice, Monell, Morris, Nelson, Opdyke, Pond, Prosser, Robertson, A. D. Russell, Seymour, Sheldon, Tappen, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Williams, Young—61.

Mr. GREELEY moved that the Convention do now adjourn.

Which was lost.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN called up the resolution offered by him yesterday in relation to an adjournment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That when this House of Delegates adjourn on Friday next, they adjourn to meet on Tuesday, July 9th, at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. GRAVES—I wish to call up the resolution offered by me this morning, which I now offer as an amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as offered by Mr. Graves as follows:

Resolved, That this Convention keep an open session from Friday of this week until July 8th, to enable the committees to pursue their labors, and that during said time the Convention will not assemble daily at the Capital, but the members of the respective Committees will meet and compare views, or examine separately the subject-matter submitted to them, and report to this Convention in Committee of the Whole, at its session on Monday evening, July 8th, at 7½ o'clock, P. M., or as soon thereafter as consistent with their duties.

Mr. ALVORD—Mr. President: my experience in the past has been, that an adjournment, either in terms, or so understood to be in fact, results in a breaking up of the entire business of a legislative body. If we come to the conclusion to adopt the original resolution, it will adjourn the entire business of this Convention from Friday evening until the succeeding 9th of July. If we merely adopt the amendment offered here by the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves], it results in the same thing. Unless we come here together and meet in our daily sessions, and go through the ordinary forms, we shall, in fact and in truth, keep outside of doing anything during the entire of this interregnum. It suggests itself to me, as the best thing to do under the circumstances, that we should hold our usual sessions during this whole week and meet again on Monday and Tuesday, then adjourn on Wednesday, at as early an hour as gentlemen please, over until the next Monday. We shall lose no time in this way, and we shall be doing efficient work, laboring in the direction we ought to do, between the present time and the day of adjourning, just previous to the 4th of July, and in that way shall lose less of the valuable time which ought to be employed here, than in any other method proposed. We have, it is true, but very little to do in our daily meetings here; but we have a vast work to do in the committees; and attempting to get around in any way the idea of an adjournment of the Convention, and keeping together the committees will be a failure. The committees will disperse the moment the Convention adjourns, either in terms or substantially, as contemplated by the amendment of my friend from Herkimer [Mr. Graves]. I hope this proposition, either of the amendment or of the original resolution, will not prevail.

Mr. MURPHY—I am opposed to this amendment for the reason that I would not do indirectly that which I would not do directly. I do not exactly understand, sir, what is meant by the term "open session" in this resolution, unless it means that there are to be no regular sessions of this body during the interval proposed. As I understand the resolution itself, this body is not to meet, and there is to be no session of this Convention, though the resolution says there shall be an open session in which the committees shall meet. If it be intended to get around the act which says that this body shall not take a recess for longer than three days, let us do it in an open and manly way. Let us adjourn over from Friday until Monday, as proposed by the original resolution. Certainly we are not in session when the committees are merely meeting; and there is no such thing as an open session. An open session of this Convention, I take it, is an open meeting of this Convention daily, as we are meeting now. I shall vote against this amendment for these reasons, reserving to myself the right to vote upon the original resolution as I shall deem proper whenever it may come up.

Mr. AXTELL offered the following amendment: That when this House of Delegates adjourns on Wednesday, the 3d of July, it shall adjourn to meet at the usual hour on Friday, the 5th of July.

Which was lost.

Mr. ALVORD offered the following amendment:

That this Convention adjourn at 11½ A. M. on Wednesday next until Monday evening, the 8th day of July next, at half-past 7 o'clock P. M.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—The members from the extreme part of the State cannot get here by Monday evening at half past 7 o'clock. If I start on Monday, it requires from my place more than twenty-four hours to get here, and I cannot, by any possibility, get here at the hour named in the resolution.

Mr. ALVORD.—I have no particular objection to saying Tuesday at 11 o'clock A. M.

Mr. RATHBUN.—I think that is no reason why we should not adjourn until Monday evening. The members who cannot get here by Monday afternoon will be able to reach here by the morning of the next day. I understand the objection to this amendment is that members cannot reach here, some of them by half-past seven in the evening. It is perfectly understood, I suppose, that when this Convention meets on Monday evening after the members return, that it meets in point of fact, merely to adjourn over until the

A. M., on Friday, next, until Tuesday, July 9th, at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Mr. SEAVER—I offer this amendment for the purpose of allowing members who reside in remote sections of the State to go to their homes. There are men here who cannot by any possible mode of conveyance reach their homes and return within the time prescribed by the amendment of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. I think this will commend itself to all members of the Convention.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Seaver, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. HAND offered the following amendment:

That the Convention adjourn on Tuesday next, the 2d day of July, at 11½ o'clock A. M., until Monday, July 8th, at 7½ P. M.

The question was put on the proposed amendment, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD—I do hope that we have passed the day of these long adjournments. This proposition is that the Convention shall adjourn from the day before the 4th of July until the following Monday. I do not think it is necessary we should adjourn for any longer time than until the Friday following. I do desire that this Convention should get at their work, and that the committees perfect their labors and bring their reports before this body at as early a day as possible. It is utterly impossible to get the committees to act unless the Convention shall continue in session. I, therefore, hope we shall not adjourn from Wednesday until Monday.

The question was then put on the amendment offered by Mr. Alvord, and it was declared adopted.

The question was then announced on the resolution of Mr. Van Campen, as amended on the motion of Mr. Alvord.

Mr. CONGER—I hope that this resolution will not prevail. I think the Convention owes something to its own sense of dignity and propriety. We have had three recesses under the law which has saved the per diem allowance of every member of the Convention, and of the clerks and officers. The object of the law was two-fold: to insure the Convention attending to its business so as to present a Constitution to the people at an early day for its approval, by providing that in case of a recess of more than three days, the per diem should be forfeited, and to give the members of the Convention an opportunity to adjourn when there was a necessity, and, at the same time, save the amount of that per diem to the general fund appropriated. Now, it seems to me, that if, with a view of adjourning to celebrate the national anniversary, we virtually say to the people that we will adjourn so as to save our per diem for three days, we will bring upon ourselves a great deal of reprobation—I will not say contempt. The recesses that we have already taken under the act has cost the State some $10,000, which has had to come out of this appropriation. Each day's session costs the State $960 for the members and probably from $75 to $100 in addition for the officers of the Convention. Now we cannot, with any sort of consistency, it seems to me, say that we will adjourn from Wednesday morning at half-past eleven o'clock, and go home and celebrate the 4th of July, when very few members of this Convention can get to their homes in time to celebrate the event. I hope, therefore, that the Convention will reconsider the last vote, and will adjourn in a manly, straightforward manner, return to their homes, celebrate the anniversary, and then return to do the work that is intrusted to them.

Mr. RATHBUN—I do not understand that that adjournment saves the per diem to members. I understand that an adjournment from Wednesday to Monday embraces four full days, and that the per diem, as a matter of course, will be lost to members. It seems to me that the gentleman [Mr. Conger] has made a mistake.

Mr. CONGER—The 4th of July is a dies non, and of course is not to be counted in the adjournment. If we adjourn on Wednesday, we will then have Friday, Saturday and Monday, which will be but three days' adjournment to be counted.

Mr. RATHBUN—I doubt very much whether the gentleman is right in reference to that provision. By the law, delegates are entitled to a per diem compensation for every day; but if the adjournment exceeds three days—it does not say legislative days—they receive no compensation for the time. Sunday is equally dies non as well as the 4th of July, and yet we are paid for Sunday and if we remain here, we will be paid for the 4th of July, though we may not be in session. By an adjournment from Wednesday until Monday we go over the three days, and of course it would exclude payment.

Mr. McDONALD—I offer an amendment, simply with the view of allowing every person to get home to be present at the celebration of the 4th of July, and to return in time to attend the sessions of the Convention.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Resolved, That this Convention, when it adjourns on Tuesday, July 2d, it adjourns to Tuesday, July 9th, at 11 o'clock.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. McDonald, and it was declared lost.

The question then recurred on the original resolution of Mr. Van Campen as amended, on the motion of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage be instructed to inquire as to the expediency of providing by constitutional amendment, as follows, viz.:

That the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide by law.

1. For an accurate enumeration to be made of all citizen females in this State above the age of 21 years.

2. For an election to be held as soon as practicable after the completion of such enumeration, at which election only citizen females above the age of 21 years shall be entitled to vote, upon the question "shall the right of suffrage be extended to females?" Yes or no. And that if the number of votes in the affirmative, cast at such election, shall be a majority of the whole number of citizen females shown by the enumeration aforesaid, then, and from that time forth, the right of suffrage shall be secure to all citizen females of this State, above the age of 21 years.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I call up for consideration the resolution offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], to return the communication of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund to that committee.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, made to the Convention, on the 19th inst., be respectfully returned to them, with the request that the information sought in the resolution of 11th inst. be communicated to the Convention at as early a day as possible.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I now offer the following substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be requested to prepare and communicate to this Convention a tabular statement, showing:

1. The original cost of the several canals of this State, including that of any enlargement or extension thereof.
2. The aggregate cost of each canal as aforesaid, including superintendence, repairs and legal interest on the cost of construction, up to the close of the last fiscal year.
3. The aggregate receipts or income from each canal, computed in like manner.
4. The net cost or profit of each canal up to the close of the last fiscal year.
5. The annual receipts or income of the State from each canal, with the annual cost of superintendence and repairs, respectively, of such canals up to the close of the last fiscal year.
6. Also a table which will show with how much each so called lateral canal should be credited for its contributions to the revenues which in the yearly official tables and reports are credited to the Erie canal.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The resolution which has just been read I offer as a substitute for the pending resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], as amended upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger], that the communication of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund be returned to them with a request that they furnish the information called for at as early a day as possible. The proposed substitute is the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], with the addition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and accepted by the mover; so that the proposition now stands as it was originally before the Convention, before it was amended upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], which amendment provided in substance that the information called for should be furnished unless it had been otherwise communicated. Sir, I desire to be possessed of precisely the information called for by the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and in the form asked for by that gentleman. There can be no difficulty in directing this inquiry to the Auditor of the Canal Department, for however much we might have been in doubt at the commencement of this discussion upon this subject as to what officer or officers were possessed of the information which we desire, the debate that has been had has brought out the fact that, as the law now stands, the Auditor of the Canal Department is in possession of all the information which we seek.

Mr. GREELEY—In order to save time and debate, I accept the substitute proposed by the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend].

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I am obliged to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], for his suggestion, but I desire to pursue the remarks I was making, not for the interest of that gentleman merely, but because there are other gentlemen upon this floor who may be called upon to vote upon this subject, and for that reason I will continue, I trust, without making myself burdensome to the Convention. By the statutes which have been referred to, the Auditor of the Canal Department has been given control over the records in his possession. He can furnish us with the information. I desire to pass this resolution without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], and adopted by the Convention, for this reason: certain members upon this floor, and I include myself among the number, would like to see this matter in a tabular statement, where it is all together and all digested. If the information is already communicated to this body, if it is already in print, or if it is already executed and ready to send here, it cannot impose any considerable labor upon the Auditor of the Canal Department to write it again and let us have it here in a shape that there can be no cavil about. I am particularly desirous because there has been much said about the subject of the canals, and I am unable to tell, in the present state of my information, whether it is correctly said or not. I think if we get this information we shall not be laboring under the difficulty which one gentleman seemed to labor under this morning, who said that it was a real grievance to the people of this State that the members of this body did not understand canal matters; and really we ought to understand them, and relieve the people of this State from the grievance.

Mr. HATCH—I offer an additional amendment.

Mr. FULLER—I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], accepted the substitute of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend].

Mr. GREELEY—I accepted it to save the time of the Convention.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment offered by Mr. Hatch as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be requested to communicate to this Convention, the amount of revenues of the Erie canal which has been appropriated for construction and maintenance of lateral canals, and also the amount of decrease in the revenues of the Erie canal, annually and in the aggregate, caused by the diversion of its business by either of the lateral canals with the interest thereon, to the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I am very glad that the resolution originally introduced by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has assumed the form it has. It was by my motion that the resolution was addressed to the Auditor of the Canal Department. The original mover of the resolution [Mr. Greeley] insisted that it should be addressed to the Comptroller. On the motion of the gentleman from Orleans [Mr. Church], my amendment was amended so as to call for the information upon the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. Now, sir, in vindication of my original motion, which has been the subject of incidental debate for some five days, I wish to say a few words, and especially in reply to the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger]. Sir, I maintained this, and I re-affirm it now, that, by law, the Auditor of the Canal Department is the only proper person to call upon for information in regard to the administration of the canals; that by law of the State he is the secretary of the Canal Board and of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund; that by law, he is placed in custody of the entire official and unofficial papers of the two Canal Boards; that by law, all the powers originally residing in the Comptroller of the State, so far as respects the canals, are vested in him; and that by law, also, the Commissioners of the Canal Fund and the Canal Board are obliged to report to the Auditor of the Canal Department; and further, that by law, the Auditor of the Canal Department is obliged to report to the Legislature as a State officer, and to make up and prepare and give the only information which can possibly or properly be presented in regard to the canals to the Legislature of this State. I desire, in vindication of that which has been criticised on this floor to read a brief section from the law itself, which my friend from Rockland [Mr. Conger] says has not been repealed. It says:

"The accounts of receipts and payment on account of the canals, and of the canal fund and debt, heretofore kept by the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, shall, on and after the first day of October next, be kept by the Auditor."

It also says:

"On and after the first day of January next, the Auditor of the Canal Department, in addition to his present powers and duties, shall be a member of the Contracting Board, created by chapter three hundred and twenty-nine of the Laws of eighteen hundred and fifty-four, in the place and stead of the Comptroller, and be invested with all the powers, and perform all the duties, and be subject to all the responsibilities now conferred by law upon the Comptroller as a member of such Contracting Board, and from thenceforward such Contracting Board shall consist of the Canal Commissioners, the Auditor of the Canal Department and the State Engineer and Surveyor."

And, finally, to meet the second proposition which was made by the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] in reply to the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Schoonmaker], it says:

"The annual report and statement required by the fourteenth section of the act, chapter, one hundred and sixty-two, of the Laws of eighteen hundred and forty-eight, to be made by the Auditor to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, shall hereafter be made to the Legislature, and shall embrace all the particulars heretofore required in the annual report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund."

Sir, enough in vindication of the original motion I made to the Convention. Now, let me say in regard to the resolution which has been moved by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], that if he will examine the second pamphlet which has been laid before us, he will, with very little labor—hardly five minutes—find the information given in the general and in the detail in regard to every canal in this State, its cost, the original expense of conducting it from its original working and establishment, until the present time. And, as I have said upon more than one occasion, we are imposing an herculean task upon the officers of this Convention, and upon the State officers, in compelling them to look up information which lies upon our table, if we will only take the trouble to read it.

Mr. PROSSER offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That in making up the accounts of the separate canals, the interest upon the cost, and upon the receipts and expenses, up to the close of the last fiscal year, shall be computed at the rate of five per cent compounded annually.

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment.

Mr. HATCH—It seems to me that the Secretary has omitted to read a resolution, which I introduced the other day, of inquiry, which was added to the resolution of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley]. I will offer it now as a new amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the proposed amendment of Mr. Hatch, as follows:

7. And also the amount of outstanding canal debt, and when due, and when the same would be paid, assuming, as a basis of calculation for the future revenues of the toll receipts, the revenue from the same source for the last seven years.

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment, but I trust that the Auditor will not be detained by these complicated calculations so long as to fail to give us the information we desire.

Mr. CONGER—I regret extremely sir, that the remarks I made the other day in regard to the proper functions of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund should have been so construed as to make it appear that the Auditor had no functions whatever under the existing laws. It is useless at this time to refer to that series of changes in the laws passed by the Legislature, which, originating in the dethronement of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, forced an enlargement policy on the State, and eventuated in the passage of the nine million law of 1851. It is a matter of historic record, which is not necessary to be introduced here at this time, more than for this allusion, that the dethronement at that time, undertaken under the law of 1848, by which the chief clerk of a department was made to supersede in functions the members of that department, carried with it all the necessary consequences of an attempt, if not to violate the Constitution, at least, to change its fair purport and meaning. Now, I showed, I think conclusively, the other day, that the law under which the Commissioners of the Canal Fund were to report to the Legislature, was not changed, and the only pretense that that law has been repealed is in the section that was added to the law of 1861, that the Auditor was to present the report to the Legislature directly, instead of presenting it to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. There is this difference between the report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund and the report of the Auditor, commonly known as the financial report: the Commissioners of the Canal Fund have the general charge and oversight of the whole subject; not merely that subdivision, which is known as the financial report of the Auditor but also the custody, control, management and recommendations in regard to the disposition of the canal funds. Now lest gentlemen may seem to think that I was led astray by a reminiscence of a quasi political revolution, I refer them to this, that when we first convened here, there were laid on our tables copies of a report of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, relative to the enlargement of the locks on the Erie and Oswego canals. There was a resolution of the Senate requiring them "to report to what extent the cost of enlarging the locks of the Erie and Oswego canals, on the plan and estimate submitted by the State Engineer and Surveyor, can be made a charge on the future revenues from the said canals, without interfering with the prior claims on the said revenues created by the Constitution." Therefore it will be seen that, although it is conceded that the Auditor, now no longer chief clerk, but the financial officer, is empowered by law to present statistical information to the Legislature, known as the financial report, the Senate of 1867, on the very question that is to engage the attention of this body, referred that subject to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund directly, irrespective of the functions of the Auditor of the Canal Department which had by successive laws been gradually increased until, I concede, it was doubtful whether the Auditor had charge of the canal funds, or the Commissioners themselves. I am not willing to seem to take the position of splitting hairs on this or any other question. I am perfectly willing that every reference made by this Convention for statistical information on single or individual subjects, connected with the canals, should go to the Auditor. But when there is any subject presented which directly or indirectly has reference to the subject of the proposed enlargement, then I wish the information to be obtained from the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and I quote for the gentlemen who opposed me on this ground, the precedent of the Senate, which passed the resolution in reference to this measure.

Mr. E. BROOKS—Let me say that by the law, the Canal Commissioners are obliged to report to the Auditor all the information in their possession, in regard to the administration of the canals.

Mr. CONGER—I would like to have the gentleman show me the section of the law.

Mr. E. BROOKS—It was cited by the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Schoonmaker], in his remarks the other day, in reading the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and I will read an extract from that decision again; but before I do so, allow me to say to the gentleman, that not only are the Canal Commissioners to report to the Auditor, but the Auditor has the power of removing every superintendent on the canal for cause, and that the Auditor of the Canal Department, alone, has the power to draw warrants.

Mr. CONGER—I am only speaking in reference to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and not of the canals.

Mr. E. BROOKS.—The Canal Commissioners are obliged to report to the Auditor.

Mr. CONGER—Does the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] mean to say that the Auditor has the power of removing the Commissioners of the Canal Fund?

Mr. E. BROOKS—No, but he has the power of removing canal superintendents.

Mr. CONGER—I shall probably fail to convince the gentleman of the valid distinction on this subject recognized by law and by the practice of the Legislature. That the Auditor has certain powers conferred upon him I do not deny. Will the gentleman maintain that these powers have been so accumulated in the Auditor's department that the Commissioners of the Canal Fund have no longer any constitutional power? Because, if they have no power to do anything under the Constitution, they virtually have been removed from office. But I contend that they have powers. What is the power vested in them as distinguished from the power vested in the Auditor of the Canal Department? I do not deny that the Auditor has certain powers under the law to make reports to the Legislature; but when we come to the Convention which is to revise the Constitution, we are acting under the Constitution, and are in a measure superior to all the laws passed by the Legislature on this subject. We have a right to recognize the original appointees under the Constitution of 1846, who are charged with the information we desire. But, as I have said before, I am willing to take this distinction, and ask the Auditor to give us the specific information on any one particular branch of the canal service. But when it comes to a series of propositions, which by their scope and meaning include a review of the whole subject of the canal funds and the management of the canals, I insist upon it, that by law and by practice, we should refer those questions to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. I have before me a statement of the whole progress of the law on this subject. I will not detain the Convention by reading it, but will allow it to be incorporated in the printed report of my remarks. If any one will take the trouble to examine the legislation from the Revised Statutes, down through the Laws of 1831, and the Laws of 1841, to the present time, I think he will not fail to arrive at the conclusion that there still exists between the functions of the Auditor and the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, a valid and essential distinction and difference. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks], supposes that we are concluded by the decision of the Court of Appeals. I endeavored to show very briefly, when speaking on this subject, that that decision was only in a case between the Auditor and the Comptroller, as to which was the financial officer of the canals, and had nothing to do with this subject. But I dislike very much to tire the Convention. I do not desire to vindicate my own position or opinion, but when it was so promptly and almost universally affirmed that I had mistaken the law and overlooked the amendment of 1861, I felt that I was bound, and that it was my duty to bring to the notice of the Convention the act of the Senate of 1867, by which they referred this question of enlargement which has to come before this Convention, to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund. If my position is now understood, I hope it will not be questioned again for I am willing to refer each specific information sought for from each canal to the Auditor. I did not object to the motion of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Beckwith], this morning when he wished to get information in regard to the Champlain canal. I am willing that every information asked for in reference to each one of these canals shall be got from the Auditor; but when it comes to a complicated series of propositions which has no other reference than to the matter which was referred to this Convention by the last Legislature, to wit, the subject of the enlargement of the canals, I think the information ought to come from the Commissioners of the Canal Fund.

The following is the statement alluded to by Mr. Conger in his remarks:

The whole administration of the canal fund was, by the Revised Statutes, and earlier, vested in the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, who were also directed to recommend to the Legislature all measures which they might deem proper for the improvement of the fund; and also to report to the Legislature at the opening of each session, the condition of the fund. 1 N. Y. Statutes at Large (Edmonds' ed.), 193; section 5 and others.

Under this provision of law the Commissioners were accustomed to make an annual report, which was known as their Financial Report.

Under section 27 of chapter 320 of the Laws of 1831, they were also accustomed to make another annual report, which was known as their Statistical Report.

By section 12 of chapter 288 of Laws of 1840, the Commissioners were authorized to appoint a chief clerk; which office was substituted for that of Second Deputy Comptroller; and this officer was also made chief clerk of the Canal Board.

By chapter 162 of the Laws of 1848, the office of Auditor was made, and that of chief clerk of the Canal Department abolished, and the Auditor was vested with all the powers and duties of the chief clerk of the Canal Department, and of the Comptroller in relation to the canals, except as a Commissioner of the Sinking Fund; and the Auditor was made Secretary to the Commissioners of the Canal Fund, and also the Canal Board.

By section 7 the form of the statistics on tolls and tonnage report was regulated, and it was required to be made direct to the Legislature.

By section 14 the Auditor was required to make a statement to the Commissioners, which was substantially their financial report; and this statement was required to accompany the annual report of the commissioners to the Legislature.

By chapter 177, of the Laws of 1861, the said statement of the Auditor was required to be made to the Legislature.

The books and papers pertaining to the duties of the Auditor, or to the duties of the commissioners, were required to be deposited in the Canal Department; and to be securely and safely kept by the Auditor; and the appointment of the clerks was transferred from the commissioners to the Auditor.

But there is no change in the laws originally prescribing the general powers and duties of the commissioners; nor is even the clause requiring an annual report of their doings repealed. The subsequent provisions requiring that report from their secretary may be construed to satisfy that requirement, on the theory that the Auditor in making it, acts in his capacity as their secretary. The books pertaining to their duties, though in his custody, are their books; and not only have they access to them and control of them for the purpose of discharging their duties, but their secretary must be deemed subject to their call for any information contained in those books which they may deem necessary for the performance of their duties.

The information called for by the Convention, on the motion of Mr. Greeley, is wholly distinct from the two annual reports, the duty of preparing which is by law specially imposed on the Auditor. It relates to the exact duties of the commissioners, in the fiscal administration of the Canal Funds; and calls for a statement of the fiscal results of these works from the beginning of the system, when the fund was placed under the management of the commissioners.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — Mr. President, I fully agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Conger], as to the complicated nature of the amendments that we are piling upon the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] who has, with the greatest readiness accepted everything which has been proposed. I would ask the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Hatch] if his amendment goes to the extent of asking the Auditor to compute the probable loss to the Erie canal, from competing lateral routes?

Mr. HATCH — The inquiry was made as to the amount of revenues or tolls, which the lateral canals had contributed to the Erie canal. I wanted both sides of the account, and to show how much money the Erie canal had contributed to the maintenance and cost of these lateral canals, and also the decrease in revenues by the diversion of business through these lateral canals.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — Then Mr. President, it is evident, that in the midst of such a labyrinth of inquiries the Auditor could not complete and furnish his answers before the first of September, by which time, whatever we may have to propose, should be placed before the people for their consideration, if we expect them to act with deliberation upon the questions presented for their review. Again, running through a long series of years, as these queries do, how is the Convention to act understandingly in regard to the answers that may be returned, unless the figures shall be reduced to the actual value of the currency dollar, from time to time, ranging as it has done from 100 cents to 35 or 70 cents,—its present rate. To do this—if the Auditor does not anticipate the dilemma in advance—the members of the Convention will have to take pen and paper, or slate and pencil and “cipher it out.” I have already alluded to this fact, when speaking a few days ago, of the apparent net canal revenues, which, as compared to those of twenty years since (some four millions in specie) were now, at the same amount in currency, in reality some $1,500,000, less, although many millions, have in the interim, been expended on the enlargement and improvement of most all of the canals. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. E. Brooks] has stated more than once, that all the information sought for in these resolutions, which have consumed so much of our time, is already before the Convention in one form or another. I think that but little good can come from all these inquiries, and though I should hesitate to move to lay any gentleman's resolution of inquiry on the table, yet I would suggest to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], who has already in several instances consented to a delay, that he should allow this resolution to be postponed for a time, or for another day at least.

Mr. GREELEY—No; I want the information in any way, and as soon as I can get it.

Mr. HITCHMAN—This question seems to me is so loaded down with propositions that I am fearful that the whole matter will go over to so late a date that it will be impossible to receive the information in time to act intelligently upon it. I would therefore move that a division of the vote be had, upon the questions, and that we first take the question upon the resolution presented by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend].

Mr. E. BROOKS—Believing that all the important information in regard to the matter, is contained in the pamphlet upon our tables, I move that the whole subject be laid upon the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks, and was declared lost.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the substitute offered by Mr. M. I. Townsend, and accepted by Mr. Greeley.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], to this fact—that interest is called for only on one side of the account, by his resolution. It calls for interest upon the cost of construction and not for interest upon receipts. I move to amend the third subdivision, by adding thereto the words “and legal interest thereon up to the close of the last fiscal year.”

Mr. GREELEY—I accept the amendment.

The question was then put on the substitute offered by Mr. Townsend, and accepted by Mr. Greeley as amended, and it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Hatch as follows:

7. And also the amount of outstanding canal debt, and when due, and when the same would be paid, assuming, as a basis of calculation for the future revenues of the toll receipts, the revenue from the same source for the last seven years.

Mr. HITCHMAN—I think that the subordinate propositions, Mr. President, might be put to vote together, and not separately.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I very much desire that this proposition may go unincumbered to the Auditor. I am entirely willing to vote for the propositions and amendments offered by gentlemen to this, but I would consider it a very great favor if they would put their propositions in the form of separate resolutions, as I think we will get an earlier answer to the inquiry contained in the original resolution than if the request was coupled with the other requests named.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Hatch, and it was declared adopted.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the remaining amendment proposed by Mr. Hatch as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be requested to communicate to this Convention, the amount of revenues of the Erie canal, which has been appropriated for construction and maintenance of lateral canals, and also, the amount of decrease in the revenues of the Erie canal annually, and in the aggregate, caused by the division of its business by either of the lateral canals, with the interest thereon, to the close of the fiscal year.

Also the amendment proposed by Mr. Prosser, as follows:

Resolved, That in making up the accounts of the separate canals, the interest upon the cost, and upon the receipts and expenses, up to the close of the last fiscal year, shall be computed at the rate of five per cent compounded annually.

The question was then put on the two amendments, and they were declared lost.

Mr. KINNEY offered the following amendment to be added to the last proposition:

“And that the Auditor be requested to report upon the several propositions of inquiry in their order, and as soon as each answer be completed.

The question was put on the amendment of Mr. Kinney, and it was declared adopted.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the substitute of Mr. Townsend, as amended by Mr. Greeley's resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I desire to call from the table a resolution offered by me yesterday, asking information from the State Engineer and Surveyor.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows.

Resolved, That the State Engineer and Surveyor be requested, at his earliest convenience, to furnish in a tabular form, from the reports of the railroad companies of the State, from the 30th day of September, 1850, to the 30th day of September, 1866, kinds in pursuance of section 31, of chapter 140 of the Laws of 1850, for the use of this House of Delegates, the total amount of freight in tons of 2,000 lbs. carried over each road, the number of tons carried one mile, with the amount of each kind of freight classified.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared adopted.

On motion of Mr. BERGEN, the Convention adjourned.

THURSDAY JUNE 27, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. H. N. Pohlman.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary.

Mr. HATCH — There were two resolutions presented by me yesterday, and as I understand it, they were both adopted. I do not understand from the reading of the journal that the second one was adopted.

The PRESIDENT — The Secretary will read the journal as it stands.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the portion specified, showing the second resolution to have been lost.

There being no further objection to the journal it was declared approved.

The PRESIDENT announced the assignment of the following reporters, to seats on the floor of the Convention.

REPORTERS. — G. W. Demers, J. Wesley Smith, J. F. Mines, Nathan Comstock, J. C. Fitzpatrick, Hiram Calkins, H. J. Hastings, Chas. E. Smith, Geo. W. Buil, A. Wilder, M. H. Northrup, A. G. Johnson, C. B. Martin.

Mr. SMITH — I have the honor to present for the consideration of the Convention, a memorial of the surviving veterans of 1812, through their representative and commandant, Gen. Van Rensselaer of this city. It prays for a constitutional provision, making it obligatory upon the Legislature to provide for the payment of certain claims for clothing and contingent expenses, incurred by them while in the service of the country during the war. It appears from the paper and the accompanying documents that in the month of April, 1812, Congress passed a law authorizing the President to call out the militia of this State and order them into service for six months, at a compensation of eight dollars a month, without any bounty or any allowance for clothing. A large proportion of those called out in this manner, were poor men, wholly dependent upon their daily labor for the support of themselves and families, and this pittance allowed by Congress was found wholly inadequate to their necessities; but serve they must, and serve they did, cheerfully and faithfully, eking out the means of subsistence for themselves and families, and providing for clothing and contingent expenses as best they could. Since the close of the war, the State through the Legislature has on several occasions recognized the existence and justice of these claims, and has adopted measures looking to their payment; but for causes which it is not necessary here to mention, these measures have failed to secure the objects proposed by them.

The PRESIDENT — Will the gentleman suspend a moment. Is the gentleman from Fulton, [Mr. Smith] stating the substance of the memorial?

Mr. SMITH — I am.

The PRESIDENT — The gentleman will proceed then.

Mr. SMITH — I will detain the Convention but a moment. In 1859, a law was passed appointing a commission, composed of the adjutant-general and inspector-general of the State, to audit these claims. That commission proceeded in the discharge of its duties, audited about 17,000 claims, and issued, in pursuance of the provisions of the act, certificates of indebtedness, which these claimants and their representatives now hold against the State. It is claimed by the memorialists that if the State could be sued in a court, the whole of these claims might be enforced, and it is thought that a sovereign State ought to do voluntarily and cheerfully, what an individual under similar obligations, could be compelled to do by process of law. These men, in the hour of our peril, bravely defended our soil and our property, and upheld the honor of our flag; we are to-day reaping the fruit of their toil and their sacrifices, and we cannot afford to do them injustice. Our opportunity, sir, will soon be lost. Of 63,000 only about 1500 remain, and the youngest of those has already filled up the measure of the allotted period of man's existence. Whether this is the proper body to afford the relief, is for the Convention to decide, but it seems to me under the circumstances it cannot do less than respectfully receive and consider their memorial. I move therefore its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State.

Mr. TUCKER — I wish to present two petitions of citizens of the State of New York, praying for an equal right of suffrage to both men and women.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. ANDREWS — I have a memorial of Mrs. C. B. Sedgwick, and seventy-two other petitioners, principally ladies, residents of Syracuse, praying that the Constitution of this State may be so amended, as to secure the right of suffrage to women as well as men, on equal terms. I ask that it may be received and referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. BURRILL — I have a communication, sir, from one of the justices of the Supreme Court, making suggestions in regard to the proposed amendments for the re-organization of the judiciary. I move it be received and referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT presented the following memorial.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the memorial as follows:

NEW YORK, JUNE 25, 1867.

Hon. WM. A. WHEELER, President of the Constitutional Convention:

Dear Sir—At a meeting of the 18th Assembly District Union Republican Association, of the city of New York, held on Monday evening, June 24, the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted, and ordered to be sent to you for presentation to the Convention.

Yours, respectfully,

C. PULLMAN, President.

GEO. F. COACHMAN, Secretary.

WHEREAS, One of the fundamental principles of our system of government is the right of men as individuals, to worship God in any form, or not at all, as they think proper, and

WHEREAS, Such a principle means that the people should not be taxed for the support of any religion or creed, and

WHEREAS, In violation of this principle, the Legislature and the common council of this city, have from time to time donated money from the public treasury for the benefit of particular sects and religions, therefore

Resolved, That this association respectfully request the Constitutional Convention now in session at Albany, to have a provision inserted in the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature or any public body from donating any of the public property for the benefit, directly or indirectly, of any creed or religious sect.

The PRESIDENT—If there is no objection this will be referred to the Committee on Charities and Charitable Institutions.

Mr. DEVELIN—Mr. President:—Is that a proper reference for the memorial? Ought it not go to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will entertain any motion for the reference of the memorial.

Mr. DEVELIN—I make that motion, that it be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Develin, and it was declared to be carried.

Mr. PAIGE—I have in my hand a communication, requesting a reference to the appropriate committee, with regard to the expediency of amending the Constitution so as to require the general and local officers elected, or appointed to any office in the State, to take an oath, a copy of which accompanies the communication. This is properly referable to several Committees, but I move its reference to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the Qualification to hold Office.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND called for the reading of the memorial.

Mr. PAIGE—It is not exactly in the nature of a memorial, but is a communication addressed to me, containing the form of an oath.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the communication, which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights, made the following report:

The Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights, having had under consideration the several provisions of the same, as contained in the present Constitution, respectfully report:

That, in the opinion of the Committee, section 9 of article 1, reading as follows: "The assent of two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature, shall be requisite to every bill appropriating the public moneys or property for local or private purposes;" and all that part of section 10 of said article reading as follows: "nor shall any divorce be granted otherwise than by due judicial proceedings, nor shall any lottery hereafter be authorized, or any sale of lottery tickets allowed within this State," do not properly belong to the subject which has been referred to them.

They therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of those provisions, and that the same, together with so much of the resolution of Mr. Bickford, adopted June 19, 1867, as relates to section 9, be referred to Committee No. 3, "on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, except as otherwise referred."

And, inasmuch as a standing committee has been provided [No. 22], "on the relations of the State to the Indians residing therein," and the report of the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of inquiry in regard to their numbers, lands, etc., has been referred to that committee, it is also the opinion of this committee, that section 16 of said article more appropriately belongs to, and may be considered by that committee.

This committee therefore respectfully ask that they may be discharged from the further consideration of said section 6, and that the same may be referred to the Committee No. 22, "on the relation of the State to the Indians residing therein."

By order of the Committee.

GEO. T. SPENCER.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Spencer], that under rule 16, a portion of this report will necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole, and that the question will have to be divided, being first taken on the first part of the report.

Mr. SPENCER—I have no objection to that, sir.

The PRESIDENT—The first part of the report will be referred to the Committee of the Whole, and the question is upon agreeing to the remainder of the report of the committee.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I hope, sir, it will all go to the Committee of the Whole. This section in reference to the Indians has always been incorporated in the Bill of Rights.

Mr. SPENCER—The object of this report is to have various subjects which are before the Convention so classified and so considered by each appropriate committee, that no one committee, will be under the necessity of reporting something which has been considered and reported upon by another committee.

Mr. CONGER—May I ask the President what rule this is?

The PRESIDENT—Rule 16 provides that all reports embracing proposals for constitutional alterations, shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONGER—I would respectfully suggest that this is a resolution to refer a subject, not on its merits, but simply to refer it to another committee.

Mr. SPENCER—The report asks that this committee be discharged from the further consideration of these provisions named, and that they be referred to the appropriate committees.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair misunderstood it, by simply hearing a portion.

The question was then put upon agreeing to the report of the committee, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FOWLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the appropriate committee to report upon the expediency of an amendment to the Constitution providing that all local legislation of counties be vested in their respective boards of supervisors—that each town be entitled to one member of such board, and to an additional member for each and every 2,500 of population of such town over and above 2,000.

That such committee further report upon the propriety of prohibiting counties, towns and villages from incurring pecuniary obligations, raising of moneys and making donations for charitable or religious objects, or for any other purpose, other than those which legitimately pertain to their economical government.

Mr. BICKFORD—The gentleman who has just offered the resolution, did not specify what committee it should be referred to. I move its reference to the Committee on Towns and Counties.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Towns and Counties.

Mr. GRANT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 4 to consider the expediency of withholding, by constitutional provisions, the right of suffrage from deserters of the army and navy, including deserters from conscription as well as from actual service.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee [No. 20] on Industrial Interests, etc., are instructed to examine and report to this body upon the propriety of providing by constitutional provision that the measure of capacity or quantity be based upon weight wherever practicable, and that the expansions and subdivisions of such units of weight shall be in the ratio of decimals.

Which was referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

Mr. ROBERTSON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the consideration of so much of the matter referred to them by a resolution passed on the 24th instant as relates to the limitation and regulation of claims against the State, and that such matter be referred to Committee No. 3, upon the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Which was adopted.

Mr. BELL—I call for the consideration of a resolution offered by me on Friday, calling on the Commissioners of the Land Office for information.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be respectfully requested to report to this Convention, as soon as practicable, the following particulars in regard to the "Salt Reservations" of the State.

1. The quantity of land originally set apart by the State for the purpose of manufacturing salt.

2. The quantity of land now owned by the State and devoted to that object.

3. The towns and counties in which said lands are located, and the number of acres in each locality.

4. The present value of such lands, if the same can be readily ascertained, or the nearest possible approximate value thereof.

5. The cost and present value of the salt wells, structures and improvements thereto, made and owned by the State.

6. The probable value of the salines connected therewith.

7. The yearly expense to the State for the care and management of the same; including new structures, repairs, superintendence, etc.

8. The yearly revenues received therefrom.

Mr. BELL—The committee on that subject are of the opinion that further information should be required; I therefore ask that the resolution be amended as I now propose.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment proposed, as follows:

Add thereto: 9th. The cost of draining lands, by lowering the outlet of Onondaga Lake. The whole quantity of land thus reclaimed, showing the number of acres which inured to the State also to individuals by name.

10. The quantity of lands exchanged for marsh or reclaimed lands, and the value thereof.

11. The amount of money paid, and to whom paid by the State to owners of solar salt works, on lands thus exchanged, for damages to such works, and for removing the same.

12. The names of parties now holding grants and leases from the State for the use of lands for the manufacturers of solar salt. The report to state in detail the lands bought, sold and exchanged on the reservations since 1846; the amount of money received and paid therefor, and for damages or otherwise thereon.

The PRESIDENT—No action having been taken on the resolution it will be amended as requested.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Bell as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. L. W. RUSSELL offered the following resolution for reference:

Resolved, That the legislative power be vested in a Senate and an Assembly. Senators shall hold office four years, members of Assembly one year.

Each county shall elect two members of Assembly, and one additional member for each 7,500 of its electors; provided, that the Assembly shall not contain more than 225 members.

The Senate shall be composed of forty Senators, ten of whom shall be elected each year by the electors of the whole State, one from each of the ten Senatorial districts into which the State shall be divided. The salary of Senators and members of the Assembly shall be $1,000 per annum, in lieu of all fees and perquisites.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature.

Mr. COLAHAN—I move to call up the resolution which I offered on the 25th in relation to accidents on railroads.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

WHEREAS, Numerous accidents have occurred of late years upon the railroads and steamboats of this State, resulting invariably in great loss of life, and

WHEREAS, Such accidents have in most instances occurred through the negligence or ignorance of the corporations or companies controlling said railroads and steamboats, and for the reason of the proven inability of the public to receive redress or security from the Legislature of this State, and of their ineffectiveness of enforcing the civil remedy, now given by statute against such monetarily powerful and politically influential corporations.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to consider and devise some action to be had by this body which will hold said corporation or companies to a more strict accountability for their acts, and make them directly amenable for all losses of life and limb sustained by individuals through their neglect or ignorance—action that will make them mindful of their responsibilities and the obligations they are under to the public at large.

Also, that this committee be empowered and directed to ascertain from the proper sources of information, the number of accidents that have occurred, and the number of losses to life and limb for the ten years last past, and report the same to this Convention.

Mr. COLAHAN—Mr. President: The vital importance of the subject of this resolution must be felt by every member of this Convention. Thus far we have had under consideration a variety of propositions for the protection of property, for the full enjoyment of natural rights, for the extension of political privileges, for the greater development of our republican form of government and for the means of better securing the blessings of this government to the people at large. Now sir, I propose in this resolution a subject of still greater importance, one of prior value to that of property and possessions—the better security of life itself. The experience of every observer of daily occurrences for years past, must have made him familiar with the horrible record of railroad and steamboat casualties. The large headings of newspapers, announcing the fact of “another boiler explosion,” “another collision of steam cars turning a curve,” or “running off time,” an upsetting of the train over an embankment, or of dropping through a bridge; inseparably accompanied with the further announcement of —“Serious loss of life”—have perceptibly grown small, not because of the less appreciation of life, but because of the fact of the constant recurrence of such scenes and accidents, and of its familiarizing effect upon the public itself.

These institutions are in the control of the opulent and influential, managed by those who have much to say in the management of the political destinies of this State, those who sing loudest for the public prosperity, and who for these reasons are almost omnipotent in confronting any legislative action that might subject such corporations or companies to a more strict accountability for their action or reduce to any extent the per centum of their dividends. To-day, while boards of directors are calculating their net profits, humanity is being jerked out of existence and into eternity. While dividends are being raised to advance the sale of stocks, or lowered for the purpose of purchasing in, human beings are being blown into open space or sunk in a watery grave. True, a civil remedy is provided, but what is its effect? No individual can successfully carry on litigation with one of these corporations, or if he does, he often finds himself sick, disgusted and penniless long before the determination of such litigation. Even when successful, the damages are limited to the sum of $5,000, so that these corporations and companies may maim and kill ad infinitum, for the cheap cost of $5,000 per head. There may be some cases of inevitable accident, but I think the facts will bear me out when I say that four-fifths of these accidents can be traced to the want of skill or carelessness in management, and often to a complete disregard for the security of life itself. Now, sir, I trust that this Convention will not overlook this subject, and answer that it is a matter of legislative business, for the Legislature has repeatedly refused to give a just and secure remedy. It is a subject that commends itself to the earnest consideration of every member present, and one upon which the public will criticize our action probably as closely as upon that of any other subject before this body.

Mr. SILVESTER—I move that that resolution be referred to Committee No. 14, on Corporations other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance.

Mr. COLAHAN—I accept the proposed reference.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Silvester, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. POND—I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote yesterday, by which the resolution introduced by me yesterday, in reference to holding the sessions of this Convention at Saratoga, was indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT—The motion will lie on the table under the rule.

Mr. BURRILL offered the following resolution, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights.

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights, to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution, as to provide that on trials by courts martial the accused shall be entitled to testify on his own behalf, and shall also be entitled to appear and defend by counsel.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. JARVIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Judiciary Committee to consider the propriety of organizing the Court of Appeals upon the following basis:

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STRONG—I offer a resolution to provide for the changing of one of our rules.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman it cannot be received except on one day's notice under the rule.

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 5, to consider the propriety and expediency of limiting the veto power to questions of constitutionality, exclusively.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, etc.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to Committee No. 3, on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, to inquire into the expediency of providing in the Constitution that no bill shall be sent from one branch of the Legislature to the other, within ten days prior to the final adjournment.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. GROSS offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, At the last annual session of the General Court of Massachusetts, before a joint committee, the question of license and prohibition has undergone a thorough examination, and the advocates on either side have endeavored to place the most ample material on the subject before the Legislature of their State; therefore

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Convention be instructed to apply to the State Librarian, or to the Clerk of the General Court of Massachusetts, for several copies of the printed debates on the above named subject for the use of each, the Committee on Legislative Powers and Duties, the Committee on Cities, and the Special Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Canals to inquire into the propriety and expediency of providing for the imposition and collection of tolls on railroads running parallel to the Erie canal in the State, during the season of navigation in each year, in aid of the canal revenues, and as a measure of justice to the people of the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. TUCKER offered the following resolution and moved its reference to the Committee on Contingent Expenses:

Resolved, That the same amount of stationery given to the members of the Convention, be allowed to those reporters of the Convention appointed by the President under the rules governing this body.

Which was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. E. BROOKS offered the following resolution, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Canals.

Resolved, That the Committee on Canals be directed to examine into and report upon the expediency of providing an amendment to the Constitution for the leasing for a term of years the Champlain canal, provided that leases can be so made as to secure increased revenue for the State, a reduction of tolls, and a speedier as well as cheaper transit of goods.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. BELL—I call for the consideration of the resolution offered by me on Tuesday, calling for information in relation to the manufacture of salt.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of the Onondaga Salt Springs be respectfully requested to furnish, for the use of this Convention, the following information in regard to the salt springs and the manufacture of salt:

1. The whole number of salt wells on the "reservation."

2. The number owned and now in use by the State.

3. The quantity of salt, in bushels of 56 lbs. each, said wells are capable of producing annually.

4. The least, greatest and average quantity of salt of the different kinds produced therefrom.

5. The annual ratio of increase and diminution of production.

6. The principal causes which operate to produce an increase or diminution in the yearly production of salt.

7. The facilities, such as wells, pumps, reservoirs, aqueducts, machinery, labor or otherwise, which the State furnishes in the manufacture of salt, showing the share of the cost per barrel borne by the State in proportion to the whole expense thereof.

8. The minimum, maximum and average price at which salt has been sold at the "works" during the last twenty years.

9. The present price of salt.

10. The whole number of fine salt manufactories or blocks, and the capacity and value thereof, now on the reservation, and by whom owned.

11. The number of coarse or solar salt vats or covers, by whom owned, and the value thereof.

12. The quantity of salt lands leased, to whom, at what rent, and for what term of time.

Mr. BELL—I wish to add an amendment to the resolution.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Amend resolution by adding thereto as follows:

13. The amount of money received for duties on coarse or solar salt since 1845.

14. The cost to the State, or its pro rata share thereof, for expenses incurred in the manufacture of coarse or solar salt during the same period.

There being no objection, it was amended as requested.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Bell as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM—At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Pardons, I ask to take from the table the resolution offered by me on the 18th.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Governor of the State be requested to communicate to this Convention as soon as practicable, a list containing the number of the applications made to the Executive for pardon during the years 1864, 1865 and 1866—the number of such applications granted, with the nature of the offenses, in classes.

Mr. LAPHAM—At the suggestion of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris], made the other day, I find that in part 2 of the Manual, which has been laid upon my table since the resolution was offered, part of the information sought in that resolution is already given. I ask, therefore, to substitute the following:

The SECRETARY read the proposed substitute as follows:

Resolved, That the Governor of the State be requested to communicate to this body, as soon as practicable, a list containing the number of applications for pardons from 1847 to 1866, inclusive, stating the nature of the offenses in classes.

The question was then put on the original resolution of Mr. Lapham, as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LAPHAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pardons be requested to inquire into the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to provide that all applications for pardons shall be made to the officer or board having charge of State prisons, whose decision, if adverse to the granting of a pardon, shall dispose of the same; but in case a pardon shall be recommended, the decision shall be referred to the Governor for final action, who may grant or refuse the same.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Pardoning Power.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature [No. 3] be instructed to inquire as to the expediency of restricting the Legislature in the enactment of laws, as follows:

No law shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in its title; but if any subject embraced in an act, be not expressed in its title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as is not so expressed. This clause shall not be construed to apply to appropriation bills.

No law shall be revised or amended by any reference to its title, but the act revised, or the section amended, shall be re-enacted and published at length.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. MERRITT—I would like to ask for information as to the condition of the motion made by the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond]. If I understand the rule, the motion does not go over as a matter of course. If it is desired by the friends of an adjournment to consider it, it is very proper that we should consider it now under Rule 28.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understood the gentleman from Saratoga [Mr. Pond], to ask that it lie upon the table.

Mr. POND—That it lie upon the table.

Mr. MERRITT—I object.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds the objection should have been made at the time.

On motion of Mr. LARREMORE, the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, JUNE 28, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock, A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. DEXTER E. CLAPP.

The journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary.

Mr. BICKFORD—The resolution which was offered by the gentleman from Madison [Mr. Fowler], yesterday, was referred on my motion, according to the journal to the Committee on Towns and Counties; it should be, sir, the Committee on Town and County Officers.

Mr. FOWLER—The resolution was properly referred to the Committee on Towns, Counties and Villages. The object of the resolution was in reference to the powers and duties of Boards of Supervisors and the Committee on Towns, Counties, and Villages have jurisdiction over the organization and powers of Boards of Supervisors. I think the resolution was properly referred.

The PRESIDENT—The motion of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] to refer, prevailed. Does the gentleman accept the reference suggested by the gentleman from Madison [Mr. Fowler]?

Mr. BICKFORD—I am not very particular to which committee it should go, but I thought it was properly referable to Committee No. 7.

The PRESIDENT—The motion to refer having prevailed, cannot be changed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER—I was going to suggest that on a motion to correct the journal, we could not change a reference of a resolution to any certain committee.

The journal was corrected, and there being no further objection thereto it was declared approved.

Mr. CURTIS—I was not in my place yesterday when the journal was read, but I observed by the paper published in the evening, which is to be the final record of the proceedings of this Convention, that the name which headed the petition I had the honor to present, was incorrectly printed, and as I wish the cause for which that lady has labored should have the benefit of her distinguished name, I ask that the Secretary will change the name to Mrs. Daniel Cady, of Johnstown, in this State.

The PRESIDENT announced the following as the Select Committee on Suppressing Official Corruption by means of constitutional provisions: Messrs. Opdyke, Flagler, Tilden, M. I. Townsend and Loew.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT presented the petition of Mrs. Eliza Osborn and twenty-two others, men and women, of Auburn, asking for suffrage for women.

The PRESIDENT presented a memorial from McDorough Bucklin, citizen, on the subject of the finances of the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State.

Mr. GRAVES—I have the pleasure of presenting two memorials, one from Schoharie county, containing the names of 204 men and women, asking that a provision be incorporated in the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. The second is the petition of Lucia Humphrey and thirty others, asking for an amendment to provide for equal suffrage.

The first petition was referred to the Select Committee on the subject of adulterated liquors, and the second, to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. STRONG—I give the following notice:

That on to-morrow or some subsequent day, I will propose an amendment to the rules as follows:

That no amendment to the Constitution shall be adopted except upon the affirmative vote of a majority of all the delegates elected to this Convention.

Mr. GREELEY from the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to hold Office submitted the following report:

Your committee, having given careful attention to the subject referred to them, have prepared as a substitute for Article II. of the present Constitution the following:

ARTICLE —.

SEC. 1. Every man of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding an election, and for the last thirty days a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the election district where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election, in said district, and not elsewhere, for all officers elected by the people;

Provided, That idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship, felons and persons convicted of bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights, shall not be entitled to vote. No person who shall at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall vote at any election. No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer to pay, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and, upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm before such inspectors that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid nor offered to pay, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at such election. Laws may be passed excluding from voting at an election every person, who shall have made, or who shall be interested in, a bet or wager depending upon the result thereof.

§ 2. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State, of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while kept in any almshouse or other asylum, at the public expense, nor while confined in any public prison. And the Legislature shall prescribe the manner in which electors absent from their homes in time of war, in the actual military or naval service of this State, or of the United States, may vote, and shall provide for the canvass and return of their votes.

§ 3. Laws shall be made for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established. And the Legislature shall provide that a register of all citizens entitled to the right of suffrage in each election district shall be made and completed at least six days before any election; and no person shall vote at such election who shall not have been registered according to law; but such laws shall be uniform in their requirements throughout the State.

§ 4. All elections by the citizens shall be by ballot, except for such town officers as may by law be directed to be otherwise chosen.

§ 5. No person who is not, at the time of taking the oath of office, an elector, shall hold any office under this Constitution. All officers shall, before they enter on the duties of their respective offices, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of New York; and that I will faithfully discharge the duties of (the office he is to hold) according to the best of my ability."

EXPLANATIONS.

It will be seen that the existing article has been retained by us in substance, and that the qualifications of a legal voter proposed by us be:

1. Adult rational manhood.
2. Citizenship of the United States of not less than thirty days' standing.

3. Residence in the State for the year preceding.

4. Residence in the election district for the last thirty days.

5. Freedom from crime.

6. Exemption from dependence on others through pauperism or guardianship.

The material changes we recommend are these,

1st. Strike out all discriminations based on color.

Slavery, the vital source and only plausible ground of such invidious discrimination, being dead, not only in this State, but throughout the Union, as it is soon to be, we trust, throughout this hemisphere, we can imagine no tolerable excuse for perpetuating the existing proscription. Whites and blacks are required to render like obedience to our laws, and are punished in like measure for their violation. Whites and blacks were indiscriminately drafted and held to service to fill our State's quotas in the war whereby the Republic was saved from disruption. We trust that we are henceforth to deal with men according to their conduct, without regard to their color. If so, the fact should be embodied in the Constitution.

We ask you to abolish the present requirement of four months' residence in a county as a prerequisite to voting. This exaction bears hardly on such residents of cities as spend their summer mainly in the country, and cannot afford to maintain a double residence. Thousands of intelligent and patriotic young mechanics, employed as carpenters, bricklayers, painters, plumbers, gas-fitters, etc., by masters located in our great cities, are sent out to work in neighboring counties for periods over which they have no control, and in November find their right to vote anywhere questionable, if not invalid. Hundreds of Methodist and other clergymen who are assigned to new charges in summer, find themselves disfranchised when our State election comes around. Under circumstances which impel doubt as to the right of a citizen to vote, the conscientious refrain, while the unscrupulous insist. We hold it wise to abolish a requirement which debars thousands of capable and worthy citizens, while it is a constant incitement to distortion or suppression of truth, to dissimulation and perjury.

At present, a resident in any county for four months is allowed to vote at the poll of any district wherein he actually resides on the day of election, though he may be a total stranger in that district, and does not pretend to have resided in it two days, only he must vote to fill an office he could not have voted to fill before his change of residence. But how are inspectors to know the contents of his folded ballot? And how are frauds to be prevented in districts where the preponderance of one party is overwhelming? It seems advisable to your committee to require an absolute residence by the voter of thirty days in the district where he tenders his ballot. This will give time for proper scrutiny, and will, when accompanied by an efficient registry, afford a substantial barrier against fraud. And the cases must be few indeed where the requirement of a thirty days' residence before voting will work individual hardship or affect the result of an important election.

Our present Constitution requires that naturalization shall precede voting by at least ten days; a memorial referred to us asks that this interval be extended to sixty days. We have fixed on thirty days as the proper time. We would stop the hunting out and dragging up before courts of indifferent and often reluctant immigrants in order to crowd them into citizenship, in order to affect by their votes the result of a pending election. This is the object of the present requirement of ten days' interval; and it will be far more completely accomplished by extending the prescribed term to thirty days. It is well, moreover, that the terms of citizenship and residence in the election district should be identical, so as to avoid complexity and possible misapprehension. Should we extend the interval between naturalization and voting to sixty days, the change would be inveighed against as impelled by a spirit of hostility to adopted citizens, or by a desire to impede naturalization. We trust the Convention will assent to our proposition.

As to disfranchisement of criminals and law-breakers, what we propose is very nearly identical with what is now prescribed, partly by the Constitution, partly by statute. It has seemed to us advisable to make the qualifications of voters as specific and unambiguous as possible, and to fix them, so far as may be, in the Constitution.

We propose that public paupers shall not be voters. We hold that to allow the inmates of almshouses, subsisting upon the charity of the public, to vote, is to accord an excessive influence and power over the results of our elections to the keepers of those establishments, whose retention in office is often at stake, each of whom can appeal with effect to his boarders not to vote him out of house and home. The end is now awkwardly contemplated in the provision that no pauper shall gain or lose a residence by reason of his stay in an almshouse; but it is evaded by sending the paupers, under watchful keepers, just prior to an important election, to the towns or wards whence they came, there to be registered and vote, when they are welcomed back to their old haunts as patriots who have been absent in their country's and their keeper's service. Specific disfranchisement will add to the wholesome horror of pauperism now cherished by most Americans, and there seems to be no good reason for allowing paupers to govern by their votes the policy of our country and State, and at the same time enabling them to supersede a keeper who may have been so cruel as to require the able-bodied among them to work. At all events, let this matter be dealt with frankly.

Having thus briefly set forth the considerations which seem to us decisive in favor of the few and moderate changes proposed above, we proceed to indicate our controlling reasons for declining to recommend other and, in some respects, more important innovations.

Your committee does not recommend an extension of the elective franchise to women. However defensible in theory, we are satisfied that public sentiment does not demand, and would not sustain, an innovation so revolutionary and sweeping, so openly at war with a distribution of duties and functions between the sexes as venerable and pervading as government itself, and involving transformations so radical in social and domestic life. Should we prove to be in error on this head, the Convention may overrule us by changing a few words in the first section of our proposed article.

Nor have we seen fit to propose the enfranchisement of boys above the age of eighteen years. The current of ideas and usages in our day, but especially in this country, seems already to set quite too strongly in favor of the relaxation, if not total overthrow of parental authority, especially over half-grown boys. With the sincerest good will for the class in question, we submit that they may spend the hours which they can spare from their labors and their lessons more usefully and profitably in mastering the wisdom of the sages and philosophers who have elucidated the science of government, than in attendance on midnight caucuses or in wrangling around the polls.

The proposition that a tax should be assessed on and collected from voters, is commended, like some others by plausible analogies. The rightful and intimate connection between taxation and Representation was a potent watchword of our Revolutionary fathers; yet we cannot ignore the fact that the Constitution of 1821 having like its predecessors, embodied this principle, an amendment striking out this qualification and thus establishing manhood suffrage, was adopted by the Legislature of 1825, and ratified by an overwhelming popular vote in 1826; yeas, 127,077; nays, 3,215. We do not feel called upon to appeal from their judgment.

Nor have we chosen to adopt any of the schemes of disfranchising illiterate persons which have been referred to us. We freely admit that ignorance is a public evil and peril, as well as a personal misfortune, and we are ready to march abreast with the foremost in limiting its baleful influence. But men's relative capacity is not absolutely measured by their literary acquirements; and the State requires the illiterate, equally with others, to be taxed for her support, and to shed their blood in her defense. We prefer that she shall persist in her noble efforts to instruct and enlighten all her sons by means less invidious and more genial than disfranchisement. Were there no other consideration impelling to this decision, we should rest on and defer to the forcible truths, that ability to read and write is not absolute, but comparative; that inspectors of election are fallible and swayed by like passions with other men—and that they might be tempted, in an exciting and closely contested election, to regard with a partial fondness, almost parental, the literary acquirements of those claimants of the franchise who were notoriously desirous of voting the ticket of those inspectors' own party, while applying a far sterner and more critical rule to those who should proffer the opposite ballots.

Our present Constitution authorizes the Legislature to pass laws designed to ascertain, by proper proofs, the persons entitled to exercise the right of suffrage. We recommend that those laws shall provide for a registration of all the legal voters, to be completed at least six days before each State election, and that none other than registered electors shall vote. Your committee are confident that the experience of our State and of the civilized world, fully justifies these requirements. Unless the ballot-box is to be regarded and treated as a spittoon, no person should be allowed to vote whose right to do so is not fully ascertained and unquestionable. In a rural neighborhood, where every one who approaches the ballot-box is known to dozens of either party, the frauds of unregistered voting may be mainly confined to those districts where the ascendancy of one party is practically unchecked; but in any densely peopled districts where hundreds offer to vote who are known only to their few cronies, the case is totally different. Not to register the names of the voters, so as to give time for deliberate and general scrutiny, not merely by the few who may chance to be present when a particular vote is tendered, is to stimulate knavery and offer a premium on fraud. It is to proclaim the right of suffrage worthless and proffer to each vagrant or felon half a dozen votes at every election which he may condescend to patronize. To uphold a registration of deeds, yet oppose a registration of voters, is virtually to assert a higher value, a more precious importance in our lands than in our liberties. Doubtless some frauds will be committed where suffrage is so nearly universal, no matter what safeguards may be thrown around the elective franchise; but to maintain that registration, while it does afford protection to the titles whereby we hold our lands, will give none to our right of suffrage is to defy reason and insult our common sense. Your committee would urge that this precious right, so fundamental to all others, be carefully shielded from corruption, and that the main safeguards against its abuse should not be left to unstable and fluctuating statutes, but should be firmly imbedded in the Constitution.

Your committee, having thus fulfilled the duty imposed on them, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorials referred to them, and that these, with this report, be committed to a Committee of the Whole.

ALBANY, June 28th, 1867.

HORACE GREELEY,
Chairman,
LESLIE W. RUSSELL,
WM. H. MERRILL,
GEO. WILLIAMS.

Mr. J. BROOKS—Before the question is put upon the printing of this report, I would like to ask one or two questions.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Brooks], that the report will be printed under the rules.

Mr. CASSIDY, from the same committee, submitted a minority report, as follows:

The undersigned, while cordially concurring in many of the objects sought to be accomplished by the majority of the committee of which they are members, differ as to several of the conclusions reached by them. The undersigned would prefer to preserve, as far as possible, the language of the existing Constitution, on the subject of the elective franchise, to which usage and the decisions of the courts have given definite interpretations. They would prefer, also, to retain most of the provisions of the present article in regard to the pre-requisites of residence, etc., and especially that which exacts of a naturalized citizen that he shall have perfected his citizenship ten days before election, instead of requiring, as the article proposed by the committee does, a term of thirty days.

The inevitable effect of the change is to deprive of their votes, in the elections of 1868 and 1869, all that numerous class, who on the faith of existing regulations, may have declared their purpose to become citizens, on or about the tenth day, antecedent to the elections of 1866 and 1867, and who expected to perfect their citizenship in the prescribed two years from that date. If the change shall thus operate to the disfranchisement of many thousand citizens, in two important elections, one of which involves a contest for the Presidency of these United States, that injustice will more than counterbalance any supposed good to be attained by the change. The ten days interposed by the Constitution of 1846 give ample time for the inspection of the registry, and of the rolls of the courts; and afford all the opportunity that either party may need to take measures against the parties to a fraud. Let us not commence the work of reforming our Constitution by practically disfranchising so large a class of our most useful citizens.

The provision which makes the giving or the taking of a bribe a ground of challenge and a disqualification to vote, though it may exclude many from the suffrage, is liable to no such objection. It aims at a great and growing evil and it strikes only at the criminal. Corruption is the leprosy of political society, and the taint is infectious. The venality of the elector is the source of the corruption of the official. The representative who secures his seat by the expenditure of money only reimburses himself for his outlay, when he sells his vote or barters his legislative influence. No penal enactment has yet sufficed to check this evil; but in making it a ground of challenge at the polls, we call the vigilance of parties to our aid; diminish their temptation to corrupt practices; and find in their mutual rivalries the machinery of a self-executing law.

While the undersigned believe that all registry laws are expensive, vexatious and onerous, more often depriving the honest voter of a right than closing the opportunity of fraud against a dishonest one, and while the history of political contests, shows that they have served, as the agency for many of the great conspiracies against the elective franchise; yet they regard the provision of the Committee "that all such laws shall be uniform in their requirements in every part of the State," as a compensation for many of the evils of the system, and a most valuable safeguard against abuse. It will effectually prevent the Legislature from imposing restrictions upon one community and awarding license to another; and we shall no longer have to endure the existence of three or four separate systems of election imposed on different parts of the State by the caprice or jealousy of sectional majorities. If a registration of voters is necessary before election, let every citizen be made to conform to its requirements. The law will be more likely to be respected by all when it is equal in its requirements in regard to all.

As respects the extension of suffrage to colored the same as to white citizens of the State, the undersigned submit that if the regeneration of political society is to be sought in the incorporation of this element into the constituency, it must be done by the direct and explicit vote of the electors. We are foreclosed from any other course by the repeated action of the State. In 1846 this question was submitted in a separate article to be voted on, at the same time with the Constitution itself; and was negatived by a vote of 223,884 to 85,306. It was again submitted in 1850, and was again defeated by a vote of 337,994 to 197,503. A similar submission was provided by a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of 1859, which, by the neglect of the State officers to provide for its publication, was defeated; but its fate may fairly be regarded as further evidence of the indifference of the public toward a change.

The undersigned are of opinion that the Convention will depart from its representative character if, after these repeated manifestations of the popular will, it should enact this extension of the suffrage without such a separate submission. It would be unfair to the people to declare: that, whereas, they have again and again refused to accept this change, therefore we will incorporate it into the Constitution and compel them either to reject that instrument, or to accept this measure. If the reform is an organic one, and if other changes in our political system involve this also; and if, under new influences, popular opinion has been modified, let us meet the question and decide it upon its simple merits. To make it dependent upon the fate of financial articles or of changes in the judicial structure, or of innovations of doubtful popularity, would be unjust to the class who solicit this extension of privileges. To force its acceptance against the convictions of the main body of the constituency, by relaxing severe but just restrictions upon delegated power, or by concessions to local or monied interests, would be an obvious wrong of which this body could not be consciously guilty.

The submission of the question by itself is so direct and honest, as to tend to disarm the jealousy with which this question has been regarded by the people. It is without embarrassment or difficulty in practice, and whether the mode of separate submission be extended to other articles or not, the popular will may be consulted in regard to this without trouble or expense.

For the sake, therefore, of disembarassing the Convention from the further consideration of this subject, and of relieving the wise and salutary reforms to be secured by the Revised Constitution, from an unnecessary complication, the undersigned beg leave to offer the following resolution, as an amendment to the report of the majority.

Resolved, That a proposition further to extend the elective franchise to colored men be submitted, to be voted on separately from the rest of the Constitution.

As to the extension of suffrage to women, the undersigned reserve, for the present, any expression of opinion.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM CASSIDY,
JOHN G. SCHUMAKER.

Mr. GREELEY — I was instructed by the Committee to move that the majority report be made a special order for Tuesday. I suppose this being the only report of the kind, it would naturally come up on that day, but I move that it be made the special order for Tuesday, July 9th, at 12 o'clock, M.

Mr. WEED — My only objection to making this subject a special order for July 9th is this, that as I have learned, many of the members of this body wish to adjourn over and not hold sessions to-morrow or Monday, and then there would be no opportunity, on the part of the members of this body, to instruct themselves from the report made by the committee. They would have no opportunity to see it printed or have it placed upon our files. For that reason, it seems to me, it should not be made a special order on Tuesday. As the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has said, this being the only report of the kind, as a general order, it would come up on Tuesday, if printed, and the Convention vote to take it up; but if two-thirds of this body vote to make it a special order, it will require a two-thirds vote, at that time, to postpone it, whether a majority of the Convention wish to take it up or not.

Mr. MERRITT — This Convention has already ordered the printing of the proceedings and debates in the daily newspaper to be laid upon our desks, and the objection of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], is entirely obviated, as we shall have both the report of the majority and minority before us.

Mr. GREELEY — The committee had no particular choice about this matter. I supposed the Convention might have some choice as to the day, but if the Convention choose to fix another time we shall agree to it.

Mr. ALVORD — I am opposed to making this a special order, and it seems to me there is great force in the remarks made by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed]. In our regular order of business to-morrow, if this report shall be laid upon our table, it comes up.

Mr. MERRITT — I believe, sir, I have not yielded the floor.

The PRESIDENT — The gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] says he has not yielded the floor. The Chair supposed he had yielded and recognized the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. MERRITT — This being the first report made from any standing Committee, and one of the most important which is to come before this body, it is very proper that we should all understand on what day it will be taken up for consideration. Resolutions, memorials and other business which is likely to come before the Convention, can be presented at any time. It is understood by this adjournment, which is to take place over the 4th of July, that the Convention will not come together until Monday or Tuesday of the next week. We may meet on Monday evening, but it is not probable we shall have a quorum. It is very important that we should understand this proposition. At whatever time this shall come up, I have no doubt that every member will desire to be present, if not to take part in the discussion, at least to hear the discussion, and be present to record his vote for or against the report. I hope, therefore, we shall make it a special order.

Mr. ALVORD — I desire to continue my remarks but a very few moments longer. It is an impossibility in the position we now occupy—the probability being there will be hardly a quorum present in this Convention to-morrow, and we shall adjourn over unquestionably until Monday if not still farther—that we shall have this document in a printed form laid upon our tables so we can look over and examine it, between now and the 9th day of July. We should have it upon our tables to be enabled, if necessary to carry it home with us during the recess, so that we can look at and examine this question in reference to both these reports, and decide as to the manner in which this Convention should act. Under the rules, as they now exist, this being the only report of the kind from a standing committee it will come up as a matter of course in the general orders, and it will be then at the disposition of a majority of this Convention. Let it be so disposed of, and when we shall come together again on the 8th or 9th of July, I will go with any member of the Convention to set it down at the earliest practicable moment as a special order, in order that full notice can be given to members of the time when it will come up.

Mr. LIVINGSTON moved to amend the motion by inserting "Wednesday, at 11 o'clock," instead of "Tuesday, at 12."

Mr. GREELEY — I hope not, Mr. President. If the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord] will move for an earlier day, I have no objection. I should not like to postpone the consideration of this report upon the idea that the Convention will be thin on Tuesday, as I think we have agreed to meet on Monday evening. If we set this down for Tuesday, we shall have a full session, if we put it off until Wednesday, it will be simply throwing away another day. I cannot accept the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston].

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. Livingston, and it was declared to be lost.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. Greeley.

Which was lost by the following vote:

Ayes — Messrs. A. F. Allen, N. M. Allen, Andrews, Archer, Axtell, Ballard, Barker, Bell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Carpenter, Cassidy, Clinton, Cooke, Corbett, Curtis, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Mr. FOLGER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

The standing Committee on the Judiciary reports that it has had under consideration the resolution referred to it in relation to certain information from clerks of courts, and have amended the same so as to read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Convention request, by circular addressed to the clerk of each county in the State; the clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, in the city and county of New York; the clerk of the Superior Court, in the city and county of New York; the clerk of the Superior Court, in the city of Buffalo; the clerk of the City Court of the city of Brooklyn, and of any other city; the clerk of any recorder's court; the clerk of any mayor's court; the clerk of the court of General Sessions in the city and county of New York; the clerk of the court of Oyer and Terminer of the city and county of New York; the clerk of the Marine court of the city and county of New York; that such clerks respectively report to this Convention, as speedily as practicable, how many causes were on the calendar of the court or courts of which he is the clerk, at the terms thereof for the year ending January 1st, 1867, and what was the oldest and what was the youngest date of issue thereof, (including therein the calendar of the general term, the special term, and the circuit or trial term, if such term there be); and at such terms how many causes were argued; how many were submitted, and in courts where there are trials and references, how many were tried and how many were referred, and in the case of the clerk of a criminal court, how many indictments were pending at the last term thereof, and how many were tried or otherwise and in what manner disposed of.

And as amended the committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

The question was then put on the resolution as reported by the committee, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. SEAVER, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

ALBANY, JUNE 28, 1867.

Your Committee to whom was referred the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That twice the usual number of copies of the Constitution, with notes and references, be printed for the use of the Convention"—

Respectfully recommend that the said resolution be agreed to, and that copies thereof, as fast as printed, be placed upon the files of this Convention.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

Mr. GREELEY—I would inquire of the chairman of the committee [Mr. Seaver], how many the resolution calls for?

Mr. SEAVER—Sixteen hundred.

The question was then put on the resolution reported by the committee, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. SEAVER, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following further report.

ALBANY, JUNE 28, 1867.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the subject of the compensation of the Stenographer to the Convention, respectfully report.

That after due consideration of the subject, your committee are of opinion that the fairest and most equitable plan of compensation is to pay the Stenographer a stipulated sum for a given amount of work, and your committee would, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the compensation of the stenographer to this Convention be fixed at five dollars per page of the printed proceedings and debates of this Convention, as the same are now printed and placed upon the files of members; such compensation to include and cover all the expenses of assistant stenographers and clerks that may be employed by the said stenographer in the performance of any and all of his duties as stenographer to this Convention.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

Mr. KERNAN—I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, about what per diem, that will give each man employed.

Mr. SEAVER—I think Mr. President, that will give the Stenographer a per diem of about twenty dollars per day, though reckoning our labors to proceed as they have for the last three or four weeks it will afford him but little or no compensation; it will give his principal assistant whom he has employed, one hundred dollars per week; another sixty dollars; another twenty-five dollars; another eighteen dollars; another, twelve dollars per week. I have consulted with persons who are familiar with the employment of stenographers and who may perhaps be called experts in judging what would be a fair compensation for persons engaged in that business, and I am informed that the compensation proposed by the committee is no more than just and fair for the service required. There is one thing further, Mr. President; this Convention has been in the habit of adjourning from Friday until Monday or Tuesday, and we may presume, judging from the temper of the Convention heretofore manifested, that it will hereafter adjourn, very likely from Friday till Monday, for most of the session; that seems to be the feeling, though we may be driven to a greater amount of effort, and greater labor during the remainder of the session, after the recess to be taken to celebrate the 4th of July, and thus avoid such long adjournments. But it must be borne in mind that, while the Convention is thus adjourning, the stenographer has to remain here, and also keep his force of assistants under pay, so as to command their services whenever the Convention returns to its duties.

They have to be paid constantly for their time, else they will go where they will obtain steady employment.

Mr. KERNAN—I have not sufficient knowledge on this subject to form a very valuable judgment, even for myself. But it occurred to me that the price per page suggested, when this Convention may be engaged in debate, would make a very large compensation. I wish that these gentlemen should be compensated fairly and fully in accordance with what they would earn in their vocation anywhere. I should judge, myself, that if they were paid a fair compensation by the day, including days when they were here, whether we were debating or not, it would probably be far more economical, while it would be just to their interests and to the State.

The question was then put on the resolution reported by the committee, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. ALVORD—In the regular order of business, I rise for the purpose of offering a resolution relating to the government and order of the Convention. Gentlemen of the Convention are aware that, under the terms of the law which authorizes our assembling here, the President of the Convention has no authority or power to appoint temporarily, for more than two days, a presiding officer of the Convention to occupy the chair during his absence. They are also aware that our presiding officer resides in a remote portion of the State, and the two days named would be more than exhausted in his going to his residence and returning; so that, under the strict construction of the act, he would be compelled to forego the privilege which many of us have, of going to his home, and spending a portion of the time which might be necessary. Therefore, for the purpose of avoiding this trouble so far as he is concerned, and to permit him to return to his home when it may become necessary, I beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Hon. Charles J. Folger be and he is hereby appointed President pro tem. of this Convention, to preside over its deliberations and perform all other duties of the President in his necessary absence, and that the Secretary notify the Comptroller of this appointment.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Alvord, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following preamble and resolution, and moved its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WHEREAS, All laws conferring powers on Courts of Special Sessions, to try persons charged with petty offenses, whether such persons elect to be so tried or not, have been declared unconstitutional, by the highest courts of the State, and

WHEREAS, The necessity of first procuring an indictment in this class of offenses, and then proceeding to attend in a court of record, operates oppressively on parties injured, and greatly to the prejudice of the public, in vexatious but unavoidable delays, in the expenditure of money, in travel and other expenses while attending courts, in the consumption of the time of parties, witnesses, courts and juries; and

of time and money in the trial of these trivial cases, greatly tend to prevent parties aggrieved from any attempt to redress their wrongs, and preserve the peace and good order of society, by the punishment of this large class of offenders, thus giving to them immunity in the commission of crime, encouraging them in their evil practices and rendering them and their associates more daring and dangerous; and

WHEREAS, The number of these offenses is so great as to make it impossible for courts of record to try them, even if the complaining parties had the means, practice and perseverance to make the necessary efforts; and

WHEREAS, Prompt and certain punishment is the only sure way to prevent crime and protect the citizen in his rights, therefore,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee inquire into the propriety of embodying in the Constitution a provision authorizing and empowering Courts of Special Sessions throughout the State, to try all persons charged with misdemeanors, whether such persons elect to be so tried or not.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE offered the following resolution and moved its reference to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Organization, etc., of the Legislature be requested to inquire whether the advantages which in theory are believed to result from a division of the Legislature into two houses, would not be secured with more certainty by the adoption of a system, the outlines of which should be substantially as follows, viz.:

1. Divide the electors of this State into two classes; one called senatorial electors, and the other assembly electors. The senatorial electors to be those who for the ten next preceding years shall have been entitled to vote in the county where they may offer their vote at any election. The assembly electors to be all others entitled to vote.

2. Senators to be elected by the votes of senatorial electors only; members of assembly by the votes of assembly electors only; both classes of electors, without distinction, to be entitled to vote for all other elective offices.

3. Make it the duty of the Legislature to provide for ascertaining, by proper proofs, to which of the above classes electors belong; and also, at its first session after such enumeration (which shall be made once in ten years), to so adjust the number of years, mentioned in the first subdivision above, that the number of senatorial and assembly electors, shall be equal, as nearly as may be.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to recur to the order of memorials.

The PRESIDENT—There being no objection the memorial will be received.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I would like to say a word in reference to the memorial. It is a memorial of the prison association of New York, praying for an amendment to the Constitution relating to the penal institutions in this State. The subject has been before the committee of the association specially charged with that subject for one or two years, and it has been the subject of correspondence with prison officers and authorities in other States, and is the result of a matured plan of the association. I ask, therefore, that the memorial be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the memorial.

During the reading Mr. SEYMOUR moved that the reading be dispensed with, and that it be referred to the Committee on State Prisons.

Which was lost.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the reading of the memorial to its conclusion.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on State Prisons.

Mr. BELL called for the consideration of the resolution offered by him, requesting the Senate committee appointed to investigate the management of the canals to furnish the Convention with a copy of the testimony taken before them.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate committee charged with the duty of inquiring into the management of the canals of this State, the departments thereof, etc., be respectfully requested to furnish this Convention with a copy of the testimony thus far taken on that subject, for the information of the Committee on Canals.

The question was then put on the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. VEEDER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights be respectfully requested to consider the propriety of reporting an amendment to the second section of article one of the Constitution, so that the same shall read as follows:

SEC. 2. The trial by jury in all cases shall remain inviolate forever; but a jury trial may be waived by the consent of all the parties in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law; but no trial shall be had without a jury in any criminal case whatever, except by the voluntary and express consent of the prisoner.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and the Bill of Rights.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I hold in my hand a resolution to provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Statistics, and especially for the registration of births, marriages and deaths.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Secretary of State, Comptroller, etc., be requested to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Bureau of Statistics, under the charge of the Secretary of State, especially providing for an efficient system of registration of births, marriages and deaths.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Secretary of State, Comptroller, etc.

Mr. MILLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a Constitutional provision, taking from the Legislature, jurisdiction of any subject whenever jurisdiction of the same has been given by law to the Boards of Supervisors or to the courts.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. SILVESTER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the appropriate committee to inquire into the expediency of providing in the Constitution that any member of the Legislature who shall receive or accept of any money or valuable thing for his vote upon any measure, or who shall propose to enter into an agreement with any other member, that either shall vote in a particular manner upon any measure, if the other will vote in a particular manner upon another measure, if such proposition shall be carried into effect, shall be punished by deprivation of the right to vote and hold office, but the person who has offered or paid or delivered such money or valuable thing, or who has assented to such proposition for such exchange of votes, if such proposition has been carried into effect, shall not be liable to any penalty or punishment and shall be a competent and compellable witness, unless upon the trial of the member who has accepted such money or valuable thing, or who has made such proposition.

Mr. SILVESTER—I ask that the resolution be referred to the Select Committee of Five on the subject of Official Corruption.

Which reference was ordered, there being no objection thereto.

Mr. BELL—When I called up the resolution requesting the Senate committee to investigate the management of the canals, to furnish a copy of the testimony taken before them, I neglected to include in my motion to adopt the resolution, a further proposition that the testimony, when furnished, be referred to the Committee on Canals. I now ask unanimous consent to make a motion that that reference be made.

There being no objection the reference was ordered.

Mr. GOULD—Since we passed the order of communications I have received a communication from Dr. Francis Lieber, of New York, on the subject of requiring unanimity among jurors. It contains so many references to history that are not generally accessible, and which it is desirable should be preserved, I desire that the whole document be spread upon our journal and be printed, and that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RUMSEY moved that the communication be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Which was carried.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Pardoning Power, to inquire as to the expediency and propriety of conferring a portion of the pardoning power, in cases of offenses below the grade of felony, on some county officer or officers.

Also, that the said committee inquire what constitutional provision can, with propriety, be made, to prevent the practical exercise of the pardoning power by indirection, by officers and persons not vested therewith—as for instance, by the Legislature, under pretense of a general enactment, as was done in the case of Mary Hartung, who escaped the punishment of death and all other punishment, for the murder of her husband, through an act of the Legislature, after the most persistent, yet unsuccessful applications to the Governor for pardon, or for the commutation of her sentence—by members of the Legislature, who knowing of corrupt practices by other members, or by lobby agents, neglect to expose the guilty, and bring them to punishment, through a mistaken notion of being merciful, or from notions still worse—by Grand Juries who refuse to indict criminals clearly proved to be such, for the improper plea that they are saving the county from expense of a trial, or because they have an unfavorable opinion of the law which has been violated—by the courts charged with the trial of criminals, and by judges of the courts in discharging offenders on their own recognizances, admitting to bail on easy terms, putting over trials until the testimony of witnesses necessary to convict cannot be obtained, suspending sentence indefinitely, and otherwise—by district attorneys in entering a nolle prosequi, and otherwise neglecting to do their utmost to punish criminals according to law—by magistrates having jurisdiction to issue warrants for the arrest, examination and commitment of offenders, in declining or seeming unwilling to entertain complaints, letting offenders to bail for trifling sums, and otherwise—by constables, police officers, sheriffs and others in permitting criminals to escape; and by individuals in compromising and settling with offenders, sometimes with, and sometimes without, the connivance of magistrates and other officers charged with the duty of bringing criminals to justice, a prominent instance of which has been recently brought to public attention in the case of the Lord bond robbery and the recovery of the stolen bonds at a cost of $120,000 paid to thieves and detectives, accompanied, as is believed, with an understanding that there was to be no prosecution for the robbery.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Pardoning Power.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—Not to be entirely out of the fashion, I offer the following resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Standing Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, to inquire into the expediency of introducing into the Constitution a provision substantially as follows:

“The Legislature shall not grant or authorize extra compensation to any contractor after the services shall have been rendered, or the contracts entered into.”

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. WEDD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to consider and report upon the propriety of providing, by constitutional provisions, that no fee or charge shall be imposed upon suitors in the surrogates' courts of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That as a provision proper for insertion in the Constitution, be referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights the following proposition:

Remedies existing at the period when a contract is made, shall not be disturbed or impaired by subsequent legislation.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. BAKER—I call up for consideration a resolution offered by me the 19th inst., asking for information.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of this State be requested, at as early a day as practicable, to report to this Convention the whole amount of moneys appropriated by the Legislature of this State, and paid by the Comptroller, to the several local private institutions, called charitable institutions, not chartered by the Legislature, from 1857 to 1867, both inclusive, giving the name and location of each institution so receiving such appropriation, and the amount received in each year during the time aforesaid.

Mr. BAKER—At the suggestion of several members, I desire, if in order, to offer a substitute for the original resolution:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the substitute as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of this State be requested, at as early a day as practicable, to report to this Convention, the whole amount of moneys appropriated by the Legislature, and paid by the Comptroller to the several public and private, religious, educational and charitable institutions of this State—specifying as far as practicable, those chartered by special act of the Legislature—those incorporated under the general act enabling such incorporation, and those not chartered. Stating the place where each of such institutions is located, with the amount of moneys so paid to each of said institutions, in each year from 1847 to 1867, inclusive.

The question was then put on the substitute to the original resolution, and it was declared carried.

The question then recurred on the original resolution as amended by the substitute, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. STRATTON—Day before yesterday, I presented a communication from Mr. H. B. Wilson, which was, upon my motion, laid on the table. I now move to take the communication from the table, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on the subject of suppressing official corruption.

The PRESIDENT—The communication not having been laid on the table by a vote, it is not necessary that a vote be taken to call it up.

There being no objection the reference suggested was ordered.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, The functions of juries, especially of grand juries and juries in courts of record, are most important, and it is essential to the due administration of justice that juries be composed of intelligent and honest men; and,

WHEREAS, Many complaints are made of the manner in which the making up of jury lists has been of late practiced:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire whether any, and if any, what provision should be placed in the Constitution in regard to the making up of the list of persons from which juries are to be drawn; and that they consider the following plan, among others:

Let the board of supervisors of the county annually prescribe the number of jurymen to be placed on the lists, and apportion the number among the towns and wards of cities in proportion to population. Then let each elector in the town or ward, at the annual election in November, vote for such a number of the jurymen apportioned to the town or ward, as shall be the smallest number which is more than one-half of the number to be elected; and let the person have the greatest number of votes, to the extent of the number apportioned to the town or ward, be declared elected, and the person so elected to form the list of jurymen for the year.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. J. BROOKS—I rise, Mr. President, to ask for a leave of absence, the duration of which I am not able to state, because I am called to another sphere of duty. I do not know whether I shall be there occupied for two weeks or the remaining portion of two years. I ask also to be excused from serving upon two committees, to which you have done me the honor to appoint me, in order that the places thus vacated may be filled by the appointment of others in my stead. I will also state, while I am up, that I should resign my seat here but for two reasons; one is the uncertainty as to the time I shall be absent, and the other is that a resignation would subject the city of New York to a very large expense, to hold another election, which might be unnecessary, as I may be able to return to my duties here in a short time.

The question was put on the motion to grant leave of absence to Mr. J. Brooks and it was declared carried.

The question was then put on the motion to discharge Mr. J. Brooks from serving on the committee of which he was a member and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. SCHOONMAKER, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

The President pro tem., Mr. Folger in the Chair. Prayer was offered by Rev. DEXTER E. CLAPP.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY; no objection being made thereto it was declared approved.

Mr. WEED moved for a leave of absence for Mr. George M. Beckwith until Wednesday next.

There being no objection the leave of absence was granted.

Mr. RUMSEY—I move that when this Convention adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. COOKE—I move to amend the resolution by striking out "Wednesday" and inserting Monday evening at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I move to amend it so it will read, that when this Convention adjourns it adjourn to meet on Tuesday the 9th of July.

Mr. RUMSEY—Is it in order to make a motion of that kind, there being a resolution passed that when this Convention adjourns on Wednesday next, it adjourn to meet on the 8th of July. My motion was made with reference to the order which was previously made by the Convention.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I wish to avoid all unnecessary implications and reflections upon this Convention. We are charged with evading the law by adjourning from day to day, for the purpose of drawing our per diem allowance. I presume that no such idea exists in the mind of any member of this Convention. It is perfectly clear that we shall not have a quorum to do business until after the recess, and we may as well adjourn first as last, and I think we can override this motion, or at least virtually reconsider it, by adopting the amendment which I have submitted to the consideration of the Convention, as we will only meet from day to day without a quorum.

Mr. RUMSEY—I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen] if it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion that it is in order, as the greater includes the less.

Mr. AXTELL—I rise to a point of order. I believe there is not a quorum of the members present this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not informed of that fact officially.

Mr. WEED—I trust the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], will not insist on ascertaining that question, because certainly there should be no desire on his part to prevent the few members who remain here, from leaving after all the rest are gone.

Mr. RATHBUN—I hope the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen], will modify his motion so as to make it Monday, July 8th, at half-past seven P. M. I think it would be much more likely to be satisfactory to those who are gone as well as those who are here. I am in favor of his proposition with that modification.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I have no particular objection to say Monday evening, at 7½ o'clock P. M., except that every gentleman will take it for granted that means Tuesday morning, and we may as well say Tuesday at once, then all will be able to attend. That is the reason I suggested Tuesday, at 7½ o'clock, instead of Monday.

Mr. BICKFORD—I think there is no quorum present this morning. When the resolution was taken the other day to adjourn over from Wednesday until the next Monday, there was a very full attendance. Although the persons who may be present this morning, may see fit to adopt a longer adjournment, I submit it is not exactly fair to those gentlemen who are not here this morning, that we do now in their absence take a longer adjournment, further than was contemplated by the Convention when there was a full attendance. I, therefore, think it would be best to insist upon the point of order, and as there is no quorum present, that we should adjourn from day to day. I cannot vote for an adjournment until Wednesday next. I think it better to ascertain the fact that there is no quorum present.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I understood the President to decide that the point of order was not well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is not informed officially that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HALE—I do not agree with my friend from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], in saying it is unfair to those who are absent, if there is an adjournment for a week. I think, on the other hand, if there is any unfairness, it is on the part of those members of this Convention who, having voted that the Convention should remain in session until Wednesday, and then adjourn until Monday, have thought it proper to run away and leave us. The number of those present, as is obvious, is quite small. It is pretty obvious, too, to all of us that nothing will be done in this Convention next week. I submit that it is altogether more proper for us now to adjourn for a week, knowing, as we do, that nothing will be done within a week, than it is to adjourn until next Wednesday, and from that time until Monday. I hope, therefore, the resolution as amended by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen] will prevail, and that we shall adjourn now either until Monday evening or Tuesday. I do not know that I have any choice in regard to that, though I think most of us will not be able to get here until Tuesday.

Mr. WEED—I fully concur in what the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] has said, with reference to our duty toward those who voted not to adjourn over the 4th of July, until next Wednesday. It seems to me that it is our duty—believing as I do that there will not be a quorum present in this Convention before the 8th or 9th of July—to adjourn over until the 8th of July, and instead of it being a duty and an obligation toward those who voted not to adjourn, that we are in common justice bound to adjourn over, so as to deprive them of their pay from now until next Wednesday, they having voted not to adjourn and then having gone home and left us without a quorum. I suggest to the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], that if he will look over the list of those who voted not to adjourn, he will find that more than one-half of them have left, and the great bulk of them left with the intention of not returning until the 9th.

Mr. BICKFORD—It is perfectly obvious to the gentleman from Clinton, [Mr. Weed], as well as to other gentlemen, that there is no quorum present here to-day, and inasmuch as we have been charged with doing things by indirection, let us not do any business that we do not want to have seen plainly before the world. It seems to me, with all respect to those who favor this proposition to adjourn over, that we cannot adopt any motion to do away with the action of the Convention when it was full. I submit that we should not, if it is obvious there is no quorum present, take any action which we could not take if the absence of a quorum was officially shown.

Mr. WEED—We can take the action if there is no call of the house.

Mr. BICKFORD—As long as there is no quorum present, all we can do is to adjourn from day to day; and I shall deem it my duty to move for a call of the house if this motion is insisted on.

Mr. COOKE—I am one of those members, whose name appears on the list among those who voted not to adjourn over until next week, and I rise simply to say, that I was not influenced by the motives which have been imputed, by indirection, to those who voted with me, namely, that we might save our per diem pay. I voted in that way simply to keep this Convention here in working order. I felt as though we had no time to waste, and that we ought to make use of all the time that was possible, and I have made this amendment for the purpose of continuing business. I can understand there are many things that may be done by the members of the Convention, much of the committee business may be continued, many of the members of important committees are here, and can continue their work. I have no doubt there will be a quorum here on Monday or Tuesday at any rate, and the object of my amendment is to save two days' labor of this Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—I do not desire to enter into this debate, except for a single purpose—to explain, if necessary, the position which I occupy, in reference to my action on the original proposition, and to my amendment not to adjourn till Wednesday. I have heard it intimated, upon the part of members of this Convention, that the motive of some, was to avoid the loss of their per diem. I voted for the proposition, as amended in the manner I suggested, with the perfect knowledge, that we must of necessity lose the per diem under the amendment. I know that the Comptroller of the State, rules, and rules correctly, that although the 4th of July is a legal holiday under the laws, yet so is Sunday a legal holiday, and as we are paid for Sundays, although we do not sit in convention on Sunday, therefore he counts the 4th of July as well as Sunday, in the calculation of the three days. So that the adjournment from Wednesday over until the succeeding Monday, carries with it, under the law as it exists, the loss of the per diem, for the four days for which we would have adjourned according to my amendment of the original proposition. I offered the amendment for the purpose of endeavoring to get this Convention to keep together during so much of the time that we have between now and the election next Fall, as possible, in order to complete our labors. We have of necessity a very large amount of work to do and perform, which we cannot avoid, even if at the end of our work we shall have come to the conclusion to make very little alteration in the Constitution as it now stands. It requires time—it requires a vast amount of time and labor; and if we do not go to work and apply more of that time and labor between now and then, than we have for the four weeks we have been here together, we cannot, by any possibility, get through and perform any portion of our business. But I see the position in which we are situated to-day. I see many of the gentlemen of the Convention who voted for my amendment are absent. I leave it to them to make their own excuse for their absence. They have compelled us under the circumstances to submit to what they, perhaps, did not think of, when they voted for my amendment.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I rise for the purpose of making an explanation in reference to some remarks which fell from my friend from Ulster [Mr. Cooke]. I hope he did not imagine that I intended to throw out any intimation upon the members of this Convention—

Mr. COOKE—Certainly not.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—I hope he did not think, when I spoke of intimations which had been thrown out, that when we voted not to adjourn, it was done by some with a view of evading the law and of saving our per diem allowance, that I intended to include or to allude to any member of this Convention.

Mr. COOKE—If the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen] will allow me. I did not intend to allude to anything which was said by him. I alluded more particularly to what was thrown out the other day in the discussion on the motion of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—In reference to the remarks of my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], I understood him to say, he has no doubt but we shall lose our per diem allowance (notwithstanding the Comptroller might give a different construction to the law), after we adjourn next Wednesday. But suppose we adjourn, as is proposed, from now till Wednesday, which is three days, then the per diem allowance will be claimed, and will be allowed, and then when we come to adjourn on Wednesday, the per diem would probably be disallowed from that day. I propose that we adjourn now, until the 8th or 9th of July, I am not very particular which (only for the reasons I have suggested, that some members will not be able to get here on the 8th), in order that no question can ever arise hereafter, or any ground for any imputation of this kind against members, one and all, as well those who are assembled here to day, as those who are absent. As we must be perfectly satisfied, all of us, that no business will be done here until after the recess, it would be idle for us to come here from day to day, simply for the purpose of adjourning again. One word with regard to the remark made by the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke], that the committees might continue their business. We are all of us perfectly aware that a majority of the members of this body are already absent, and many of them I know, from their intentions as expressed to me last evening, do not intend to return until after the close of this recess, so that though there may be a minority of several committees here, yet what business can be transacted unless there is a quorum of each committee present? I undertake to affirm, as it is my sincere belief, that not a quorum of any committee of this body will remain here, between now and Wednesday, to transact any business, and in view of that, can it be the duty of the few members who are here, to remain from day to day without even the privilege of going before the committees to which they belong? I know, and perhaps other gentlemen may know, that several of the committees had a meeting yesterday or the day before, and they adjourned the further sessions of their committees to a day beyond the approaching recess so that of course these committees cannot assemble, and will not assemble, and gentlemen who are members of these committees have gone home, with a view of not returning here until after the recess. It was in view of these facts, I offered this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted. I will adopt the suggestion of my friend from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun], and substitute Monday instead of Tuesday, if he thinks it will secure a more favorable consideration.

Mr. BELL—I do not rise to explain my vote or to excuse any gentleman who has voted with me or differently from me, on the vote I have given with regard to an adjournment. But it will occur to every member of the Convention who will look at the number of the members present, that there must be, at least, less than one-third here, and the probability is, those absent will not return here until the 8th or 9th of July, and although I am very desirous that the business which has called us together here, should be proceeded with, at least that the committees might meet and prepare business to present to the Convention on its re-assembling here, yet, practically, it will be of no use for us to adjourn from day to day until Wednesday, and from then until the time fixed, but we may as well, I think, adjourn from now until that day. I am therefore in favor of the motion now pending of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen], to adjourn until 7½ o'clock p. m., on the 8th of July.

Mr. RUMSEY—I accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen], that the adjournment be until Monday the 8th, at 7½ o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that there is another amendment intervening, so that it is not in the power of the gentleman to accept it.

Mr. HADLEY—If it be in order, I move that this Convention now adjourn until the 8th of July.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That is the motion already pending.

Mr. HADLEY—My motion is that the Convention adjourn now. The motion of my friend is, when the Convention adjourns, it adjourn to meet on the 8th.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of opinion it is not in order, there being a motion to adjourn to a specified day, already pending.

Mr. SEYMOUR—After the vote taken the other day, I think it is pretty clear that the members of the Convention who are now present, are here in the line of their duty. We have come here expecting to transact the proper business of the Convention, and I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen] as modified, by adjourning until Monday evening next, which will be according to our custom, and which will also be in the line of our duty. I do not know that it is proper for us to conclude, without proof, that there will not be a quorum of the members of this Convention here at that time, and that we may not proceed on Tuesday or Wednesday with the transaction of business as usual. Hoping that it may be so, and I think we are bound to construe in the absence of proof, that it is so, and knowing that it is in the line of the duty of this Convention so to do, I hope the motion may prevail.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN—My motion is to adjourn until Monday evening, the 8th of July.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I supposed it was next Monday. As it seems I was mistaken, I move as an amendment that we adjourn until Monday evening next, at 7½ P. M., according to the usage of this Convention.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I think that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], has misunderstood the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen]. His amendment was to adjourn until Monday, the 8th of July, instead of next Monday. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. C. L. Allen]. I steadily voted against all these long adjournments. It is true, sir, that gentlemen have left, and they probably will not be back, many of them, till after the recess; but I think, there will be a quorum here, at least, on Tuesday or Wednesday, and if there should not be, it will not be the fault of those gentlemen who have remained here to perform their duty.

Mr. WEED—The gentleman [Mr. Wakeman], certainly understands that we are to have no session on Wednesday, for the resolution as passed by the Convention, provides that at 11½ o'clock, A. M., on Wednesday, we shall adjourn till the 9th of July. We may meet here on Wednesday, but we can do no more than read the Journal, before 11½ o'clock, and then we shall be obliged to adjourn at once, so there can be no business done on that day. And if we adjourn till Monday, at 7½ o'clock, as there never has been a quorum yet on Monday evening, we shall only come together on Tuesday to do the business of the Convention, and very likely not have a quorum on that day.

Mr. WAKEMAN—I understand sir, but yet I apprehend if the people of this State see that we have adjourned for an entire week, and more than that, for the purpose of celebrating one day, the anniversary of our National Independence, in addition to our former adjournments, they will think we are neglecting our duty. Heretofore, every Friday evening every man who lived within a short distance, where they could return home, has taken the liberty of going home, while members of the Convention living in a distant part of the State have been compelled to stay here, some of them even until now; therefore, I am opposed to long adjournments now, as I have been heretofore, and as I trust I shall be in the future.

Mr. CLINTON—I rise to a point of order, or rather, to make an inquiry, as I am not skilled in parliamentary law. As I understand it, this Convention a day or two ago, resolved that it would hold a session on Wednesday next, and they would then adjourn over until Monday following. If that be so, I wish to inquire if any motion which provides for an adjournment now for a period beyond Wednesday, is in order until we have reconsidered the vote by which we determined to adjourn on Wednesday next. With reference to the matter of adjournment, I feel indifferent, I have no desire to signalize my zeal for labor. All I wish to say is, I supposed it was the understanding of the Convention, when they adopted the resolution to which I refer, that we should be here to-day and on Monday and Tuesday at our post at work, and I think we should be here down to the hour fixed for the adjournment, and unless there be a change, I shall live up, practically, to what I supposed was the understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—Does the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton] insist upon his point of order.

Mr. CLINTON—I would like to get the opinion of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The information of the Chair is, that on Thursday the Convention resolved that it would, on Wednesday next, adjourn until Monday of the then subsequent week. The motion now is to adjourn from this day until Tuesday, the 9th day of July next. The Chair is of opinion that this motion is in order, for it does not seek to reverse the former action of the Convention, but really includes that action, in an adjournment of a greater extent. This precise motion has not yet, so far as the Chair is informed, been negatived by the Convention. It is true that the Convention did refuse to adjourn from Friday of this week until Monday the 8th July, but it did not refuse to adjourn from this day to any future day. And as the termini of the adjournment proposed by this motion includes those of the motion once adopted by the Convention, and stated by the gentleman from Erie [Mr. Clinton], the Chair will hold that the point of order suggested by that gentleman is not well taken.

Mr. HADLEY—I wish to ask if amendments are in order now?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—An amendment would not be in order now as there are two amendments pending.

Mr. HADLEY—I understood that one amendment was accepted by the gentleman from Steuben [Mr. Rumsey].

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair held that the gentleman was not at liberty to accept it then.

Mr. HADLEY—Then I move that this Convention adjourn until Monday evening at six o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion of the gentleman can hardly be entertained now, as there is already a motion to adjourn to a fixed day. A motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. HADLEY—Then I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hadley, and it was declared lost.

Mr. MILLER—I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke], that when this Convention adjourns it adjourns to meet on Monday, at half-past seven o'clock. I have noticed in the open meetings of this Convention that a large part of the business that has been transacted has been the offering of resolutions, containing suggestions to the various Committees of the Convention. I noticed that at our last meeting there was no dearth of resolutions and I suppose they have not all been offered yet. I would suggest that this business can be as well done without a quorum of the members being present; and as most of the committees have adjourned to have their final meetings when the Convention shall meet after the recess, these resolutions ought to be introduced in season to be referred to the committees before the 4th of July. I would suggest, therefore, that Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday can be very well employed for this purpose. As to the gentlemen who are absent, that, of course, is their business; they have undoubtedly good and reasonable excuses for their absence. Our business is to be here and to attend to our duty to-day, and the days of next week as well.

Mr. AXTELL—I have steadily voted against long adjournments. I would have preferred that we had simply adjourned over the 4th of July, being under the impression that the 4th of July would survive, if the members of this honorable body were not present in their respective localities, to take part in the exercises on that day. I know it did survive when several hundred thousand men who are now scattered over the country were absent; there were no adjournments for the 4th of July when we were engaged in the business of putting down rebellion. As we are now serving the country, my impression has been all the way through, that we should proceed with our business, and I voted with the honorable gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], on the understanding that we had little time enough to do the business which has been assigned to us, so the people may set intelligently upon it. It is by no means certain that we may not have a quorum present on Monday and Tuesday, and the usual business may be done. For these reasons I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke].

Mr. KRUM—I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke], first, for the reason suggested by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller], and also for the further reason that a resolution was adopted one day this week providing that when this Convention adjourns on Wednesday it adjourns at half-past eleven o'clock until the following Monday. When that resolution was adopted, it was adopted in full Convention. A large number of delegates elected to this Convention were then present, and the resolution was adopted understandingly. The major part, or a good many of the delegates are now away under the assumption, I have a right to assert, I think, that that resolution would remain the resolution of this body, and went away with the idea that they would return to this Convention on Monday next, at 7½ o'clock. I do not know who are authorized to say that there will not be a quorum of members present at 7½ o'clock on Monday. The gentlemen who are not here, left with the understanding that this Convention would stand adjourned until that time, and it is fair for us to infer that gentlemen intend to stand by the resolution adopted and be here at that time. For these reasons, and believing it is unfair to those that are away, and for the reason suggested by my friend from Delaware [Mr. Miller], I believe that this Convention when it adjourns this day, should adjourn in accordance with the terms of the resolution, until Monday evening at 7½ o'clock.

Mr. WEED—In answer to the position taken by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. Miller] and the gentleman from Schoharie [Mr. Krum] that Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday should be devoted to resolutions, I would suggest that from the fact that no resolutions have been introduced thus far, this morning, the resolution-ary members have gone, and they will not be back until after the 4th of July.

Mr. MILLER—I think that there has been no opportunity to introduce resolutions, thus far, the question of adjournment having taken up the whole time.

Mr. RATHBUN—I voted with the majority on the motion to adjourn on Wednesday next until the Monday following. I voted understandingly on my own part, and supposed it was so understood by the Convention, that no members would get any pay during the continuance of that adjournment. I voted for the adjournment with the expectation that this body would remain here and attend to the business of the Convention until Wednesday next. It is of no use for us to disguise the fact that we are here in a condition not very promising for the performance of hard labor. I have the greatest respect for the gentlemen who have gone away—and I do not desire to call them back until the time fixed by them to return, which was, when they left, the 8th or 9th of next month. I know a large number of them went away yesterday, beginning in the morning, and ending in the evening, and not one of all of them intimated any idea of returning until the 8th of July, and a good many of them were doubtful whether they would be able to get back then. It would be very pleasant if I were away, to have gentlemen stay here, hanging around the Capitol, meeting in the morning, and adjourning until the next day, so as to give me my six dollars a day while I am gone; whether I should feel that it was honestly obtained or not, is another question. But it is certain that it would be six dollars a day in my pocket, with no benefit to the State or to the people, and certainly not very creditable to the body who would continue their sessions without adjournment, and without hoping to do business. We have been accused of fixing the time of our adjournments with the view to save our per diem compensation; but there are a good many gentlemen here, who voted for the adjournment, not believing that it would save them that compensation. I think if we vote in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, [Mr. C. L. Allen], we will relieve ourselves from any imputations that our former vote, to fix the adjournment from Wednesday next until Monday, was influenced by the motives that are attributed; that we did not intend to adjourn long enough to lose the six dollars a day, and at the same time get rid of work. I am in favor of adjourning until Monday, the 8th at 7½ o'clock, and I will state why. It may not be popular to say it, but I expect to be all day on Monday the 8th, riding through the dust and sun paying my whole expenses to Albany, to attend the Convention. I expect to arrive here and appear on the floor of the Convention at 7½ o'clock, and answer to my name. And I expect pay for that day, being engaged in the public business, traveling two hundred miles to get to my place of business, and answer to the roll call. I do not believe that I am called upon to do that at my own expense. I am compelled to go home and then I am compelled to return to attend to my duties. When I travel all day, and pay out as much for travel as I receive, and attend a session, I do not believe it is dishonest to ask that for that expense, I shall be remunerated. If gentlemen do not like it, they will vote down the proposition to meet on Monday, the 8th, at 7½ o'clock, and I will coincide with them in the vote; but I believe it is just that we should adjourn until that time. I believe there will be a quorum on that day, and then the resolutions will be ready—the ponds will be full, and they can be emptied again—and on Tuesday morning we can go to work.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. then announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. C. L. Allen.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Schoonmaker, and it was declared lost. A count being called for, it was taken, and the result declared: ayes, 14; noes, 25.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion to adjourn is lost; there is no quorum present.

Mr. HADLEY—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Hadley, and it was declared lost.

Mr. BICKFORD—How do we ascertain that there is no quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It was apparent from the vote taken, that there was no quorum.

Mr. WEED—It was not ascertained that there was no quorum present, but that there was no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair stated at the time, that there was no quorum present, which statement must be regarded, unless it was challenged at the time.

Mr. FULLER—I rise to a point of order, that it is necessary that there should be a quorum in order to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. ALVORD—For the purpose of making an explanation to the members of the Convention, I will make a motion for a call of the House, with the intention of withdrawing it, when I shall have concluded my remarks. The only way that we can get out of the dilemma in which we are now placed, by having a call or division, by means of which it is ascertained that there is no quorum present, is either to adjourn from day to day, until the time fixed by the Convention shall come, on Wednesday next (when we shall adjourn as a matter of course, under the order of the Convention, until the succeeding Monday), or sit here and have a call of the Convention, and on that motion have the sergeant-at-arms get enough members together so as to adjourn beyond Wednesday, at 11 o'clock. With this explanation I withdraw the motion for a call of the Convention.

Mr. LAPHAM—There are two modes, as I understand it, in which the fact that a quorum is not present, can be ascertained; one is a call of the roll, and the other is by taking the ayes and noes. Taking a vote by count, is no test whatever.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I rise to a point of order. that there is no question before the Convention.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WEED—I would like a leave of absence for myself until Wednesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—There is no quorum present to grant a leave of absence.

Mr. ALVORD—I rise to a question of order and privilege. I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall move a call of the Convention.

Mr. AXTELL—I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—I call for the ayes and noes on the motion of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell].

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. McDONALD—I would like to know if this Convention can now adjourn, except from day to day.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—It cannot.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Axtell to adjourn, and it was carried by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. Alvord, Andrews, Axtell, Bickford, E. A. Brown, Chesebro, Clinton, Cooke, Curtis, C. C. Dwight, T. W. Dwight, Eddy, Field, Fowler, Fuller, Goodrich, Gould, Kernan, Krum, Lapham, Lee, Millor, More, Paige, C. E. Parker, Prindle, Prosser, Rathbun, Rumsey, Schoonmaker, Seymour, Wakeman—32

Noes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Baker, Bell, Cochran, Corning, Folger, Hadley, Hale, Huntington, McDonald, Root, Roy, Smith, Wales, Weed—16.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

MONDAY, JULY 1.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M., the PRESIDENT pro tem., Mr. FOLGER, in the Chair.

The Journal of Saturday was read by the Secretary, and there being no objection thereto, it was declared approved.

Mr. ALVORD—I gave notice on Saturday, on a question of privilege, that, immediately after the reading of the Journal this day, I should move a call of this House, and I now, in pursuance of the notice move a call of this Convention. I understand, however, from gentlemen present here, that the probabilities are the call will not be seconded by the Convention, and under the circumstances attending our meeting, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Mr. E. A. BROWN presented the petition of A. M. Freedenburg and seventy-four other citizens of Martinsburgh, for a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the Select Committee on that subject.

Mr. FOWLER presented the petition of C. A. McNeal and others, for a provision in the Constitution, prohibiting the Legislature or municipal corporations from appropriating public funds to churches, schools, etc., of a sectarian character.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Also the petition of Miss Laura Bosworth and others, of Peterboro, for equal suffrage for men and women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole, having the subject in charge.

Mr. SCHELL presented the memorial of members of the bar of the city of New York, for a provision that the code of laws known as the Revised Statutes, shall hereafter be known as the "General Statutes," and that it shall also prescribe the manner in which laws altering or amending the same, shall be enacted.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. WAKEMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Bill of Rights, to inquire into the expediency of amending the Constitution so as to allow the party accused of crime to have the last appeal to the jury in reply to the counsel for the prosecution.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to examine and report upon the propriety and expediency of striking out the last paragraph of the 8th section of the 6th article of the Constitution of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—In the memorial of the Prison Association which I submitted to the Convention on Friday last, the name of one of the members of that committee was not attached, as he was not then in town. A telegram from him has been received authorizing his name to be attached, with the modification which I will read as follows:

"NEW YORK, JUNE 28TH.

I approve the proposed clause relating to prisons, striking out compensation. Provision should also be made for removal as in case of other officers for cause.

JOHN T. HOFFMAN."

I now move, sir, that this communication be added to the memorial, and that the memorial, with such addition, be printed in the Journal of Debates.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I do not remember the length of the memorial; but my memory is that it is of considerable length.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—The gentleman is mistaken; it is not lengthy.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—If that is so, I have no objection.

Mr. ALVORD—I would suggest to the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], that the ordinary rule is not to print the memorial in the debates; it comes in as a separate document.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—It ought to go on the Journal of Debates. It is a subject that has received great attention from the committee of the association, and it is one of great importance, and ought to be printed.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. T. W. Dwight, and it was declared carried.

The following is the memorial referred to:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: The memorial of the undersigned, a Committee of the Prison Association of New York on Prison Reform, respectfully report: That it is now more than two years since we were appointed by the Executive Committee of the Prison Association a committee to consider the present organization of our prisons, and to report a plan for their re-organization. During this period we have had the matter under consideration, and have been collecting facts and studying principles with a view to the satisfactory performance of the duty assigned us. In the prosecution of our labors, two of our number were commissioned in 1865 to visit other States and examine their prisons and prison systems. These gentlemen pursued the inquiries with which they were charged, in eighteen States, and to some extent in Canada also. They have embodied the results in an extended report, which is now going through the press, and will, as soon as issued, be laid upon the tables of the members. For further prosecution of the work required at our hands a commission was last year appointed, clothed with special power by the Legislature to call former, as well as present prison officers before them, and receive their statements under oath touching the condition and management of our prisons. Some twenty or more witnesses were examined, most of them gentlemen of great experience. A paper giving the results of the examination, together with the evidence itself as taken down from the witnesses, is printed in the twenty-second annual report of the Association, just printed, which report will also be laid upon the tables of the members. The undersigned do not propose to weary your honorable body with the details of the two investigations referred to. These will be found fully set forth in the reports, either placed, or to be placed, in your hands. We will content ourselves with a few brief references: In Pennsylvania party politics are not felt as a disturbing element in the management of the prisons. The Inspectors are appointed by the Supreme Court of the State, and they in turn choose the wardens; and these officers are retained in their positions without the slightest regard to their political opinions, as are also the subordinate officers appointed by them. As regards politics, it is much the same in Massachusetts. The appointment of the warden is made by the Governor and Council, and he holds his office as long as he is found faithful and is willing to serve. He also virtually appoints his subordinates, in doing which he never takes account of their party connections, and never removes an officer on that ground. In most of the other States, as well as our own, political influence exercises much power in the government and administration of the prisons, although in none of them, we believe, does this influence make itself felt to the same extent or operate so disastrously as in New York. Here it is the dominating power. The prisons constitute a part of the political machinery of the State, and in their management the interests both of the convict and the community are often sacrificed to that of the politician. This is the basis of the system. It lies at the root of most of all the evils connected with it; and, in particular, it is the cause of instability in the tenure of office, and in that want of permanence in the executive administration which render improvement difficult and all approach toward perfection quite out of the question. We freely acknowledge the utility and importance of party politics. Within its appropriate sphere it has generous and noble functions. Without its restraining force, the ruling power, intoxicated with its prerogative, unaided by the vigilance of opponents and released from all feeling of responsibility, would degenerate into despotism, and tyranny would hold a perpetual carnival. But there are some things which it touches only to mar. There are precious interests in reference to which the warning must be sounded: "Touch not, handle not." Religion is one of these. Education is another, and surely the penal institutions of the State constitute a third, since they combine, in a high degree, the characteristics of both the others, being at once, if they are what they ought to be, religious and educational. One of the main objects we have had in view in prosecuting the work confided to us has been to devise some means of divorcing, as far as practicable, our prisons from politics, and also of freeing them from this baneful and blighting influence. This divorce can be effected only by a change of constitutional provisions, and for such change our resource must be to your honorable body. We have prepared the draft of the article to be inserted, if it meet your approbation, in the amended Constitution which you were chosen to frame. This draft has been submitted to the Executive Committee of the Prison Association, and has been unanimously approved by them. It is in the words following, to wit:

"There shall be a Board of Governors of prisons, who shall have the charge and superintendence of the State prisons, and power to appoint the wardens or principal keepers, the chaplains, clerks and physicians thereof, and the power of removing the officers above named, and the other officers in the same; but such removal shall be for cause, and the accused shall, in all cases, be entitled to be informed of the charges against him, and to be heard in his own defense. Said board shall also have the superintendence, with power of visitation, of all institutions for the reformation of juvenile delinquents and the prevention of crime. It shall consist of five persons, to be appointed by the Governor, by and with the consent of the Senate, and shall hold office for ten years, except that the persons first appointed shall, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, be so classified that the term of one of the persons so appointed shall expire at the end of each two years during the first ten years. Any vacancies in office afterward occurring shall be filled in the same manner. They shall receive such compensation as shall be established by law. The Legislature may confer such powers and impose such duties upon said Board of Governors in respect to the county jails, local or district penitentiaries, and other penal institutions within the State as shall be deemed expedient."

We respectfully submit the foregoing paper to your consideration, in the hope that it may so approve itself to your judgment that by your official action it may be incorporated into the fundamental law of the State. And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

FRANCIS LIEBER,
JOHN H. GRISCOM,
E. C. WINES,
THEODORE W. DWIGHT,
N. F. ALLEN,
G. B. HUBBELL.

Mr. WAKEMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the Grand Jury and substituting instead a number of persons, not exceeding five, to be selected by the Board of Supervisors of the several counties of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAKER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature be requested to inquire into the expediency and justice of so amending the Constitution as to prohibit the Legislature from granting donations from the treasury of the State to any benevolent, charitable or religious institution or association, or to any sectarian college, school or association, except to the State Lunatic Asylum, the Idiot Asylum, and the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

General Orders having been reached in the order of business,

The SECRETARY announced the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND— I move to postpone the consideration of the report until the 9th day of July.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.— The motion of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], is hardly necessary, as there is no person present to move the consideration of the report.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND— It may be moved at some subsequent session, and my object is that it be postponed to a day positive.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.— The Chair did not understand that the motion of the gentleman was for a day certain.

Mr. BICKFORD— Would it not be well to go into a Committee of the Whole on the report now, and give an opportunity to put in amendments for future consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The motion of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], has precedence, being a motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. ALVORD—I hope my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] will withdraw his motion. It strikes me that we cannot postpone the consideration of the report until Tuesday the 9th instant, without its being made a special order, and that would require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—No, the motion does not contemplate that.

Mr. ALVORD—I ask the decision of the Chair on that point.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] does not require a two-thirds vote, inasmuch as it does not create a special order for the day named by him, the motion being only to postpone an order of business and not to set down for that day any particular subject for consideration.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. M. I. Townsend and it was declared carried.

Mr. FULLER—I move that this Convention do now adjourn to Monday evening at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. CASSIDY—I move to amend by making the hour to which we shall adjourn, Wednesday at half-past eleven o'clock. There has already a vote been taken that when we adjourn on Wednesday, we adjourn at that hour until the following Monday. If we adjourn now until Wednesday, we will complete the order.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The Chair will state that if the amendment of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy] prevails, it will be necessary for the Convention to meet again on Wednesday.

Mr. CASSIDY—But if we adjourn to half-past eleven on that day, the order of the Convention is that we adjourn at that hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—The amendment of the gentleman would require the officers of the Convention to be here to adjourn the Convention on that day.

Mr. FULLER—The Chair decided on Saturday that it would be in order, notwithstanding the resolution adopted, to adjourn on Wednesday next, to move to adjourn over until a week from Monday evening. That being so, sir, the only object there could be in adjourning over until Wednesday would be to save our per diem. I for one, am not anxious for that kind of distinction. I was one of those who voted to continue the business of this Convention during three days of this week. I did it in good faith, for the purpose of forwarding the business in order that we might get through in time to submit our labors to the people at the next general election, which we shall not be able to do, unless we make progress faster than we have so far. If those who voted with me to continue the business of the session during this week had stayed in their places, we should have had a quorum, but a majority of them having deserted, we are left without one. How they can reconcile their conduct to their conscience, I am unable to say; I will leave that to them. Inasmuch as we are left without a quorum, there can be no object in adjourning over from day to day until Wednesday, except to save our per diem, and, for one, I prefer to adjourn to-day until next Monday, at half-past seven o'clock.

Mr. CASSIDY—I withdraw the amendment offered by me. I had no such motive in offering it as the one stated by the gentleman from Monroe [Mr. Fuller]. I only wanted to conform the action of the Convention to the order of business already taken. I quite agree with the gentleman in his statement of how little commendable it is for members to avoid their per diem duties while getting their per diem pay.

Mr. WAKEMAN—Did I understand the Chair to say that it would be necessary for the officers of the Convention to be here on Wednesday next?

The PRESIDENT pro tem.—That it would be under the amendment of the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Cassidy].

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Fuller, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned to Monday evening, July 8th, at half-past seven o'clock.

MONDAY, JULY 8, 1867.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, at 7½ o'clock P. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. AMBROSE O'NEILL.

The Journal of Monday, July 1st, was read by the Secretary and was declared approved.

The PRESIDENT announced the following communication:

ORDERED, That this Convention cordially responds to the proposal made by the Constitutional Convention of the State of New York for an exchange of Journal, debates and proceedings, and that the Secretary be instructed to send regularly to that Convention ten copies of the journal of proceedings of this body, and also to communicate the fact that this Convention has not provided for the publication of its debates, and therefore cannot comply with the proposed exchange in that particular.

By order, MILTON Y. KIDD, Secretary.

Which was referred to the select committee having the subject in charge.

Mr. FOWLER presented the petition of Gerrit Smith and one hundred and eighty others, in favor of female suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCHRAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Militia and Military Officers to consider the availability of the following amendment:

1. In the organization of the National Guard of this State, a list of reserve officers shall be included, to be composed of officers of the National Guard, who have served three years in some grade, and of United States volunteer officers who have been honorably mustered out of the United States service, and who are now, or may become citizens of this State.

2. Officers entitled to positions in the National Guard reserve list, shall be commissioned as officers of the National Guard reserves by the Governor, on their application to him, and shall have rank equal to the highest held previously by them, by brevet or otherwise, in the National Guard, State of New York, or in the volunteer service of the United States, and, in time of peace, shall be at liberty to resign from the same at their pleasure.

3. National Guard reserve officers shall be exempt from all military duty, except such as they may be placed upon, by the direct orders of the Governor.

4. National Guard reserve officers when placed temporarily on any important military duty, shall receive the pay and allowances of United States army officers of the same grades, while actually engaged upon such military service.

5. National Guard reserve officers shall be entitled to wear a badge of honor upon the breast, to be prescribed by the Governor.

6. In fixing the number of the National Guard, the Legislature shall specify that the same shall be exclusive of the National Guard reserve officers.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Militia and Military Officers.

Mr. LEE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Canals be instructed to consider and report to this Convention, its opinion as to the expediency of inserting a provision in the Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from granting extra compensation to any and all parties contracting to do work for the State, or to pass any law authorizing any other body or board to award extra compensation for the same.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. LEE, also, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be respectfully requested to report to this Convention, at his earliest convenience, the number and amounts of awards paid by him or his predecessors in office, from 1846 to 1866 inclusive, as extra compensation to contractors for labor and materials furnished to the State, by what authority said awards were made—to whom, and when they were paid.

Which was laid on the table under the rule.

Mr. GOULD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Bill of Rights be requested to inquire into the expediency of incorporating the "right to testify" among the natural rights of mankind.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

Mr. BARTO offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Education, etc., to inquire into the propriety of abolishing the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction, and to return to and devolve upon the Secretary of State the powers and duties of such officer—or in the event of the continuance of the office, to make the same elective by the people for a term of three years.

Which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. GOULD asked for a leave of absence for three days to attend the State Agricultural Society at Buffalo.

Which was granted.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, the Convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, JULY 9.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. EDWARD BAYARD.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary and was declared approved.

Mr. SILVESTER—I desire to ask leave to correct the Journal of Friday, June 28. I was not in my seat when the Journal of that day was read, and this is the first opportunity I have had to make the application.

The PRESIDENT—The Journal of that day has been approved.

Mr. SILVESTER—I was not in my seat at that time and, I believe, that once before this practice has been adopted by the Convention.

The PRESIDENT—If there is no objection the Journal will be corrected.

Mr. SILVESTER—The amendment I wish to make is thus: the word "unless," should not be in the resolution. The object of the resolution was to make a person a competent witness upon a trial. I would like to have it appear on the minutes of to-day what the whole of the resolution was, which was referred to that committee.

The resolution corrected as desired by Mr. Silvester is as follows:

Resolved, That it be referred to the appropriate committee, to inquire into the expediency of providing in the Constitution that any member of the Legislature who shall receive or accept of, any money or valuable thing for his vote upon any measure, or who shall propose to enter into an agreement with any other member that either will vote in a particular manner upon any measure, if the other will vote in a particular manner upon another measure, if such proposition shall be carried into effect, shall be punishable by deprivation of the right to vote and hold office; but the person who has offered, or paid, or delivered such money or valuable thing, or who has assented to such proposition for such exchange of votes, if such proposition has been carried into effect, shall not be liable to any penalty or punishment, and shall be a competent and compellable witness upon the trial of the member who has accepted such money or valuable thing, or who has made such proposition.

Mr. JOHN MAGEE, a delegate, appeared in the Convention and was administered the constitutional oath of office by the President, and took his seat.

Mr. KINNEY presented the petition of 112 citizens of Waverly, Tioga county, praying for some provision in the Constitution that shall prohibit the donation of public moneys to charitable institutions of a sectarian character.

Which was referred to the Committee on Charitable Institutions.

Mr. ENDRESS presented the petition of Emma C. Lawrence and twenty others, citizens of Westchester, asking the right of suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MURPHY presented the petition of Thomas U. Cashow and eighteen others, citizens of Kings county, asking suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FULLERTON presented the petition of Mary J. Quackenbush and fifteen others, citizens of Newburgh, asking suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VAN CAMPEN presented the petition of Mary E. Mead and thirty others, citizens of Westchester county, asking for the right of suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BEADLE presented the petition of Mrs. W. S. Shute, Mary C. Bristol, and one hundred and twenty others, citizens of Horse Heads, asking for equal suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT presented the memorial of the committee of the New York Prison Association on Pardons, by Dr. Francis Lieber, chairman.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Pardoning Power.

Mr. HAMMOND presented the petition of Mrs. J. C. Holmes and fifteen others, citizens of Westchester county, asking for equal suffrage.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALES presented two memorials relating to the re-organization of the Court of Appeals, etc.

Which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT presented the memorial of a citizen of Utica, respecting the investment of the funds of educational institutions in registered bonds of the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. GRAVES presented two petitions, one from Jane E. Turner, Rev. C. H. Bebee, and fifty-six others of Bridgewater, Oneida county, and one from Julia M. Sherwood and twenty-two other citizens of Westchester county, asking for the right of suffrage for women.

Which were referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I hold in my hand a memorial from the citizens of the county of Allegany, earnestly remonstrating against the abandonment or discontinuance of the Genesee Valley canal. I will briefly state its contents. This petition alleges that the original cost of that canal was very largely enhanced by the Stop law of 1842, in consequence of which many of its structures were deteriorated and went to decay. The petition further says there has been subsequently great improvidence, want of economy in the expenditures on it and in its superintendence and management. The petition further states that the section of country through which this canal passes, particularly the counties of Livingston, Wyoming, Allegany and Cattaraugus, have been subject of late years to sudden and violent floods, unprecedented in the history of the country, and that the structures upon this canal were defective and not capacitated to discharge the rapidly accumulated waters, in consequence of which they were torn out and the canal in many instances partially destroyed; that this accounts to a great extent for the decrease of tolls upon this canal in the last few years; that in consequence of the uncertainty of navigation, articles of freight have sought other channels in the market. The petition further states, that down the Allegany river to Pittsburg, lumber has been run in large quantities; that when the canal is saved this superfluous expense, which the petition charges should not be made a ground of odium against the canal, it will present a favorable exhibit and commend itself to the favorable consideration of the people of the State. The petition further states that it has developed to a large extent that section of the country, adding largely to the value of the property; that its abandonment would reduce the assessed valuation of the property in several counties very materially; that if economy can obtain in the management of this canal it will be a paying canal, and will add largely to the revenues of the State; that there are forests of pine and hemlock timber which will seek this canal as tributary to the Erie canal in the market, and that extensive coal beds have been opened in Pennsylvania which will furnish permanent and enduring freight. I ask the reference of this petition to the proper committee.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I have a memorial in my hand from numerous citizens of Northern Pennsylvania, bearing upon the question of the prospective trade of the Genesee Valley and Erie canals. In view of the source from which this memorial emanates and the important fact it suggests in reference to our canal system, I ask that the memorial be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the memorial.

During the reading Mr. BERGEN moved that the further reading of the memorial be dispensed with.

Which was carried.

Mr. ENDRESS—As this is a subject of the last degree of importance, and one which is going to have an important bearing upon the vote upon the Constitution which may be proposed, equal to any other question, I move that this memorial be printed. I come, sir, from a part of the State which takes a deep interest in the Genesee Valley canal, that is, the county of Livingston. The memorial contains an argument which will be sought for and gladly read by the people of Monroe, Livingston, Allegany and Cattaraugus counties, and I propose, by having it published, to put it into the hands of those citizens.

There being no objection the memorial was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Canals.

The memorial is in the words the following:

To the Honorable the Constitutional Convention for the State of New York, assembled at Albany:

The memorial of the undersigned, citizens of the county of McKean and Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, respectfully represent.

We have learned with sorrow and surprise that a proposition is now pending before your honorable body for a discontinuance or abandonment of the Genesee Valley canal.

We feel confident such a proposition would not for a moment be entertained if the people of your State and the members of your Convention were fully advised of its certain prospective financial value, its importance as a feeder to the Erie canal, and as affording the means of supply to your mechanical and manufacturing interests.

You cannot correctly judge of it by what it has done, or to this time has failed to do.

Its incomplete condition and small capacity for transportation has deterred parties who would desire to employ it from making the considerable outlays for placing freight on it, which would otherwise have been done, and which would at once be done if they could be assured it would be made a reliable means of transportation.

We beg leave, respectfully, to call your attention to a few facts:

The G. V. canal terminates at the Allegany river, with which it is united by a lock at Millgrove, one mile from the south line of your State. It practically terminates in Pennsylvania, ten miles south of the line of your State, as the river is navigable for boats for that distance, and has been constantly used for their transportation since the canal has been built. A steam tug is now making daily trips from the southern terminus of the canal ten miles up the Allegany river.

The county of McKean, in Pennsylvania, which lies immediately adjoining Cattaraugus and Allegany in your own State, contains extensive deposits of bituminous coal of superior quality for the forge, for gas, fuel and generating steam.

Its quantity and quality have been fully demonstrated, and though some parties who have made investments in coal lands in McKean county have been disappointed and deceived in the character of the lands they purchased, all who are at all conversant with this region admit the large extent and good quality of the coal. With the reasonable price afforded by water transportation, the demand for it in western New York and southern Canada will be only measured by the supply. It will be reached in ample quantities at the distance of fourteen to twenty-two miles from the G. V. canal.

A charter was procured from the Legislature of Pennsylvania at its last session, authorizing the improvement of the Allegany river from the terrinus of the Genesee Valley canal and the construction of a canal or railroad thence to the coal mines. It is confidently expected work will soon commence on this improvement, particularly if the capitalists who have it in contemplation can be assured the Genesee Valley canal will be held and maintained in a condition to render it a reliable means of transportation for the heavy freight which will thus be thrown upon it. It will be safe to say this improvement will give the Genesee Valley canal, in coal alone, one thousand tons per day, during the season of canal navigation, from the Bunker Hill mines, near Bishop's Summit. Immediately south of this lies the extensive coal fields of Elk and Cameron counties. There are now in full working operation not less than ten companies who are shipping by the Pennsylvania and Erie railroad, all of whom are earnestly desirous of sending their coal North to market, and would do so via the Genesee Valley canal, if it could be relied on. From these and the anthracite and bituminous coal regions further south, vast quantities will also be thrown upon this canal by the Buffalo and Washington Railroad which is to be immediately constructed. This railroad is now under contract and work will commence on it in this State as soon as the proper surveys can be made, engineers now being engaged in completing its location. It will connect with the P. & E. R. R. at Emporium, in Cameron county, and run north, crossing the Genesee Valley canal at Portville or Olean.

In addition to this freight, there will be afforded millions upon millions of lumber annually, this whole region being heavily covered with valuable timber. The country also abounds in iron ore which at no distant day will be extensively worked and will look to your State for a market.

There is now constructed and fully equipped, a first-class railroad, running from the Erie railway, at Carrollton, to the Lafayette coal mines in this county, a distance of twenty-five miles.

By this road, and using the Erie railway for the distance of eleven miles, the Genesee Valley canal is reached at Olean.

There are now organized at Lafayette six coal companies, "to wit:" The McKean company (bituminous), with a present capacity for producing and delivering by their lateral railroad one hundred tons per day, and they have prepared a place at Cuba for the transshipment of their coal from the cars to the boats of the Genesee Valley canal. The Lafayette coal company are now shipping one hundred and fifty tons per day, via Dunkirk to Buffalo and Rochester. This company shipped last year by the Genesee Valley canal one thousand five hundred tons, and would have shipped one hundred tons per day if the canal had been in good order, and would now ship three hundred tons per day if they had the means of cheap water communication. They also have a chute at Dunkirk for transshipment to boats on the lake.

The Bond Vein coal company are shipping fifty tons per day. The Kinzua coal company are prepared to ship seventy-five tons per day. The Longwood Coal Company are shipping fifty tons per day.

The Tunungwunt coal company have their mines opened and are prepared to ship seventy-five tons per day.

It has been estimated by persons competent to judge, that from the Lafayette coal field alone there could be delivered next season two thousand tons per day, and much the greater part would seek a market by this canal if it could be relied on.

Connected with this memorial we send a map, showing very accurately the true position of this mineral region to your State and its public improvements, with distances, elevations, etc., to a careful examination of which we respectfully beg your attention.

Mr. BAKER presented the petition of D. C. Cox, and others, citizens of Montgomery county on the same subject.

Which took the same reference.

The PRESIDENT presented a petition of citizens of New York, asking that a separate clause be submitted as a part of the Constitution, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the select committee having charge of that subject.

Mr. DUGANNE presented the petition of citizens of Kings county in reference to bribery and corruption.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Suppression of Official Corruption.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Clerk of the Court of Appeals in answer to a resolution of the Convention adopted June 31st.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND moved that the communication be printed.

Which was carried.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Contingent Expenses, submitted the following report:

Your committee, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Hitchcock, requiring the Secretary of this Convention to procure twenty diagrams of this Chamber for each member, officer and reporter, respectfully report:

That upon the proper inquiry they have ascertained that the cost of each copy would be thirty cents, making the aggregate expense $1,140, (eleven hundred and forty dollars).

These diagrams are regarded by your committee as more ornamental than useful, and they are unwilling, for obvious reasons, to advise the incurring of any expenditure of money which is not manifestly necessary. In the absence of such necessity, we need not discuss the question as to the power and right of this Convention to incur an expense of this character, further than to remark that it evidently was not contemplated by the Legislature when the act was framed under which we are now assembled.

Your committee therefore recommend the resolution be not adopted.

Which was adopted

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That there should be a provision in the Constitution substantially as follows:

It is hereby declared to be a right of the people of this State, at all times, and by all efficient means, to catch and take fish in any of the salt waters in or bordering upon this State, and in all arms of the sea, and rivers where the tide ebbs and flows, and in the waters of the lakes Erie and Ontario, and the rivers Niagara and St. Lawrence, and to sell and dispose of the fish so taken; and such right not to be restricted, except so far as may be necessary to prevent trespass and practices detrimental to this, and other industrial interests of the people.

Mr. BICKFORD—There are several committees to which this resolution might be referred; but I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

Mr. STRATTON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the city of New York be requested to prepare, and communicate to this Convention, as early as practicable, the amounts paid for the year 1866, for salaries of justices, judges, clerks, stenographers, officers, interpreters and attendants, and the amounts paid for stationery and contingent expenses, of the following named courts in the city of New York, stating the number of justices, judges, clerks and other attendants, of each court separately, and all other expenses of each court separately, as far as he is able to do so; and also whether said amounts are to be increased or diminished the present year, and how much, viz.: Supreme Court, Superior Court, Court of Common Pleas, Marine Court, District Courts, Police Courts, and the Courts of General and Special Sessions; and that he also report the amount of fees received from each of said courts during said year.

Mr. ROGERS—I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The resolution laid over under the rule.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the special committee on that subject, to inquire and report whether legislative corruption in this State is not largely, if not mainly due to the moneyed influences of overgrown corporations, particularly railroad corporations; and if so, what remedy can be devised for so great a mischief.

Which was referred to the Committee on the suppression of Official Corruption.

Mr. LEE called up the resolution offered by himself yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be respectfully requested to report to this Convention, at his earliest convenience, the sum-ber and amounts of awards paid by him or his predecessors in office, from 1846 to 1866, inclusive, as extra compensation to contractors for labor and materials furnished the State; by what authority said awards were made; to whom and when they were paid.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Lee, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education be instructed to inquire into the expediency of permitting donors of funds devoted permanently to the endowment of educational institutions, to pay them into the State Treasury, to be invested in registered bonds of the State. Such bonds to be held by an officer of the treasury, who shall pay the interest or income of any such fund to the institution for whose endowment it is bestowed. The same committee shall also inquire into the expediency of permitting trustees of colleges, academies, etc., to invest their permanent funds in like manner, and of requiring a regular account of the amount and investment of the principal, and payment of the income of all such funds, to be published annually as an appendix to the Session Laws.

Which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. GREELEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole and proceed to consider the report of the Standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The PRESIDENT—Will the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] withdraw his resolution for a moment, to present a communication?

Mr. GREELEY—Certainly.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the State Engineer and Surveyor in answer to a resolution of the Convention, adopted June 26, 1867.

Which was laid on the table.

Mr. FOLGER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the use of this chamber be granted to the American Equal Rights Association, for a meeting on the evening of Wednesday the 10th inst.

Mr. GREELEY—I object to the consideration of that resolution now, as I wish to ask the Convention to conclude its debates on that subject by that evening.

Mr. FOLGER—I will not ask for it if the chamber is occupied by the Convention.

Mr. ROGERS—I would ask if this does not require a two-thirds vote of this House.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair is not aware of any such rule.

Mr. ALVORD—I trust that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will allow his resolution to lie over, because the fact is that, when we get through resolutions which are now the order of business, then this report will come up, as a matter of course, under the rule, without the necessity of any resolution upon his part; but now it will require a two-thirds vote to take up the report.

Mr. GREELEY—I must persist in my resolution; I waited until I thought there was no more business before the Convention, and I trust the resolution will now be adopted.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that Rule 3 provides for the regular order of business, and that, except on days and at times set apart for the consideration of special orders, the order of business shall not be departed from except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT proceeded to call the regular orders, and there being no further business,

The CONVENTION resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN—Under the rule, unless otherwise required by the committee, the report of the committee, as far as regards the article proposed, will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. GREELEY—I move that the reading be dispensed with.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope not. I call for the reading of the report, and hope it will be read.

The SECRETARY then proceeded to read the article proposed by the committee.

Mr. ROGERS—On that I call for the ayes and noes.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rogers] that there is no question before the committee.

Mr. FOLGER—Are amendments now in order, or must the article be read by sections?

The CHAIRMAN—It must be read by sections.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the first section as follows:

"§ 1. Every man of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding an election, and for the last thirty days a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the election district where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election, in said district, and not elsewhere, for all officers elected by the people.

"Provided, That idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship, felons and persons convicted of bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights, shall not be entitled to vote. No person who shall at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall vote at any election. No person who shall receive, expect to receive, pay, or offer to pay, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at an election, shall vote at such election; and, upon challenge for such cause, the person so challenged shall, before the inspectors receive his vote, swear or affirm before such inspectors that he has not received, does not expect to receive, has not paid nor offered to pay, any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at such election. Laws may be passed excluding from voting at an election every person, who shall have made, or who shall be interested in, a bet or wager depending upon the result thereof."

Mr. FOLGER—I move the following amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

On page 2. Strike out lines 11 and 12 down to and including the word "election" in the 12th line.

Mr. CARPENTER—I wish to offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Amend by adding to section 1 the following words:

Provided, further, That any person not a qualified voter at the time when this proviso shall take effect shall not thereafter vote at any election, unless able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his name; and inability so to read or write shall be cause for challenge at the polls; but this proviso shall not apply to any person prevented by physical disability from reading or writing, as aforesaid.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], that his proposition is not germane to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. CARPENTER—I wish to offer that as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and while proposing to amend section 1 of article 2, as reported by the committee, by adding thereto the words of this proviso, I desire to state that if the proposition shall be approved by the Convention, it seems proper that it should be submitted separately to the judgment of the people, so that, standing entirely upon its merits, it may receive their indorsement, or fail by the expression of their disapproval. The article reported by the committee as a substitute for article 2 of the existing Constitution, provides that "every man of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been an inhabitant of this State for one year next preceding an election, and for the last thirty days a citizen of the United States, and a resident of the election district where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election, in said district, and not elsewhere, for all officers elected by the people." To which general provision an exception is made of certain classes notoriously incompetent, of persons convicted of heinous crimes, and of persons under restraint or a contingent undue influence. The minority of the committee have offered as an amendment to the report of the majority the following resolution:

Resolved, That a proposition further to extend the elective franchise to colored men be submitted to be voted on separately from the rest of the Constitution."

Since, in the proposed article, complexion is not made a disqualification, and therefore the elective franchise could not be further extended to colored persons than by the terms therein expressed, I think I am correct in construing the minority report to be substantially a proposition to retain article 11 of the existing Constitution, and to submit separately for adoption or rejection by the people, a provision conferring upon colored men further elective privileges than are now allowed to them. From a careful reading of the two reports emanating from the Suffrage Committee, I have been unable to discover any discordance of views upon a question of principle that may not be effectually harmonized by the adoption of this amendment, while concurring mainly in the majority report, and believing that the great principle of manhood suffrage should be distinctly enunciated as the rule, a course dictated not only by sound logic, but by the precedent established by the Convention of 1846, still, if any modification of the general rule not based upon crime or what is generally deemed absolute incompetency is to be recommended for adoption, I regard it not improper, that such modification should be submitted separately for the independent consideration of the electors of the State. For the purpose, therefore, of enabling this Convention to unite upon a proposition, modifying the general rule of suffrage—a proposition founded upon principle, and which can be sustained alike by sound reason and State policy, I have offered this amendment, and shall state briefly the reasons that have convinced me that its adoption would be not only proper but exceeding desirable. The justice or injustice of any restriction upon suffrage depends upon the fact whether the exercise of the elective function be an inherent right or a privilege. If it be a right, absolute and inalienable, then every proscription of its exercise, founded upon age, or class, or sex, or conduct, is not only arbitrary but tyrannical. Under our system of government, which allows the widest latitude of rights and privileges, there is no right, not even to life itself, that is perfectly absolute. The very term and every page of the world's history prove the elective franchise to be a privilege and not a right. The power to prescribe qualifications in an officer has never been disputed, then why with equal propriety may they not be prescribed for an elector? The rule is, that every person may engage in honorable labor, and control his earnings, but the Constitution provides that the lawyer must exhibit a certain degree of learning and intelligence before being admitted to practice in the courts, and this limitation has never been termed oppressive. There is hardly a right upon which either as a punishment or a protection, expediency and state policy have not put a limit. In all matters not of inherent God-given right, the authority of the State to exercise such discrimination as will inure to its own protection, cannot be seriously disputed, and certainly nothing is of more vital importance to the State, or more desirable for it to secure by wholesome regulation than an intelligent and spotless exercise of the elective privilege. Granted, then, that the people may justly restrict suffrage, it does not follow that the restriction could be vindicated except upon an equitable basis and for the public welfare. I read from the minority report for the purpose of correcting an erroneous impression therein contained, and of demonstrating that the people have sought merely intelligent suffrage, although by a different test than the one now proposed. In that report is the following statement:

"As respects the extension of suffrage to colored the same as to white citizens of the State, the undersigned submit that if the regeneration of political society is to be sought in the incorporation of this element into the constituency, it must be done by the direct and explicit vote of the electors. We are foreclosed from any other course by the repeated action of the State. In 1846 this question was submitted in a separate article to be voted on, at the same time with the Constitution itself; and was negatived by a vote of 223,884 to 85,306. It was again submitted in 1850, and was again defeated by a vote of 337,984 to 197,503. A similar submission was provided by a concurrent resolution of the legislature of 1859, which, by the neglect of the State officer to provide for its publication, was defeated; but its fate may fairly be regarded as further evidence of the indifference of the public toward a change. The undersigned are of opinion that the Convention will depart from its representative character if, after these repeated manifestations of the popular will, it should enact this extension of the suffrage without such a separate submission."

The fact that equal suffrage to colored persons was defeated by a large majority of the votes cast upon that question in 1846, and also upon a subsequent submission in 1860, does not prove that the people of this State regard color as a disqualification for the elective franchise; because the Constitution adopted in 1846 allowed to colored citizens who had paid tax upon freeholds worth $250 the privilege of voting. If color had been the objection, suffrage would not have been conferred upon any of that class. Nor does it follow from the result just stated, that the people desire a property qualification; because, if in favor of such a qualification, they would have applied it to all classes and complexions; but in 1826 the electors of the State decided almost unanimously against suffrage by chattels instead of by men. There has never been an election held in this State but that colored men have been allowed to vote, and by the adoption of three separate Constitutions, the people have thrice proclaimed the fact that color should not be made the test of voting capacity, and that the Declaration of Independence was not a brazen falsehood. At three separate elections, in 1826 and in 1845 and '46, they sought to declare that men and not money should control the government, and few will now be found to deny that the most lowly citizen is entitled to equal protection and equal privileges with the most opulent, and that the powers of government are needed principally for the protection of the weak against the strong. The vote against equal suffrage to colored persons proved only that some of that class were not regarded as sufficiently intelligent to properly discharge the duties of an elector, and the possession of property, that most unreliable of all indices of mental vigor or culture, was retained as a condition, nor for the purpose of representing property in preference to humanity, but in deference to the antiquated political heresy, originating at a period when learning was confined to the monasteries, that the number of an individual's ideas could be determined by counting his coin, and that wealth and wisdom were synonymous terms. But in this age, marked by the general diffusion of letters, by enterprise and monetary fluctuations, an argument for property as a test of knowledge would be an argument to prove that the child of opulent parentage is a sage from birth, like Minerva, the personified symbol of wisdom springing full-armed from the brain of Jove, and that a larceny of goods is necessarily a taking of reason. The only true test of intelligence is that which can be applied directly to mind itself, and be answered from the brain. Of every ten opponents of equal suffrage, at least nine, and perhaps the ten, will declare that they oppose it because they know some colored men whom they regard as incapable of voting intelligently. Hardly in one case out of a hundred will either color or poverty be mentioned as a disqualification. Therefore, every other reasonable hypothesis being excluded, an alleged want of intelligence in a portion of the colored population appears to be the sole reason why the elective franchise has been denied to many as well qualified for it as the Caucasian race. If, then, ignorance in a colored citizen renders it unsafe for him to deposit the ballot, is not ignorance in any other citizen equally dangerous to the welfare of the State? Consequently, if there is to be any modification of the elective franchise, let it be based upon a groundwork of principle, looking only to intelligence and intrinsic worth, and making no invidious distinction between those equally capable of its exercise. This proposition has commended itself to my judgment:

1. Because under our system of elections, by secret ballot, it is absolutely impossible for a citizen to vote intelligently unless he can write, or at least read the words contained in his ballot. Our elective system is founded upon the theory that every elector will indicate at the polls his preference for officers or principles, in such a manner as not to be subjected to an undue influence, and so that his action shall not be elsewhere called in question. The person who is unable to prepare his own ballot makes his exercise of the elective privilege a mere chance in a lottery. He might with equal propriety draw from a wheel the folded ballot that he is about to deposit; though intending to vote for John Doe, he can never testify, nor feel absolutely certain, that he did not vote for Richard Roe. The purity of the ballot-box has been aptly termed the palladium of our liberties, and in a Republic the government is simply an assertion of power by a majority of electors. But what evidence have we that the result of any election is an expression of opinion by the majority, so long as, in the very nature of things, a portion of the electors cannot know what opinion they have expressed? Perhaps next to the actual and corrupt purchase of votes, nothing has contributed more to election frauds than the struggle for that class who must necessarily vote at the dictation of others. Through ignorance, the door is opened wide for a deception more benignant than statutory crimes. The trusted guardian of another's principles is given a double voice and a double power to be used either for a good or an evil purpose—and where is the difference in effect whether a person casts five votes in his own name, or one for himself and four for his political wards. It is evident, therefore, that for the safety and welfare of the State, the elective system should be so regulated as to require from any person merely the expression of his own opinion, and not to render necessary the delegation of that privilege to another.

2. A very great advantage to be derived from the operation of this amendment would be the stimulus given to education, not that education under our democratic system should be made compulsory, but the State, for its own protection and prosperity, should give to it a proper encouragement. The State has already provided opportunities for a common school education to all her children, and further than this it seems proper that the public purse should not be opened. The State has done this for two reasons, both in effect the same:

1st. Because it would be better defended and protected by an intelligent people.

2d. Because that knowledge which would enable a person better to advance his own interests would make him at the same time a more useful public citizen.

This provision is not in the nature of a penalty, because no person is required to attend school or to learn, but it is in effect saying to the young men, every opportunity is offered, and you have plenty of time to acquire an education; but, if with these opportunities you neglect to advance your own interests by preparing yourselves for the ordinary business of life, you are not proper persons to be trusted with the government of the State. And surely the liberties of the people cannot be intrusted to the care of any person who, now arriving at manhood, has not learned to read the English language, or to write his name. Under the operation of this proposed provision there is hardly a young man in the State but that in less than two years would be able to read and write. The effect, therefore, would be to prepare a certain class to become better citizens, or by limitation of suffrage, to render them less powerful for harm. The operation of this measure would not be harsh; no penalty is exacted, and the number to be effected is comparatively small. It is not retrospective, as it deprives no citizen of a privilege which he has hitherto enjoyed, and even in its future application it looks with clarity upon those whom misfortune has deprived of the means of acquiring or of displaying the required proficiency. It will go into effect at a time, and its provisions are such that those who have contributed, either by their means or personal services, to carry the Republic safely through its struggle for integrity, will still continue, to the same extent, to direct its destinies. The infant in his cradle, twenty-one years ago, when the last Convention was held, has become the full grown man and the elector of to-day. During this long intervening period the arts and sciences have progressed and society has become enlightened to such an extent, that the people must be prepared for greater enlightenment in the government—not that principles and rules of right are fluctuating, but because prejudice and bigotry gradually vanish as the light of reason grows brighter, and a fuller measure of justice can be safely meted out to a people that have become better educated in truth. Probably, however, in this body, there are delegates who will in some instances refrain from advocating propositions that seem more equitable than certain existing provisions of our organic law, for the simple reason that the mass of the people are unprepared to indorse them, and they must be postponed until a more propitious hour. The homely apothegm "Half a loaf is better than no bread," is as true in the political as in the domestic world. And that is not a wise statesmanship that rejects a beneficent measure because it falls short of what is desirable, but at the time unattainable, nor is he a true friend of progress who seeks to accomplish in a day the work properly allotted to years. Now it is desirable that every citizen should be an intelligent elector, but he cannot be made such by being simply so declared; but by patiently waiting under the operation of the proposed test; but few years will elapse before intelligent suffrage, at least, by male citizens of lawful age, will become universal. And if it be true that the extension of suffrage is resisted on the ground of incompetency, the people of the State will have, through the separate submission of this question, an opportunity to render a distinct verdict thereon, and whatever the verdict may be, the matter of the elective franchise will be decided and settled for years at least. If the objection be to incompetency, the failure to submit a limiting clause based upon sound principles of general application, may endanger the adoption of any desirable reforms submitted in the Constitution itself. The objections that may be urged to this amendment are referred to in the report of the majority of the committee, and are substantially these:

1. Literary acquirements are not a criterion of voting capacity.

2. Some who pay taxes would not be allowed to vote.

3. Corrupt inspectors of election would violate the law for partisan purposes.

What force there may be in these objections, it is proper briefly to consider. As to the first, it may be admitted that some men of the highest literary attainments are perfectly unreliable in matters of business, and evince no practical knowledge of the affairs of government, and that some of the best minds of the State have not received even the rudiments of an education, but these admissions prove nothing. With the present opportunities for education, it will hardly be disputed that the number of teachable young men approaching the age of twenty-one, who cannot read and write, is very limited, and the mental capacity of those who have not mastered the alphabet is doubtless little superior to their proficiency. I do not mean to say that all who can read and write are for that reason intelligent electors; but I do say that it is among the impossibilities for a person to vote both intelligently and independently by ballot unless he can himself prepare the ticket. This proposition will not admit of argument—it is a postulate. Under a viva voce system of elections the same rule would not apply. Now, what milder test of intelligence can be devised, so as to include every one possibly competent, than to ascertain the voter's ability to read the Constitution and write his name. Perhaps it may be thought a more serious objection that certain tax payers would not be allowed to vote. Undoubtedly the amount of tax paid by this class would be exceedingly small, but if a single farthing were unjustly taken, the crime would be as great as though it were a million. Still it is difficult to discover greater iniquity in taxing a person incapable through prescribed forms of expressing an opinion, than in taxing him who has voted against an expenditure which he conscientiously regarded as unlawful and unjust. But in either case the individual, if he expects to continue a member of society, must submit to what is deemed for the greatest good of the greatest number. The cry of "no taxation without representation" was a watchword in the revolution; and it has descended to us sanctified by the hallowed history and tradition of that period. Converted into a maxim, it should be retained and perpetuated, for although like all generalities, not strictly true, it embodies a principle that should not be ignored in government. States and communities, however, never have, and probably never will act strictly upon the rule there asserted. There is not a single class deprived of suffrage by the article proposed by the committee (except paupers, and they sometimes ought to be taxed) but that are liable to taxation. Women, including mature maidens and widows, are non-voters, but nevertheless tax payers. Minors are subject to taxation, and so are aliens holding real estate, and this list could be extended to a formidable catalogue of special cases. By act of Congress all incomes derived in the United States, whether by citizens or aliens, whether by residents or non-residents, are subject to taxation. We are often misled by high sounding terms. The just and unconditional rule is not "there shall be no taxation without representation," but it is this "there shall be no taxation without adequate protection," and taxation of non-voting classes has been fully justified on the ground that the taxes assessed upon them are but a just compensation and equivalent for the protection afforded them by the government. And if in this case any complaint should arise at bearing the burdens imposed by others, such complaint can properly come only from the delinquent himself, in whose power it lies to give a speedy application of the remedy. This question of taxation and representation, like all other questions, is subject to regulation, the State having reference to its own safety perpetuity. Now, there is the third objection, to wit: the bias and improper conduct of inspectors, and this, of course, has reference to the practical working of the law; and so long as men are human, and not angelic, we must expect frauds and misdemeanors. There are, doubtless, frauds in registrations, frauds in depositing ballots, frauds in the canvassing of votes, but there is only one practical rule of constitutional legislation, and that is based upon the presumption that every sworn officer will do his duty. Whenever we overlook this rule, and launch out into the field of supposition and speculation as to what officers may do, we are brought to an abrupt pause. It is of course, wise to act on the side of safety, and guard, if possible, every avenue to fraud, but the wheels of government would soon cease to revolve if legislators were to hesitate in the introduction of a salutary measure lest some depository of a trust should prove faithless. Bias and fraud may have invaded the jury-box, and deprived a citizen of his rights—the court, by an erroneous opinion, may have subjected a suitor to costs and delayed or thwarted the due course of justice, but these are not sufficient reasons for abolishing both court and jury. Bribery and corruption may in some instances have crept into legislative halls, and written upon the statute book a pernicious enactment, but it does not therefore follow that all legislation should be prohibited, and society permitted to relapse into a state of anarchy. It will not answer for the builder to reject from the temple a fitting stone lest it should be marred by Gentiles. A word upon the practical operation of this amendment, and I will not further delay the Convention. The test can be applied at the polls, and if the officer should be guilty of occasional fraud the citizen certainly could not be. If, through collusion with the inspectors, it is feared that an illegal voter would be permitted to repeat from memory words that he could not read, authority could be given the challenging party to amplify the text by the selection of another clause. But this matter is placed under the control of the Legislature by the provision authorizing that body to make laws for ascertaining by proper proofs, the citizens entitled to suffrage, and it is to be presumed that that body can so provide, that honesty will be the rule, and fraud the exception, in the execution of this portion of the organic law. The only other objection that could possibly be urged, is the abuse of the challenging power, causing delay and vexation at the polls. This could be done to a slight extent, but, it is not for the interest of any political party to attempt such abuses, and under existing laws, it is not impossible for similar annoyances to be practiced, nor can there be devised, any system however carefully guarded, that the machinations of the vicious may not abuse. Here, then, is proposed a regulation of suffrage that recognizes no superior race or privileged class in the human family. Striking at an undoubted source of corruption, it will tend to elevate and purify the ballot box. By it the State gives a gentle and effectual encouragement to the education of all her sons. A rule of action is suggested against which can be urged fewer objections than against almost any other part of our elective system. A principle is embodied, which regards the intrinsic merits of the citizen and not his pecuniary accidents. While property has, in some instances, been practically valued higher than manhood, I think in the light of to-day we need not hesitate to pronounce, not money, but intelligence, the superior foundation stone of government. Every consideration, whether of right or of expediency, and every assurance, excepting only that guaranteed by local experience, favors this proposition, and is not the principle worthy of a trial. And if, through the operation of causes which human foresight cannot divine, this measure upon trial should fail of practical benefit, we shall, by its submission, have an opportunity to learn one lesson of great value for the future, for the people will decide whether or not the ballot-box shall be used for obtaining a correct expression of opinion, and whether they desire the government to be conducted by chance or by system, by money or by intelligence.

Mr. HAND—I would ask the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] to withdraw his proposed substitute and introduce it as an independent proposition. I desire to vote upon both propositions, and I hope a vote will be had upon each of them separately; but because the proposition of the gentleman [Mr. Carpenter] is in no sense a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], and has no relation to it, but relates to a different subject I hope the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. GREELEY—I trust the committee will allow me now to say a few words generally of the course I intend to pursue in regard to the report before us, and then to make a very few remarks in reply to the able speech of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter]. In the first place, it has been indicated to me by the majority of the committee that they expect of me the general defense of our report. I propose, if the Convention will allow me, to do that, in remarks which I shall make at the close of the debate, in Convention, and not in Committee of the Whole. I do not propose to meet every objection point by point, nor to make a speech in reply to every attack on the report, because that would require me to occupy such a portion of the time as no member, not even the chairman of a committee, has a right to claim. I shall, therefore, reserve my general defense of the views embodied in the report of the committee for the close of the debate, if the Convention will allow me to close it, after all the amendments shall have been considered in committee, and when the subject is finally before the Convention. I give notice now that I shall ask the committee to sit out the debate on this report to-morrow night—I mean the debate which shall precede the discussion in the Convention. For whatever may be decided in the Committee of the Whole will not be conclusive, but will be reviewed in the Convention.

Mr. VEEDER—I desire to rise to a point of order. I do not understand that the remarks of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] apply to the subject now under consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is not strictly in order.

Mr. GREELEY—I think, sir, it was my right to open the debate, and to that end I tried to get the floor when the Convention went into Committee of the Whole. I simply desire to give notice that I shall ask the committee to sit out the debate on this report to-morrow. And now, with regard to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter]. He proposes that the amendment offered by him shall be submitted to a vote of the people as a separate proposition. The committee have had this matter very fully under consideration, and they decided that they would propose no separate submissions of questions to be determined by the people. Gentlemen must be aware that such submissions tend to confuse, and not only confuse, but alienate the people. If we should go to the people with a Constitution submitted in pieces, it would almost certainly be voted down. I am opposed to all proposals for separate submissions, because, if the plan is adopted, the people will vote down the Constitution which we shall submit to them. I have known of two or three instances where Constitutions submitted in this manner have been voted down, and it will almost always be so, where Constitutions are submitted in patches. If you choose to have a separate submission next year, and let the people then decide on the proposition, very well. Our committee was very decided on this point. We wished to submit the Constitution that should be framed, to the people of the State, with this question, "Is this Constitution preferable to the one you now live under? If so, vote 'yes,' if not, vote it down." If we send out a Constitution with strings of separate submissions hanging around it here and there, that Constitution will not be accepted. The people will say there is too much complexity and convolution of one thing with another. They will say, "If the Convention is capable of making a Constitution let them present one, and we are capable of deciding whether we like it or not." But here is a proposition for a separate submission of this proposed section, and very likely of others, for adoption or rejection by the people; so that a man cannot tell what he is voting for. He votes for a proposition and it is carried; but another proposition, which he votes against, is also carried; and thus the Constitution becomes something which he does not want, and which he would rather have had rejected. I say that these separate submissions have always been regarded with disfavor by the people, as they were at the time of the ratification of our present Constitution. I trust we will have none of them. I thought that the report of the committee was not fairly treated by the gentleman [Mr. Carpenter] in his remarks. I will, therefore, read from the report, to allow members to judge whether we, in effect, charged that inspectors of election would be guilty of fraud. The committee say:

"Nor have we chosen to adopt any of the schemes of disfranchising illiterate persons which have been referred to us. We freely admit that ignorance is a public evil and peril, as well as a personal misfortune, and we are ready to march abreast with the foremost in limiting its baleful influence. But men's relative capacity is not absolutely measured by their literary acquirements; and the State requires the illiterate, equally with others, to be taxed for her support, and to shed their blood in her defense. We prefer that she shall persist in her noble efforts to instruct and enlighten all her sons by means less invidious and more genial than disfranchisement. Were there no other consideration impelling to this decision, we should rest on and defer to the forcible truths, that ability to read and write is not absolute, but comparative; that inspectors of election are fallible and swayed by like passions with other men—and that they might be tempted, in an exciting and closely contested election, to regard with a partial fondness, almost parental, the literary acquisitions of those claimants of the franchise who were notoriously desirous of voting the ticket of those inspectors' own party, while applying a far sterner and more critical rule to those who should proffer the opposite ballots."

There are times when the contest is so close in this State that less than one per cent. of the entire vote will elect a Governor, or an electoral college. Men are challenged in a given district as to their ability to read and write. The board know perfectly well how many of the challenged voters are intending to vote the ticket of the majority of that board, and how many of them will vote the opposite ticket. I ask, if you do not put your inspectors in a most invidious and disagreeable position? A man comes up and says, "That is the ticket, sir; I am voting for your party; here it is." "Stop! you are challenged." He undertakes to read and write; and the board decides that he does not read well enough (and it must be a matter of comparison of degree whether he does or not) to be a voter, and they reject the vote, although it is a vote offered for their own party. In a moment, another man comes up; he is known to vote the opposite ticket; he is challenged, and he undertakes to read and write, and accomplishes something which he calls reading and writing. Do you not put the board in a most invidious position, and is it not human nature, that they will look a little more kindly, a little more encouragingly, upon the literary efforts of a man who is going to vote the "right" ticket than if he were going to vote the opposite ticket? Let us look at this matter of challenging. The committee desires that there may be the fewest possible grounds for vote-challenging at the polls. Settle beforehand who are entitled to vote and who are not. Let all be done coolly, calmly, and dispassionately, away from the crowd and heat and noise of an election. Let the board, deliberately sitting as registering officers, quietly decide who are and who are not voters. I would not have any man challenged except specifically. My way would be to have no man challenged except on the oath of an elector. You and I have seen at the polls, many times, challenges which were willful, wanton, mischievous, annoying and exasperating. Suppose you and I go to vote. There is a crowd at the polls. Your party or my party have two hundred majority in that district. The challengers of the minority are instructed to delay voting as much as possible. At the last Presidential election, there were thousands who were ready and anxious to vote at the polls in New York city, but who could not vote, and were turned away. An eminent delegate in this Convention [Mr. Opdyke] was thus deprived of his right of suffrage. Suppose the challenger were instructed to challenge everybody as not knowing how to read and write, and by that means he should keep out three hundred votes, he would probably at least reduce a hundred the majority of the opposite party. I read these numerous challenges. They will create mischief at the polls. You may be challenged, I may be (and I am sometimes said to write illegibly, by men of bad taste). [Laughter.] Who does not see that this is a very dangerous and mischievous power to put into the hands of challengers to object to your vote and mine on the ground that we do not know how to read or write; for boards of inspectors are men, like you and me—partisan, if you please—and the majority will have their preferences, and they will be accused of favoring their party if they decide that a challenged voter of the opposite party does not read and write well enough to vote. I trust the Convention will be careful about interpolating this dangerous provision into the Constitution.

Mr. GRAVES—I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage whether he intends to make an additional report on the resolution that was submitted, and which will be found on page 45 of the Journal.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves] that that question is not now before the Committee of the Whole; therefore his inquiry cannot be made unless by permission of the Committee.

Mr. GREELEY—I will answer that question in the proper time, when the proposition is made to amend.

Mr. SPENCER—I desire to submit to the gentlemen of the committee who are discussing this question, whether it is not premature to now discuss a separate submission of the negro suffrage question. Toward the close of the proceedings of the Convention of 1846, after the framing of the Constitution was pretty much perfected, a committee was appointed for the purpose of proposing a plan of submission to the people. It is proper that that mode should be adopted now. Therefore, I suggest whether this whole question of separate submission had not better be deferred until it properly comes up in that shape. It will save a good deal of the time of the committee, and leave time to properly frame the article under consideration.

Mr. FOLGER—I desire to ask what would be the effect on the amendment I proposed if this substitute should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that under the rule which has governed in all cases of this kind, both propositions are before the committee, and the last one being voted upon, whether it is carried or lost would not necessarily carry with it or have any effect upon the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], which is separate and distinct.

Mr. FOLGER—And it can be renewed at any time.

The CHAIRMAN—It is before the committee, and in the event of the one proposition being carried or lost, the Chair would still consider it its duty to put the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] before the committee.

Mr. BICKFORD—Is it in order to offer another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that, there being two amendments pending before the committee, it is not in order now to offer another.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would inquire of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], through the Chair, whether he intends that persons shall write their names in the English language? It is well known that there are a great many persons of foreign birth (for instance, Germans), who write their names in such a manner that no Yankee can read them. No inspector of election, unless he were a Dutchman or German, would be able to read them and say that they were not the handwriting of their names. It seems to me, therefore, for that reason, if for no other, the proposition of the gentleman should hardly be entertained by the Convention. It certainly ought to specify what language is intended to be written.

Mr. CARPENTER—The English language, if you choose. I do not think it is a very practical question, any way.

Mr. BICKFORD—There are many men well educated in foreign languages who are incompetent to write their names in the English language, and yet, are intelligent men, capable of writing their names and reading in their own language.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], for the reason that I believe his doctrine is a great political heresy. The doctrine I refer to is the doctrine on which the gentleman in his remarks seems to base the proposition which he has presented. I differ entirely from the gentleman in the idea that he presents, that voting—the exercise of the elective franchise, is not a matter of right. While I have no right to criticise the opinions of gentlemen upon this floor, my friend from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] will allow me to say that I am sorry it should first be announced upon this floor, by a gentleman professing the same political faith with myself, that men have not the right to participate in the administration of the government under which we live. This, sir, was not the doctrine of our fathers. When this government was formed—when our fathers found it necessary to revolt from the British government—by common consent, they laid down a very different doctrine. And that doctrine was enunciated from the pen of the father of republicanism—the same republicanism which I profess to-day; the republicanism in which I was educated, and, by the blessing of God, the republicanism in which I hope to die. And it was this: “We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that to secure these rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.” Then, sir, the government, if it has any just powers, must derive those powers from whom? From men who can read and write? From men who have had the benefits of education? From those who are governed, whoever they are, whether those men be born on these shores or upon foreign shores; whether those men have one complexion or another complexion; whether those men be Protestant or Catholic; whether they be Jew or Gentile, if they be governed, the government, to be just, must derive its powers from the consent of the governed. These, sir, were the doctrines in which I was educated. We call these republican. I believe if the republican party has any doctrine to-day, that is the doctrine of the republican party; and I say, sir, that republicans cannot afford to swerve from the ground that governments only derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. It was the universal doctrine of the people of the United States until 1834. In 1834 great and agitating questions arose. The slavery question then got a hold upon the feelings of a portion of the people of this country, and that agitation has now prevailed for 33 years, and during that agitation we have almost forgotten that it was a conceded fact that white men had rights. The struggle that the people has been engaged in was to see whether black men had rights; and the great Republican party in which I was educated, the great Republican party that drew its life blood from Thomas Jefferson, the author of that sentiment I have read here to-day, has found itself in the latter days of these thirty-three years with its champion standing in this hall, and its champion standing in yonder hall laying down the doctrine, in so many words, that men have no natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which they live. And, why? It was the necessity of the position. God had made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Their consciences told them that the black man was of common origin and of common destiny with themselves. It was necessary to disfranchise the black man, and how could it be done? By disfranchising the white and black together. Sir, I believe in no such doctrine, I believe, sir, that doctrine (pointing to a volume containing the Declaration of Independence), and I believe in the doctrine laid down in another book a little more sacred, to which we all on this floor yield credence; and from these two sentiments, first, that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and from that other sentiment, “whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them,” you may establish a government that shall be worthy of men; you may establish a government that shall become the race; you may establish a government that shall be honorable to the race itself, and to the Creator of that race that presides above it, and upon no other principle. And it is because of the violation of this principle that I am opposed to disfranchising any man, and denying him the right to give his consent to the powers of the government under which he lives, even if that man should not be able to read and write. I wish, sir, that every man in the community was educated. I wish that every man had the advantage of education in his early youth. But we have notable examples of men in the community, not only of giant intellect, but of noble patriotism and large views, who never learned to read and write until their dying days. I have in my mind the example of a man who, during the war, in his section exercised as much influence as any man almost in the country, for good. I refer to Funk, of Illinois, a man of immense wealth, a man of giant intellect, a man of as noble patriotism as any man in this country, and yet his early advantages had left him without the power of reading or writing. The men who know what was done by that man during the war for the preservation of our Union, in his nation's struggles and efforts, would put his right to vote in Illinois far higher, and the importance of his voting far higher, than they would place that of an intelligent and wicked-hearted rebel who happened to be located in the State of Illinois, and who durst not, from his position, take open ground against the government.

Mr. FRANCIS—I would like to inquire of the Chair whether a motion to lay the proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], on the table would be in order at this time.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair would inform the gentleman that no such proposition can be made while in Committee of the Whole. The question before the committee is on the proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter].

Mr. FULLER—I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter], but at the same time I think that the gentleman from Renaselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], perhaps, has laid down the proposition upon which he proposes to base his vote a little too broadly. There are no great political axioms which can be received without some qualification. The qualification for the elective franchise, undoubtedly, as a general proposition, is manhood; and even it is necessary to take that proposition with some qualification. What they should be I do not now propose to take the time of the committee to discuss. I have not risen for the purpose of discussing any abstract theory, but simply the question whether it would be right, in the abstract, that the voter should have intelligence or none. I propose to put my vote upon this question upon a different basis. Sir, we have not been sent here to make a new Constitution. We have a Constitution already, under which we have lived for the last twenty years, and experience has proved it to be a very good Constitution. Experience has also demonstrated that in it there are some defects, and it is to amend those defects that we have been sent here, and not to recast it and make it new. I think that, in our action, we should confine ourselves to the remedying, substantially, of those defects which experience has pointed out, and, having remedied them, to go home and submit the result of our labors to the people. Now, the want of some such qualification to vote as that proposed by the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] is not one of the defects which calls for amendment, and is not one of the defects which has called us together. The people do not, or at least my constituents do not, ask for any such qualification for the exercise of the elective franchise to be inserted in the Constitution. They have not sent us here for the purpose of inserting any such qualification, and for that reason I propose to vote against it. It may look very well in the abstract. Like a great many other propositions, it may sound very well in theory. A very good argument may be made on either side of the question, but the answer to it all is that the people, our constituents, do not ask for it. We are in great danger of doing too much. There is a very great deal more danger of this Convention doing too much than there is of its doing too little. There is but little work to be done. There are but few amendments wanted to be made, not more than half a dozen substantial ones, and if we confine ourselves to them we can do up our work in five or six weeks and go home, and submit it for acceptance or rejection by the people. If we undertake to introduce all these fine spun theories into the Constitution, if we spend all our time in discussing that, we shall get up some work which the people will not ratify. It is, therefore, because the people do not desire it, because they do not wish any such amendment to be made, whether it is right or wrong in the abstract, that I shall vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter].

Mr. CARPENTER—With the permission of the Convention, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CURTIS—I have an amendment which I offer to the first section.

Mr. HAND—Is the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN—It is.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Curtis, as follows:

In the first line of section 1 for "man" read "person."

In the fifth line of same section, after the word "he" insert "or she," and instead of "his," read "to."

In the seventeenth line of same section after the word "his" insert "or her."

In the eighteenth line after the word "he" insert "or she."

Mr. BARNARD—I should like to ask whether this is in order. How can we ever get to the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] if amendments are to be offered which have no reference whatever to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that two amendments can be submitted at the same time in Committee of the Whole, separate and distinct in their character, but that the fact that two amendments are pending precludes the offering of amendments to either.

Mr. CURTIS—I don't wish to preclude amendments to the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger]. My preference would be that the vote be first taken on his proposition.

Mr. LAPHAM—I desire to inquire whether the proposition to still further amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] is in order.

The CHAIR—The Chair is of the opinion that two amendments being now pending, no further proposition in the way of amendment can be at present entertained.

Mr. CONGER—I regret very much to differ from the ruling of the Chair. I hope, without taking formal exception to the ruling that the gentleman who made the last amendment will have the goodness to withdraw it for the present, in order that further amendments germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] may be acted upon by the committee. I do not think that we are likely to proceed here with any credit or satisfaction to ourselves if this rule of proposing amendments, by way of substitution, having no relation whatever that is germane to the original proposition, be proceeded with.

Mr. CURTIS—I shall be most happy to withdraw my amendment, in order that amendments having strict relation to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] be substituted, with the understanding that when that is disposed of, my own amendment will be in order.

Mr. LAPHAM—I offer the following amendment to the amendment of my colleague [Mr. Folger].

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Lapham, as follows:

Strike out the word "thirty" in line three, section one, and insert ten.

Strike out lines eight to twelve, inclusive, of the same section, except the word "no" in the twelfth line, and insert:

Provided, That persons convicted of felony or bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights, and persons judicially declared to be of unsound mind or incapable of managing their affairs, shall not be entitled to vote.

Mr. VERDER—I would inquire whether the last proposed amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] is divisible, so that we can take a vote on so much of it as proposes to amend line three before considering that part striking out the proviso of the section, and substituting another in its place.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion that it is divisible.

Mr. FOLGER—I ask that the Secretary may read the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. Lapham] again.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. FOLGER—I accept the amendment of the gentleman [Mr. Lapham].

Mr. BICKFORD—I now offer as an amendment to the proposition, as it now stands, the following:

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Bickford, as follows:

Amend section 1 by substituting the following for lines 8, 9 and 10: Provided, That persons judicially declared to be idiots, lunatics and habitual drunkards, and as such placed or being under guardianship, and persons convicted of felony or bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights, shall not be entitled to vote.

Mr. GREELY—I beg the committee to consider well, and to remember that these propositions have been thoughtfully regarded in committee, and to look at the effect of an amendment like this. Under the amendment as it now stands, the inspectors of election are sitting in a board, and endeavoring to determine who are entitled to vote. Here comes up a raving lunatic—notoriously so. Everybody knows he is crazy. He comes and offers his vote, and the inspectors cannot refuse his vote unless he has been judicially declared to be of unsound mind. We very well know that there are lunatics everywhere in the State, in reference to whose lunacy there has never been a judicial determination. If I understand the proposition all these other classes would be entitled to vote, because they have not been officially declared as belonging to those classes. I must believe the gentleman has not considered the effect of this thing sufficiently. Now, as to pauperism, let us look at these facts. I personally participated in an election where a member of Congress was chosen directly by votes brought out of the almshouse in New York for that purpose, the intent being, as the effect was, to elect a member of Congress by the votes brought from that institution. When the subject came before Congress, Congress decided that that was not an election, and sent it back to the people, and another choice took place. And, yet, if we make this amendment we shall see that it is perfectly appropriate and proper for men managing almshouses practically to control that matter. There are in the New York almshouse, five hundred persons who are paupers. Do not we know that the men who control that almshouse will contrive to let out such men to vote? I suppose that cannot be questioned. I know that last year the almshouse was largely depopulated to send away into the several wards, men to vote in that election, on the ground that they had not lost their residence by being in the almshouse two years. They could be sent back to the original wards, where they could vote. You know very well that the political party which has not control of the almshouse will not get any of those votes. They will be compelled, nay, they will be told "If you go out to vote except as we say you cannot come back; we will shut you out, or put you on bread and water." If that were not so, they would say, "If you do not give us roast turkey to-morrow, we will vote against you at the next election." They understand that. I beg the committee to look at the effect. If it was giving five hundred or five thousand men the right of independent voting in this State, that would be one thing. But if you give forty or fifty men, who control the almshouses of the State, the control of two or three thousand votes, I do not believe that is in accordance with the republicanism even, which has been so eloquently expounded by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend]. I believe there has been great corruption in the doling out of votes from the almshouses in support of the political party which has control of them; and I trust this committee is not disposed to make any such change in this proposition reported by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. LAPHAM—I have considered well the subject involved in the main portion of this amendment. I believe I comprehend fully the difficulties in the way of the portions of the report of the committee which I ask to have stricken out. A word, in the first place, upon the first branch of it, which is to strike out "thirty days," and insert "ten days." Ten days' citizenship and ten days' residence in the district is prescribed as a qualification of an elector. This makes the rule uniform, and allows every person who has been long enough a resident in a district to become a registered voter—to exercise the elective franchise, for that is put at six days. There is no occasion for excluding all the other classes of persons who come into an election district between the thirty days and the last day of the registration, which is six days before the election, from the exercise of the right. It seems to me too obvious that that period is too long. If the registry were required to be made thirty days before the election, that might be then proper, as there would be the necessity of requiring residence and citizenship for the same length of time. But to the main point involved in this matter. The proposition of the committee is that idiots, lunatics and persons under guardianship shall not vote. Who are embraced within that phraseology? Who do the committee intend to shut out from the right of the elective franchise by these expressions? What test would the board of inspectors have by which to determine who comes within the description of persons under guardianship, unless it be done in the way provided in the amendment I had the honor to offer. Then we come to the eleventh and twelfth lines, "No person who shall, at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall vote at any election." Twenty-nine days before an election, a person may have the misfortune to be an inmate of an almshouse, but on that very day he might inherit a fortune of a half a million of dollars; he walks for twenty-nine days among the wealthy men of the republic, and yet he is shut out at the polls, and excluded from exercising the elective franchise. "No person who shall, at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall have the right to vote." It does not require that he shall be a pauper at the very moment of offering his vote, but he is disqualified from the fact, that at any time within that period of thirty days, he has occupied that unfortunate position! I have no doubt but that the evil to which the learned chairman of that committee [Mr. Greeley] refers in his locality, a great evil. I have no doubt at all, but that the control which is exercised over this unfortunate class of persons amounts to an evil as great as he estimates it, but, sir, this is not the only class of evils which is attendant upon the exercise of the elective franchise. Poverty is not a crime, and poverty should not be a disqualification. Dependency by one person upon another is not a crime and should not be a disqualification. If you are to shut out the inmates of almshouses from the exercise of the elective franchise by reason of this supposed condition of dependence upon others, then you strike, if you carry out the principle, at a much larger class of persons;—at the tenants of the country who are under personal obligations to their wealthy and influential landlords—at all the recipients of private charity, who are much more under obligations to the donors, than are the inmates of almshouses to their keepers, because they know that they are not indebted to their keepers for support and are under no personal obligations to them; so if the principles involved in this amendment were to be carried out, a very large class of persons would be shut out from the exercise of the elective franchise. I am opposed Mr. Chairman, to adopting any test whatever for the elective franchise which is based on the poverty of the citizen! It is unsound in theory and unsafe in principle and in practice; no such principle ever has been recognized, or ever can be, consistently with the theory of our government; and whenever men sit down to contemplate the relative position in which wealth and poverty places men, they should remember the warning which has been written by one of the best of poets.

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates and men decay;
Princes may fall, may flourish or may fade;
A breath can make them as a breath hath made;
But a bold peasant, their country's pride
When once destroyed can never be supplied."

We must give to manhood, whatever may be its condition, sir, the exercise of this great and inherent, and, as I concede to the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], inalienable and natural right—for I believe it is such! We must give to manhood the exercise of this right, except in the cases of personal disqualification, such as are mentioned in the amendment which I have proposed; conviction for crime, or an adjudication in some mode which determines the incapacity of the individual to govern himself and manage his affairs. Now Mr. Chairman, one single word upon the other branch of this proposition. The learned chairman of the committee [Mr. Greeley] says: "Suppose a raving maniac were to come to the polls, should he be allowed to vote?" I answer the question, as I am entitled to in the exercise of my birthright, by propounding another. Suppose a person comes to the polls, who is not a raving maniac, but who is challenged on the ground that he is insane and a lunatic? How are the inspectors to determine that question? Are they to sit and try the case, and hear what the witnesses may have to say, in order to determine the state of mind of the person who offers to vote? While the case of the raving maniac is an exception and rarely occurs at an election, the cases in which the question I have suggested may arise would be numerous at every election. Therefore the simple test proposed by my amendment—that those persons and only such, who have been adjudged by law to be of that description, should be excluded, is, I submit to the committee, the true test by which we should be governed in cases of this character.

Mr. BARKER—I hope that the proposed amendment will be adopted by the committee, and particularly that part of it which proposes to amend the provision, the effect of which is, as reported by the committee, to make the inspectors of election a tribunal, before which is to be tried, on election day, the question whether the elector is an idiot, or a lunatic, or a person under guardianship. It is well known in the experience of most of the members of this Convention, if not all, that this involves the most delicate question that has ever been submitted to jurors or jurists. It has elicited great debate in our superior tribunals, and there have been different opinions by many of the learned men of the land as to what constitutes an idiot or a lunatic. If a man has any reason, and has a right to hold and control his property, then he has that other and more sacred right—to vote! I think it is impracticable. It will turn the election day into an occasion for the calling of witnesses and trying this great question, when if they are, as proposed by the amendment, adjudicated to be idiots or lunatics, or persons who do not have the control of their persons or property, the record can be produced and the question disposed of by an examination of the record. Upon the second proposition, that no person shall vote who has been a public pauper within the thirty days preceding, I hope that this Convention will also exclude that from the section. It is an odious distinction against aged, infirm and unfortunate persons; and I apprehend that the learned committee, and particularly the chairman [Mr. Greeley], could hardly have comprehended how many persons will come within the contemplated proscription. In this State liberal provisions have been made to distribute alms, and I apprehend the man is as much a public pauper who receives alms from the public treasury at his own home, in his own family, and surrounded by his own neighbors, as if he is taken to the hospital or the almshouse. He is a public pauper if he receives his support and maintenance for the time being from the public; it is a charge upon the public treasury, and his neighbors know the fact that he is a public pauper; he falls within the defalcation thereafter, and by legislative action, he is a public pauper, though it may be a person who has the slightest infirmity, and for the slightest period of time. I hope the committee will exclude these two propositions.

Mr. ANDREWS — Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of that portion of the amendment proposed to this committee, relating to the language of the proviso, which it is proposed to substitute in place of the language of the report of the committee. I am in favor of that language in respect to idiots, lunatics and persons under guardianship, because in my judgment it furnishes a safe and accurate means of ascertaining those persons who are disabled from voting by reason of the condition in which they may be, and I think it is better and safer that the standard should be settled by judicial determination, and not be left to the judgment or caprice of boards of inspectors, to try that question at every recurring election. I shall also vote in favor of that part of the amendment, which in substance provides for allowing paupers to vote, not that I think it would be in any fair sense a violation of the principle of representative republican government, to exclude from the right of suffrage, men who by their condition are dependent directly upon governmental aid for support, but simply for the reason that I would not incur the text of the Constitution by qualifications which have no practical importance; as in my judgment the difficulty which has been referred to by the honorable chairman of the committee [Mr. Greeley], if it exists in the city of New York, has not been noticed or felt elsewhere throughout the State. But, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that part of the amendment which provides for the striking out of this section the term of thirty days as a limitation in respect to citizenship and as a condition in order to entitle a citizen to vote. I am in favor of that limitation for the reasons which have been suggested by the committee. Those reasons, as I understood them, have reference to the purity of elections and the free and intelligent exercise by citizens of the right of suffrage. And, sir, although this proposition is assailed by the minority of the committee in their report submitted to the Convention, it is by no means, as I understand it, a novel proposition in this State. Because, sir, the very able and intelligent committee upon the right of suffrage in the Convention of 1846, of which the late Governor Bouck was chairman, unanimously reported to that Convention a limitation of sixty days citizenship, instead of the limitation of thirty days provided by the report of this committee, and in my judgment the simple question to be determined by this Convention, is this: Is this limitation right in itself, and will it tend to accomplish the object for which it was inserted by the committee? It has been the tendency in our State and elsewhere throughout the country, to enlarge the electoral body and admit to it all persons who could be safely intrusted with the suffrage, notwithstanding or irrespective of the accidents of birth and fortune. This has been the history of this State on this question; and it is in accordance with the suggestion made by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that men, as such, have a right to take part in the operations and control of the government which exacts their obedience. It is true, that by the Constitution of 1777, property was the test of suffrage. By the Constitution of 1821, citizenship was made the test of suffrage, abrogating the property qualification except as to men of color, as to whom a new qualification was exacted and prescribed, resting upon special and peculiar reasons, which if they ever had any force, now have none by the changed condition of that class of people in the country. I, therefore, believe in widening and extending the right of suffrage just so far and to that limit, as is consistent with the safety of the State. The minority report states in very forcible language what no one can deny, that corruption in the electors, and among officials is the leprosy of the body politic. I do not understand the force of the suggestion made in that report, in assigning the reasons for the disagreement of the minority with the majority of the committee upon this question; because if it is true as stated in that report, that in the years 1856 and 1857 several thousand persons, under the exciting elections of those years, within ten days before the occurrence of those elections, made their application and took their first step in the road of citizenship, I think the inference is quite clear that it was by reason of some unhealthy and improper stimulus applied to men, which should lead them at such a juncture, in the heat of a partisan election, to make their application and declare their intention to become citizens of the United States, although full citizenship could not be reached until two years thereafter. While, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a part of the proposition contained in this amendment, I am opposed to striking out the limitation of thirty days reported by the committee. I should have preferred, with Governor Bouck and his democratic associates on the committee of 1846, that that term should have been extended rather to sixty days. I am in favor of this provision, because I am opposed to the disgraceful crowding of our courts, upon the very eve of a partisan election, with applicants seeking admission to citizenship, urged on and prompted by partisans who, while endeavoring to initiate them into citizenship, at the same time seek to control and direct their votes. I am in favor of it because I am in favor of any system which shall make the obtaining of citizenship rest upon the free and intelligent choice of men who desire to be citizens. I believe that the successive steps to naturalization and citizenship should be taken by men acting upon their own judgment, and seeking citizenship simply because they desire it, understanding the dignity of an American citizen.

Every measure, therefore, which in my judgment shall tend to dignify American citizenship; every measure which shall lead men properly to esteem and appreciate the value of that boon which we allow to all men, and hereafter I hope to all races of men; any proposition which tends to this result, I am disposed to favor. Because it is undeniably true that the great and vital danger to republican institutions is the danger of corruption among electors. Let us guard, as far as we can, against this tendency, and it seems to me that this particular proposition contained in the report of the committee, is a safe, just and equitable one, and it should be adopted by this Convention.

Mr. GREELEY — I move for a division of the question as indicated by the gentleman who has just addressed the Chair, and that the vote be taken separately on the propositions, as they are clearly distinct propositions.

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair would inform the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], that the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] is not divisible, but after that shall have been passed upon, if it shall be determined in the negative, the proposition to divide the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], will be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. ANDREWS — Suppose it is determined in the affirmative, what is the effect then?

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair is of the opinion that it becomes then an original proposition, and will not be divisible.

Mr. GREELEY — I desire only to say one word in addition to the remarks of the gentleman who has so eloquently addressed us, in reference to this change from thirty days to ten days. All I can say is, it cannot have been very fully considered by the gentleman opposing it; because, having stricken out the four months' residence, you will, by changing this from thirty to ten days, bring about a perpetual shuffling of voters from one side of the line to the other, in order to carry a doubtful Congressional or Assembly district. You will have thousands of men moving across from this side of the street to the other, or from one boarding-house to another, in order to effect a particular purpose in a doubtful or closely contested district. It would lead to universal corruption and perversion of the elective franchise, by sending men from where they belong to where they do not belong. I know of many instances, even in New England, where men vote in the town where they actually reside, and where thousands have been hired, as it is said, to go and live in other townships where the election is doubtful, and after the election is over they quarrel with the men who hired them and go back to their own town, perhaps not having been absent three days. In this case they would have to live there but ten days. I am quite sure that could not have been intended, unless they go back to their county residence or district residence for a number of days. At present we have the thirty-day rule, and you have to swear that you have lived in that district for thirty days, or you cannot vote for any officer for whom you could not have voted in the district where you formerly resided. I do entreat the committee, at any rate, to take care that this change from thirty to ten days is not made unless you mean to have elections made a mere matter of gambling, as will be done by parties contriving to draw as many votes as possible from districts where there can be no serious contest, and plant them in districts which are supposed to be very evenly divided.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — At the proper time, I shall feel it my duty to offer a proposition to meet the difficulty suggested by the author of the minority report, in reference to the effect that might be produced in 1868 by changing the length of citizenship from ten days to thirty days. I shall propose that during the year 1868, ten days' citizenship shall suffice, but after 1868 thirty days shall be the measure. I deem the change proposed by the majority of the committee to be a wholesome one, and for the reasons suggested by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] who recently addressed the Chair. But I wish to say a word upon the other branch of the question, now immediately before the committee, and that is, I do not consider that it is any infringement of the rights of the citizen to exclude a public pauper from the right of participation in the election. I wish to make myself as consistent as possible upon this subject, whether there may be any real consistency or not; at least I think my views upon one branch of this subject are entirely consistent with the general views which I have expressed. A man who stands an independent citizen, earning his own living, owing allegiance to none but to his own government, exercising his independent functions in the community, that man is entitled to all the rights of the citizen. But a time comes when it becomes his choice, as well as his necessity, to live on the public taxes of the State, and to be supported as a burden to the community. He chooses to give away a portion of his rights for the purpose of obtaining a personal and private end, and when he chooses to thus surrender those rights, it is doing no wrong to him to say, "If you receive this personal benefit, you shall yield up for the time being your personal rights, or a portion of them". And what is the effect of the opposite course? The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] says he has only heard this complaint from the city of New York. The gentleman will find, if it be not true of the city in which he resides, that it is true of other cities in this State, that when the election comes on, the public almshouses, sustained by the taxes upon the people of that locality, are thrown open, not literally setting the paupers at large, but sending out the paupers under the direction of the men in charge of the almshouses to give one hundred, two hundred or three hundred votes in the county in which the elections are going on. I confess that for myself it seems a little inconsistent to say that a man shall forfeit every right he possesses, and shall be considered a felon, and consigned to a prison if he pays one dollar to influence the vote of an elector, and yet the power shall be put in the hands of the keeper of an almshouse to positively control the votes of one hundred, two hundred, three hundred, or five hundred men at an election. Because the control is absolute in one way, not one word may be said to the pauper who is thus sent out, but the pauper

...his food, his two classes of cases. It does not mean ordinary guardianship, that is, guardianship of property, but guardianship of the person. It cannot mean anything else. These are habitual drunkards and persons who after an examination, at lunatic asylums, are declared to be incapable of managing their affairs, and their persons are put under the charge of a committee. The committee has charge of such a committee. I feel not now refer to the decision, but some gentlemen who are here present will undoubtedly remember it. There is one other class, and that is guardianship in the almshouses. They are under guard- statutes. The statute says that the superintendent of the poor shall "govern" them (using that very word), and can appoint agents, the government of these subordinates, and from a right to appeal to the superintendent, and to him only. They are absolutely under guardianship, and their persons are and these two classes of persons ought not to vote. Would it not be rather a farce upon the elective franchise, for a person, without reason, to be allowed to pass judgment upon public affairs by voting, and yet the case of idiots—not persons of unsound mind, merely, but idiots. I have never seen a lunatic vote, but I have seen persons under guardianship, out of the poor-house, brought to the polls by their keepers. The other class of cases is persons convicted of bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights. There is, I think, a little inaccuracy in that phraseology. Bribery, I think, is both a felony and a misdemeanor. In some cases it is a misdemeanor. It includes a large class of cases, and I doubt very much whether, in all cases, it should be an absolute disqualification, and take away from the party the right of suffrage. So far as bribery is a felony, that what I have stated includes all I desire to say at present.

Mr. WAKEMAN—As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the class of persons referred to by the gentleman from Livingston [Mr. Eudress], as persons who should not vote because under guardianship must be minors, as the word "guardianship" implies that. It is true that a class of persons defined by the law, habitual drunkards, lunatics and persons of unsound mind may be placed under the care of a committee, but not under guardianship. It seems to me that guardianship is not the proper word to be used here in reference to the class of persons referred to. Guardianship has a distinct, definite, legal meaning. In that particular, I think the phraseology should be changed. On the question of thirty days' citizenship, I propose, for one—at least such are my present impressions—to those persons who have already declared a vote for a proposition like this—to give their intention to become voters, in good faith, their intention to come to vote at an election, if they shall have taken out their final papers at least ten days before the election, but hereafter, to make the time thirty days, so that there can be no question on the point raised in the report of the minority of the committee, and which will guarantee the right of men who have declared their intentions in good faith, to vote in 1868. But, sir, the next proposition, I think, requires some little examination. It provides that no person who shall, at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall vote at any election. Now, sir, I understand that a person who is a pauper is a public pauper. In the county of Genesee and town of Batavia, where I reside, I understand if a person applies for relief, or if any one else applies in his behalf for relief, he is a public pauper. But few of the paupers of the county of Genesee are supported in the public poor-house; therefore I say that if it is understood that every person who is a public pauper is likely to be excluded from the right of voting, we must look to it and see that we do not do them injustice. Men become paupers by reason of a want of property—by misfortune, not of their own seeking. Should we disfranchise them because they are poor and needy? It strikes me not, sir. It strikes me that we should be careful lest we exclude many worthy citizens, as worthy as any gentleman upon this floor, to enjoy the right to vote. I know men who fought in the war of 1812, who, by being neglected by the general government, have become paupers without any fault of their own. Would it be right to exclude such men from the privilege of voting? Then again, I am opposed to a property qualification, from beginning to end—from first to last. I propose to vote in favor of giving colored men the full rights of citizenship independent of property qualification. I am not therefore prepared to apply as a rule to a white man, that he must possess a property qualification to entitle him to vote; for, as I said before, a man becomes a pauper by reason of a want of property. If he had property, he would not become a public pauper. Shall we apply that test to one class of citizens, when we propose to remove it in respect to another? I think my venerable friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], when he comes to look at the subject in that light, will say that the position cannot be defended upon principle at all. For one, I am disposed to base the right to vote upon manhood, without reference to color, and I would submit to the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], whether or not the principle of excluding paupers can be defended consistently with the remainder of his report.

Mr. GREELEY—I would ask the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman], whether this report proposes to apply any rule to white men that it does not apply to colored men.

Mr. WAKEMAN—None whatever, but taking the report altogether, it does propose this. It proposes to give every male citizen the right to vote, excluding afterward, paupers, and paupers are made so for the want of a property qualification. Under our present Constitution, the evil may be remedied in this way. I can see there is a difficulty, and perhaps one that cannot properly be remedied by the Constitution, and that is the case of men who are under the control of a public officer in the almshouse. We might insert some provision by which he should not have control of a pauper, or in other words, that a keeper of the almshouse shall not control the votes of men who are inmates of the almshouse. There would be some propriety in this. But to apply the rule to every public pauper, would exclude a large class of persons who are absolutely dependent for some little aid, but who are worthy citizens of the State. Therefore, to be consistent in voting on this question, as well as on the question in reference to colored voters, I must vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], doing away with all property qualifications, for the white as well as for the colored man, and put each on his manhood—upon his absolute, inalienable right, as has been stated by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend]. He has either the right to vote or he has not. It is provided here by the draft reported by the committee, that persons shall be excluded who have committed crime, and for such we have a right to disfranchise them. A man who is convicted of a felony, or who receives a bribe or does any other act by which we have a right to say he shall be disfranchised, should be. But, sir, if by misfortune or poverty, persons are compelled to receive public alms, it does seem to me that we cannot consistently vote for their disfranchisement, and especially when we have voted to remove the property qualification in the case of colored citizens. Therefore, I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] will be adopted.

Mr. HAND—This question has been pretty fully discussed, and I do not propose to go over the whole ground of discussion, but I do feel called upon to review some of the sentiments that have been brought forward here—very absurd sentiments, which may be used in the discussion of other subjects. I was very glad that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], whom I highly respect, answered his own argument, and rendered the position that he previously took, absurd to the view of the whole Convention. He told us that manhood suffrage was an inalienable right, and afterward he stated that poverty should exclude a large class of our citizens. Sir, there is no such thing as an inalienable right. There is no such thing as a manhood right of any kind or name whatever, but that man may be called upon to yield in society. Our right to life is limited, and so is our right to the pursuit of happiness. We meet with legal restrictions at every step. Every law in the statute book is a restraint. It forbids or enjoins something. In so far as it does, it is a restraint upon my freedom of action. If manhood suffrage were right, we should need no Constitutional clause for it, but every person would walk up to the polls, and demand the right to deposit a ballot. We have four millions of people in this State, but what number of persons have we under this proposed Constitution, who will deposit their ballots. Less than one-sixth of our population. By what right do you exclude five out of six? Is it not because you have a right to prescribe the right of suffrage, and tell what its conditions shall be? You say a man shall be 21 years of age before he shall be allowed to vote. If you have the power why not exercise it and say he shall be forty years of age? Who gives you the right to say that the age of twenty-one years is the precise period of a man's life when he shall attain the privilege of the elective franchise? The fact shows that the right belongs to society, in its organized capacity, coming together here in this Constitutional Convention. The whole subject is open to their action, and is to be decided by their discretion. And now, a word as to the subject of pauper suffrage. I am sorry that the committee saw fit to introduce this into their report. We have been told here that if men choose to accept public charity, they should thereby lose their right to citizenship. I would ask if they do it as a matter of choice? If stern necessity and misfortune, to which we are all liable, and from which none may be exempt, do not force men to accept of public charity? I would ask if men of tried worth, with high aspirations of patriotism and love of country, have not received aid from the public purse? And let me ask you, as an offset to the case cited by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], of the man in Illinois who could neither write nor read, but who performed such wonderful things for his country, if there are not thousands of as good patriots as he, who have risked their lives on the battle-field, and who, to-day, by reason of wrongs perpetrated upon them in Southern prison-houses, and injuries received upon the battle-field when fighting in defense of their country, will not necessarily become public paupers, and receive aid from the government under which they live, being disabled in the service of their country. Would you exclude this large class of persons from the privileges of citizenship? If an evil exists in the city of New York, as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has stated, by which hundreds of men are under the control of a single man, the remedy for that is the enactment of some provision by the Legislature by which that power shall be taken away from the keeper of those persons under his charge. Do not say that honest poverty shall exclude a man from the right of suffrage. Take away the power of the keeper. When a man desires the benefit of the ballots of these paupers in the several localities, let him have access to them, and let them be conveyed by such persons to those several localities, without the supervision of their keeper, guarded by proper legislation against the exercise of any such power, to the place where their ballots are to be deposited, there to exercise the right of freemen. Let us not, at this day, make such a test as this. If we exclude any person from the rights of citizenship, let it be a man who, by his own act, has unfitted himself for the performance of its duties. A beautiful state of things it would be, if drunken vagabonds, unfitted for the performance of the duties of citizens, would stagger up to the polls, and crowd out of the way some patriot who had shed his blood in the nation's defense, and who, by reason of this, had been compelled to accept, at the hands of the public, a small pittance, to enable him to eke out a subsistence. I introduced a resolution asking the Committee on the Right of Suffrage to inquire whether habitual drunkenness, that totally unfitted a man for the ordinary business of life, should not exclude persons guilty of it from the right of the elective franchise. The committee turned a cold shoulder to the proposition.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND — Will the gentleman allow me to inquire if "persons under guardianship" does not mean habitual drunkards, who have conducted themselves so loosely that guardians have had to be put over them? I suppose that such were intended to be included in that description by the committee.

Mr. HEND — There are enough drunkards in this State to turn every election, who have never been put under any guardianship whatever. We have vast numbers of instances where families and wives hesitate to put this last disgrace upon one so nearly connected with them. With these remarks, as this discussion has been somewhat protracted, I will leave the subject.

Mr. BARNARD moved that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Which was carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. ENDRESS — I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. GREELEY — Can we not move to take a recess until four o'clock?

The PRESIDENT — The motion to adjourn is first in order.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Endress to adjourn, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, JULY, 10, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. WM. WYATT.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the Secretary and approved.

The PRESIDENT made the following announcement:

Mr. Jarvis, of New York is appointed a member of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc.; to fill the vacancy occasioned by the voluntary retirement of Mr. J. Brooks.

Mr. VAN COTT presented the petition of citizens of Brooklyn against the appropriation of public moneys to the support of sectarian, charitable and other institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. TUCKER presented the petition of men and women of New York, for the extension of the right of suffrage to women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. E. A. BROWN presented the petition of William King and six others, electors of Martinburgh, Lewis county, for a constitutional provision prohibiting the Legislature of the State and Boards of Supervisors of counties and municipal corporations, donating or appropriating public money or property to churches, colleges, hospitals, etc., of a sectarian character.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. GRAVES presented the petition of forty-seven males and fifty-five females from the town of Marcellus, Onondaga county, asking for a provision to be incorporated in the Constitution, which shall be separately submitted to the people, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. GRAVES also presented the petition of fifty-four ladies and gentlemen of the city of New York, asking for equal suffrage for women.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the superintendent of the Onondaga salt springs, in reply to a resolution of the Convention for information in reference to salt springs.

Which was referred to the Committee on Salt Springs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. E. BROOKS—The Committee on Charities and Charitable Institutions to whom was referred a memorial from one hundred and twelve citizens of Waverly, Tioga county, praying for some provision in the Constitution to prevent donations of money for sectarian charities, beg leave to report this memorial back to the Convention, and ask that they be discharged from consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature. Let me say, that the committee make this request, solely in reference to the manifestation made by the Convention in the motions which have been made here, that another committee should take the subject under consideration, and not from any disposition to shirk the labor or responsibility incident to an examination of the subject, and to making a report upon it.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. E. Brooks, and it was declared carried.

Mr. STRONG—I some days since gave notice that I would offer an amendment to the rules for the consideration of the Convention. I would ask whether it does not come up properly at this time; if so I would like to have it taken up.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Strong, as follows:

RULE 46.—That no amendment to the Constitution shall be adopted, except upon the affirmative vote of a majority of all the delegates elected to this Convention.

Mr. STRONG—I am perfectly willing that the vote should be taken on this amendment without any remarks made by myself, except to state the reasons why I propose it. I have adopted the language from the provisions in the Constitution of 1846; my impression is that is a very strong reason for adopting the same rule here. By the provision in that Constitution, no bill should become a law unless it received the affirmative vote of a majority of all who were elected to the Assembly and all who were elected to the Senate. There is another provision, that is, whenever there is an amendment proposed to the Constitution, that it should receive the affirmative vote of a majority of the members of both houses before it should be considered by the people; afterward, that it should be published, and at the second session should again receive the affirmative vote of the majority of all who were elected to the Assembly and the Senate before it should be submitted to the people by way of amendment to the Constitution. I think the provision is a good one, and I hope and trust it will be adopted by this Convention. I do not think it is showing a proper respect to the people to submit any amendment for their consideration until that amendment has received the affirmative vote of the majority of those the people have sent here to represent them. I do not offer this for the purpose of raising any opposition to any particular amendment which may be, or which has been offered, but as a general rule. It may be that it will apply to and defeat some amendments which I may have the honor of submitting to the Convention during its session. I do not know of any objection which can be urged to this proposition. If it shall amount to a restriction upon the action of this Convention, I believe it would be all the better for that reason. I think from the number of propositions that have been submitted here, there is an impression among many that we are going to adopt a new Constitution. That is not my idea. My idea is, that the people have sent us here to amend the old Constitution where they have found that was objectionable from the experience of twenty years, since the Constitution of 1846 was adopted. I think if we should submit all the proposed amendments to the popular voice, and I am perfectly confident that the popular voice has never declared that we should make a new Constitution.

Mr. ALVORD—I am entirely willing that the proposition of the gentleman should pass, if it be amended in the right direction; but, as it is now, it seems to me to be entirely inconsistent with the rule which he undertakes to bring up for his guidance in the matter. We are here for the purpose of forming a new Constitution; separate and distinct propositions from time to time are brought forward to make, together, when the whole is connected, a Constitution which we shall submit to the people; therefore it assimilates itself to the process of the Legislature in passing upon different sections of a bill. There it does not require a majority of all those elected to the Legislature to pass upon those sections. When we come down to our finishing work and put the enacting clause and the jurat at the end, then it requires a majority of all those elected. I have no sort of objection whatever to the resolution reading that when we shall have finally got through our work, and come to the question of an entire Constitution which we are to sign and give forth to the people, that it shall then require a majority of all the members elected to the Convention. But I am opposed, sir, in the preliminary work of passing upon these different sections, that each and every one of the distinct propositions submitted shall require the affirmative vote of a majority of the Convention. Why, sir, it is a mere bid for men to stay away from here, because a vote, if away from here, is just exactly as good as a negative vote if here upon the floor, and it would embarrass us from the beginning to the end of our proceedings. When we shall have got through passing upon all these propositions by a majority such as shall be found in a quorum, then let us all come together and take the completed work and pass upon it, and if a majority be found in favor of it, then it shall be considered as our work, and go to the people, not otherwise. Therefore, I am opposed to this amendment in its present form.

Mr. MERRITT — I most emphatically dissent from the proposition as offered by the mover, and also the proposition as intimated by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord]. We are not here passing laws; our action is to be reviewed and passed upon by the people. It is expected of course, that the members of this Convention will attend its sessions; but circumstances may arise that will absolutely prevent delegates from being present, when they might even favor a proposition, which we might thus adopt by a majority of a quorum, and yet we would be prevented from submitting that to the people of the State. It is not necessary, even at this stage, to pass this resolution. I am opposed to it and if the vote is to be taken I shall ask for the ayes and noes upon it. It can accomplish nothing, in my judgment, but mischief, and as the gentleman from Onondaga very truthfully said, it is a bid for those who desire to stay away to do so, and not be put on the record in regard to propositions for amendments or separate articles to the Constitution, which may be presented. I do not say, that any delegate will be thus situated, but we can hardly tell at this stage of the proceedings what will be done before the close of the session of this Convention. It is proper that we should leave the whole subject in the hands of the majority of those who may be present. If all the members are present the rule will not be necessary, as it will require an absolute majority if the Convention is full. Whatever reasons those may have who are absent, they will not rest upon those who are present, and it is very proper that those present shall go on and complete their action on the different sections that may be passed upon, and also upon the Constitution as a whole.

Mr. SHERMAN moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Which was carried.

Mr. FRANCIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the propositions in regard to re-organizing the courts, herewith presented, be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

COURT OF APPEALS.

This court to consist of seven judges, holding office for fourteen years. To have appellate jurisdiction in all cases exceeding $1,000 and in all other cases where an appeal shall be allowed by one of its judges.

One judge of that court to sit at chambers at stated times, to allow such appeals on notice to the adverse party.

GENERAL TERMS OF SUPREME COURT.

Nine judges to be appointed, or elected by the State at large, and hold office for nine years. The State to be divided into three grand districts and four general terms, to be held annually in each district, by any three of the judges, to be assigned in such manner as the Legislature shall direct.

CIRCUITS.

The State to remain in eight circuits, and two judges elected or appointed for each, to hold eight years, having general jurisdiction in law and equity.

COUNTY COURTS.

To have concurrent jurisdiction in all cases not exceeding $1,000; and act as referees.

The Surrogate's Court to be abolished and its duties performed by the County Court.

The county judge to be appointed and hold six years, and paid a full salary, but not allowed to practice law, or receive any fees. The county judge authorized to hold courts in other counties in such cases as the law may provide.

In large counties an associate judge might be appointed.

CITY COURTS.

In large cities courts may be established by a two-third vote of the Legislature.

By the above system no judge would review his own decision, and many cases would stop at the general term for that reason.

In most cases of $1,000, the decision of the general term will be final, but important questions would go up by allowance.

The Court of Appeals could easily dispose of all business which would come before it.

The great delay and expense of references would be avoided to a great extent, by trying them before a judicial officer without fees, which would take away all inducement to delay the trial, as at present.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LIVINGSTON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That no distinction shall ever be made by law between resident aliens and citizens in reference to the right to take by gift, grant, devise, descent or otherwise, and to grant, devise or otherwise dispose of real estate, and that all existing laws making any such distinction shall be repealed.

Which was referred to the Committee on Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. BECKWITH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be, and he is hereby requested to furnish to this Convention a copy or copies of contracts now in force for repairs and improvements of the Champlain canal — and also any and all assignments of such contracts, or any of them, by the contractors, and any and all powers of attorney given by such contractors, or any of them, to other persons, to perform on their part, such contracts, or any of them.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. BECKWITH also offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on the Investigation of Canals, be and they are hereby requested to furnish to this Convention, the evidence, so far as the same has been taken by them, and especially the evidence in respect to the Champlain canal.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. BARTO offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Instruction be requested to prepare, as soon as possible, and communicate to this Convention a tabular statement showing:

1. The whole number of children in each county in the State entitled to attend common schools each year since 1840.
2. The number of children attending such schools in the several counties each year since 1840, and the number not attending.
3. The amount of taxation imposed upon the people in the several counties of the State, for school purposes, in each year since 1840, State, county, town and municipal tax, each stated separately, and the percentage each, of State, county, town, and municipal tax upon the amount of taxable property.
4. The ratio of taxation to the whole number of children entitled to attend common schools in each year since 1840.
5. The ratio of taxation to the number actually in attendance in each year since 1840.
6. The ratio of increase or decrease in the attendance upon schools in each county, as taxation has been increased.
7. The number of such schools which have become free, and the year in which they became free.
8. The ratio of increase or decrease in attendance upon such schools in municipal corporations as have been made free, to the whole number of children entitled to attend such schools.

And further, that the Superintendent be requested to report to the Convention how soon he can probably make the above statement.

Which was laid over under the Rule.

Mr. CHURCH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Comptroller and the Auditor of the Canal Department be requested to report to this Convention a statement of all sums advanced or paid for canal purposes, or on the canal debt, from other sources than canal revenues, and all sums advanced or paid from the canal revenues for other than canal purposes, or on canal debt (specifying such purposes), in each year, from 1817 to the present time, and also the interest upon each item, from the time it was paid or advanced to the present time, stating the items of interest separately from the items of principal.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. M. H. LAWRENCE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be requested to inquire into and report to this Convention what offices, if any, have become unnecessary, and may be abolished without detriment to the public service; and, especially, whether the duties devolving on the State Assessors, Canal Appraisers, Loan Commissioners, might not safely be transferred to other appropriate officials, thus simplifying and improving the financial condition of the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State.

Mr. BICKFORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter, until otherwise ordered, the daily session of this Convention shall begin at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I hope that resolution will not be adopted. Most of the committees of this body are engaged an hour or two in the morning.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid over.

Mr. GROSS called up the resolution offered by him on the 27th of June.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

WHEREAS, At the last annual session of the general court of Massachusetts, before a joint committee, the question of license and prohibition has undergone a thorough examination, and the advocates on either side have endeavored to place the most ample material on the subject before the Legislature of their State; therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Convention be instructed to apply to the State Librarian or to the Clerk of the General Court of Massachusetts for several copies of the printed debates on the the above named subjects for the use of the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature, except as to matters otherwise referred, the Committee on Cities, their organization, government and powers, and the special Committee on Adulterated Liquors, etc.

Mr. GROSS—My object in offering this resolution was to place before these committees of this body all the testimony possible in regard to this much perverted question of license and prohibition, and such as has never before been made accessible to any legislative body, or Convention charged with the revision of the organic law of the State. In my opinion, any one of unprejudiced mind, on reading this testimony, coming as it does from the highest authorities on matters of State, and church, and science and society, must be satisfied that prohibitory legislation cannot be and should not be the object sought for by any honest and judicious temperance man and promoter of public morals. I send a copy of the report in question to the desk of the Secretary, and I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GREELEY—I wish to know whether it is testimony the resolution proposes to furnish or debates. I don't think we need any debates.

Mr. GROSS—Testimony.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that the resolution calls for the printed debates on this question.

The question was then put on the resolution and it was declared to be adopted.

Mr. AXTELL offered the following preamble and resolution;

WHEREAS, The evils of intemperance are widespread and increasing in this State; and

WHEREAS, a vast proportion of the crime and pauperism, with the taxation resulting therefrom, are the direct result of intemperance; and

WHEREAS, Intemperance is stimulated and increased by the open sale of alcoholic beverages, and diminished where the sale of these beverages is by law prohibited; and

WHEREAS, The right to regulate the sale of alcoholic beverages is unquestioned in all civilized communities, involving, as it does, the right of prohibition, therefore,

Resolved, That it be referred to the select Committee on Prohibition, to consider the expediency of placing in the Constitution the following provision:

The Legislature may provide by law for the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic beverages.

Which was referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors, etc.

Mr. E. BROOKS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Cities take into consideration the propriety of so amending the Constitution as to require municipal corporations to sell all public property not absolutely necessary for the government and accommodation of those holding office in such cities.

Which was referred to the Committee on Cities, etc.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution: Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the propriety of inserting a provision in the Constitution, substantially as follows:

Courts of special sessions in the several counties of this State shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear, try and determine all cases of assault and battery not charged to have been committed riotously, or upon any public officer; all cases of petit larceny not charged as a second offense, and all cases of intoxication; provided, however, that the accused in such cases shall have the right to demand a trial by jury in such courts.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STRATTON — I ask to have taken from the table a resolution asking for certain information from the comptroller of the city of New York, and I move for its adoption.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the comptroller of the city of New York be requested to prepare and communicate to this Convention, as early as practicable, the amount paid for the year 1866, for salaries of justices, judges, clerks, stenographers, officers, inspectors and attendants, and the amounts paid for stationery and contingent expenses of the following named courts in the city of New York, stating the number of justices, judges, clerks and other attendants of each court separately, and all other expenses of each court separately, as far as he is able to do so, and also whether said amounts are to be increased or diminished the present year, and how much, viz.: supreme court, superior court, court of common pleas, marine court.

The question was then put on the resolution and it was declared adopted.

Mr. GRAVES — I offer the resolution to be found on page 45 of the Journal, which was submitted to the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and which has not been reported upon. On consultation with some persons who are opposed to the principles involved in the resolution—

The CHAIRMAN — The Chair does not understand the motion of the gentleman from Herkimer [Mr. Graves].

Mr. GRAVES — I will state it in a moment. Some of the persons who are opposed to the principles contained in the resolution, as well as those who are favorable to them, have said that some time should be designated in the resolution when the Convention should be held, allowing the women to determine whether they would exercise this privilege, to afford them a proper time for discussion, so as to enable them to say advisedly whether it is proper for them to exercise the elective franchise or not. I have now incorporated in the resolution the time, fixing the date for June, 1868.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to report to this Convention, at as early a day as practical, whether, in their opinion, a provision should be incorporated in the Constitution authorizing the women in this State to exercise the elective franchise, when they shall ask that right by a majority of all the votes given by citizen females over the age of twenty-one years, at an election called for that purpose, in June, 1868, at which the women alone shall have the right to vote.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — I move the reference of this resolution to the Committee of the Whole, having in charge the question of female suffrage.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. C. C. Dwight, and it was declared carried.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That section nine of article four, of the existing Constitution, be amended by inserting the word "elected" in place of the word "present," in the seventh line thereof, relating to the veto power.

The CHAIRMAN — What reference does the gentleman [Mr. S. Townsend] ask for the resolution.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND — I suppose to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature. I beg leave to say a word or two in connection with offering the amendment. Among the very few oversights and omissions, if there is more than this, in the Constitution of 1846, which has been pronounced by my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] almost immaculate, was this, that while they prescribed that no statute should be enacted without the vote of sixty-five members of the Assembly, and seventeen members of the Senate, yet that Convention left the veto power in such a position that in any instance a vote of forty-four in the Assembly and fourteen in the Senate, might overcome the opposition of the Governor. Such an absurdity must only have occurred through oversight, and it is:

Mr. KERNAN — No, I did not. It was simply a motion to amend in the respect named.

Mr. GREELEY — The gentleman [Mr. Kernan] has stated that no practical evil has been experienced at the polls. Where I voted last fall, a person who was a resident of the county, only by virtue of being placed by the court in charge of a committee or guardian, appeared at the polls and offered his vote. His vote was challenged, but he swore it in under the direction and guidance of the people who had charge of him, by order of the court, and we could not help it.

Mr. KERNAN — For what reason had he been placed under the charge of a committee?

Mr. GREELEY — For incompetency of mind.

Mr. KERNAN — What was the specific cause?

Mr. GREELEY — I do not know what was the cause. I stated simply the fact, that at our poll in the town of New Castle, in Westchester county, last fall, appeared a person who was utterly unknown to us, and whom we found to be a New York man, who had been brought from New York to our town under the charge of a committee or guardian, who had brought him into the county of Westchester and boarded him with his father; and that father and his son brought this person up to the polls, and he swore in his vote in spite of us and all we could do. He was only in the county by virtue of having been placed in charge of a committee. Now the gentleman says there is no need of this clause—that these officers—the inspectors of election—are not the proper persons to determine who are or who are not lunatics. How then is the case to be determined? Here comes up an undoubted idiot. We know him to be such. How is he to be excluded? Or suppose him to be insane, and known to be such. How is he to be excluded? He comes up and, if he is not excluded, he votes. Those who have control of the idiot or lunatic, may put him on the register, and make him vote in spite of you. What is wanted is a rational decision by the people of this State. I do not believe that the right of suffrage belongs to persons of any class, whose vote will not contribute to the intelligence and capacity which go to make up the popular verdict. It is no benefit to these poor creatures, to make them voters. It is a cause of discord and contention at the polls, for in times of high party excitement, persons who we know ought not to vote, will be brought up, and if they have not the proper mental capacity to vote, they will be crowded through. Men will say, as they have done. "They, on the other side, will get all the votes they can, and we must do the same." I trust, therefore, that this Convention, if they mean that idiots shall not vote, will say so. It certainly is very dangerous to leave to inspectors of election, the power to exclude idiots from voting, when the Constitution does not provide that they shall be excluded. If you mean that idiots and insane persons shall not vote, let the Constitution of the State say so. I wish to say a word in regard to striking out the word "pauper." The article as presented, requires simply that a man who is to vote shall not be the recipient of public alms during the thirty days preceding election. Those thirty days occur in the bright month of October, when the earth is teeming with plenty, and at a time when, if a man has ever earned anything, he has earned it during the preceding summer; and we say that if he wants to vote he must keep clear of the reception of public alms during those thirty days. I do think that this is an exceedingly mild proposition. It is, in effect, a proposition to deprive some fifty or sixty managers of poor-houses, and dispensers of public alms, of the privilege of casting eight or ten thousand votes in this State. That is just what it amounts to. If these recipients of public charity receive aid from public officers, will they not be under the control of those officers, men who give them perhaps two dollars, or three dollars, or whatever amount they think best. Do you suppose they will vote against the wishes of a man who holds the purse strings, who decides how they shall live, whether they shall live well or ill? I do hope that so much of the report of the committee as recommends that a man shall not be allowed to vote who has received alms within thirty days, will be left to stand.

Mr. DALY — If the fact be so, as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] states, that he knew of an individual case in which a person was improperly allowed to vote, that is no reason in itself why we should make an important change in the fundamental law; and even if it were a fact that it has been the custom in the city of New York for all the inmates in the public almshouse to vote at the suggestion and according to the will of those who are intrusted with the management of that establishment, that particular instance of local abuse would be no reason in itself for a change in the fundamental law, by which all persons who are in the unfortunate situation of being supported at the public expense, shall be deprived of the privilege of the elective franchise. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], has stated as a reason for this change, and as evidence of the fact which he states, that at a certain Congressional election in the city of New York, all the inmates of the public almshouse were taken to the polls by the superintendent or managers of that institution, and that they voted for a particular candidate. That event occurred twenty-four years ago.

Mr. GREELEY — It was in 1846.

Mr. DALY — I make the assertion, after due consideration, that the event occurred in 1842. I am a native and resident of the city of New York, and take cognizance of facts that occur there, as all persons with the same means of intelligence; and I add to it the statement that from that time to the present, I have never heard nor read, nor has the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] stated a single instance in which that abuse has been followed or has occurred again. I think it most unlikely it should occur, from a fact which I will state. The management of the public charities of the city of New York is intrusted to a body consisting of four gentlemen who are equally divided, and have been from the organization of the board, between the two great political parties of the State. And the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will not dispute that the gentlemen who have filled this important trust have uniformly been men of Lunatics may have a committee appointed for their person and estate. Unless the jury go further than that persons are merely of unsound mind, and find that they are also incapable of managing their own affairs, no committee can be appointed; so that the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], which refers to persons judicially declared to be of unsound mind, or incapable of managing their own affairs, I am fearful will not reach the class of persons known as idiots and lunatics. For these reasons I offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be on the amendment of Mr. Krum to the amendment of Mr. Lapham.

Mr. LAPHAM—Mr. Chairman, the term "unsound mind" embraces every description of mental infirmity. It is a broader term and more comprehensive than any other which could be employed, and includes every description of persons who may become the subject of an inquisition, with the view of inquiring into the state of their minds, to ascertain whether they are capable of attending their affairs, and is in my judgment a better term than that contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Scholastic [Mr. Krum]. The amendment excludes certain cases which are contained in my proposition and which are equally, it seems to me, while under the disability, improper persons to exercise the elective franchise. I assent to the suggestion of the gentleman to this extent: my amendment ought to have provided that this deprivation of the right to exercise the elective franchise should apply only while the persons are under the disability. I concur in the propriety of the amendment suggested, and am willing to have a modification of the original proposition to that extent, for that was my design.

Mr. KRUM—I know, sir, that the term "unsound mind" is very comprehensive, but I hardly think that the gentleman will say that it is more comprehensive than the words "idiots and lunatics," added to the term "and persons of unsound mind." My proposition not only includes persons of unsound mind, but also idiots and lunatics, by name.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Krum, and it was declared lost.

Mr. KERNAN—I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out lines eight and nine to and including the word "bribery" and in lieu thereof insert "provided that persons convicted of felony or bribery."

Mr. KERNAN—The section as amended will then read: "Provided that persons convicted of felony or bribery, unless pardoned or otherwise restored to civil rights, shall not be entitled to vote." My object is to substitute this so that if the original section and the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], be adopted there will be nothing in the Constitution excluding idiots, lunatics, or persons under the control of a committee, from voting. Now, sir, while probably no one will argue that it is fit or proper, that idiots or lunatics should vote, yet there is a good deal of difficulty, practically, where the question as to the capacity of the party to be established by judicial record or otherwise, being decided by a board of inspectors of election, I do not think that in the previous history of the State, there has been any difficulty felt by the people in reference to this class of persons voting. None of our Constitutions, I believe, have prohibited them from voting, nor have I ever learned that there was ever any complaint that this class of persons have voted. I suppose no one would be in favor of allowing the inspectors of election to decide who is an idiot, or who is a lunatic. There is a great difference of opinion on that subject, you will find, among men. If, as I understand the amendment, they are to be excluded when they have been judicially decreed to be idiots or lunatics, that would happen to very few of the idiots or lunatics in the State. It is quite rare that the case of a person who is an idiot or lunatic, confessedly so, is brought before a court, and the fact judicially established. The proposed amendment, therefore, will reach but few of the class of persons generally conceded to be of those named, and there would be difficulty and trouble, and questions arising as to the competency of the proof, when it is attempted to establish that the party has been thus adjudicated. And, therefore, I have thought that we would be wise in allowing the Constitution to be in reference to this class of persons, precisely what it has been hitherto. I think no man confessedly an idiot or lunatic will be likely to come himself to vote, and the man or partisan who should endeavor to have him vote, I think we may leave him to be shamed down by men of all parties, at that election. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], it excludes persons over whom the court have appointed a committee, on account of their intemperate habits. I am opposed to that. If all men, intemperate or temperate, over whom any committee has been appointed, are allowed to vote, I don't think it wise in the few cases where the courts have taken charge of a man's person and estate, by a committee, and where the law and the order of the court are stringent that he should be kept sober, to say that that man should be excluded from voting, although sober, when all others, whether intoxicated or not, are allowed to vote. It is rare that a committee is appointed over an intemperate person, except when he has an estate to squander, and then there is generally care taken of his estate, and there are provisions of the law, that he shall be prevented from indulging in the habit detrimental to him. For these reasons, it seems to me, that the original provision in the proposed clause, is unnecessary and unwise, and that instead of adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], it would seem wiser for us simply to strike out all that part of the report, and confine its exclusion to persons convicted of felony or of bribery.

The CHAIRMAN—Does the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] also include in his amendment the clause referring to the duration of time?

Mr. KERNAN—No, I did not. It was simply a motion to amend in the respect named.

Mr. GREELEY—The gentleman [Mr. Kernan] has stated that no practical evil has been experienced at the polls. Where I voted last fall, a person who was a resident of the county, only by virtue of being placed by the court in charge of a committee or guardian, appeared at the polls and offered his vote. His vote was challenged, but he swore it in under the direction and guidance of the people who had charge of him, by order of the court, and we could not help it.

Mr. KERNAN—For what reason had he been placed under the charge of a committee?

It certainly is very dangerous to leave to inspectors of election, the power to exclude idiots from voting, when the Constitution does not provide that they shall be excluded. If you mean that idiots and insane persons shall not vote, let the Constitution of the State say so. I wish to say a word in regard to striking out the word "pauper." The article as presented, requires simply that a man who is to vote shall not be the recipient of public alms during the thirty days preceding election. Those thirty days occur in the bright month of October, when the earth is teeming with plenty, and at a time when, if a man has ever earned anything, he has earned it during the preceding summer; and we say that if he wants to vote he must keep clear of the reception of public alms during those thirty days. I do think that this is an exceedingly mild proposition. It is, in effect, a proposition to deprive some fifty or sixty managers of poor-houses, and dispensers of public alms, of the privilege of casting eight or ten thousand votes in this State. That is just what it amounts to. If these recipients of public charity receive aid from public officers, will they not be under the control of those officers, men who give them perhaps two dollars, or three dollars, or whatever amount they think best. Do you suppose they will vote against the wishes of a man who holds the purse strings, who decides how they shall live, whether they shall live well or ill? I do hope that so much of the report of the committee as recommends that a man shall not be allowed to vote who has received alms within thirty days, will be left to stand.

Mr. DALY—If the fact be so, as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] states, that he knew of an individual case in which a person was improperly allowed to vote, that is no reason in itself why we should make an important change in the fundamental law; and even if it were a fact that it has been the custom in the city of New York for all the inmates in the public almshouse to vote at the suggestion and according to the will of those who are intrusted with the management of that establishment, that particular instance of local abuse would be no reason in itself for a change in the fundamental law, by which all persons who are in the unfortunate situation of being supported at the public expense, shall be deprived of the privilege of the elective franchise. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], has stated as a reason for this change, and as evidence of the fact which he states, that at a certain Congressional election in the city of New York, all the inmates of the public almshouse were taken to the polls by the superintendent or managers of that institution, and that they voted for a particular candidate. That event occurred twenty-four years ago.

Mr. GREELEY—It was in 1846.

Mr. DALY—I make the assertion, after due consideration, that the event occurred in 1842. I am a native and resident of the city of New York, and take cognizance of facts that occur there, as all persons with the same means of intelligence; and I add to it the statement that from that time to the present, I have never heard nor read, nor has the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] stated a single instance in which that abuse has been followed or has occurred again. I think it most unlikely it should occur, from a fact which I will state. The management of the public charities of the city of New York is intrusted to a body consisting of four gentlemen who are equally divided, and have been from the organization of the board, between the two great political parties of the State. And the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] will not dispute that the gentlemen who have filled this important trust have uniformly been men of high character and unsullied reputation. I therefore suppose it to be very improbable, with the entire control which they have over that institution in the city of New York, that they would ever permit an abuse of that character. I will say in addition, having had some experience in the inspection of such institutions, both in this country and in Europe, that in my judgment, there is no institution of a similar nature, managed with more ability, with greater humanity or with more economy, in respect to its particular administration than that institution. And I will add the further suggestion, that having had many occasions to visit it for purposes connected with benevolence, I can bear my testimony to the fact that the unfortunate persons who are the recipients of the public bounty may, in point of intelligence, be classed generally with their fellow citizens. They are generally persons who are advanced in age, and many of whom are suffering from incurable physical infirmities; but so far as my experience extends, the general grade of their intelligence and their ability to exercise this important political privilege, is quite equal to that of a large portion of their fellow citizens. I have only one additional remark to make, and that is in support of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham]. I speak of it entirely with reference to its effect in the city of New York. How it may affect other portions of the State, I am unable to judge. It is in that postical period of the year which the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] refers to, (and during which he requires that the public paupers should discharge themselves from the public institutions, and support themselves at their own expense, as a prerequisite to the exercise of the privilege of voting), in the latter part of the month of October, that nearly all persons who exercise the elective franchise as the result of naturalization, take out their final papers; and it is at that same period that the great bulk of those who design becoming citizens declare their intentions. The fact that an election is approaching attracts the attention of all persons who desire to avail themselves of that privilege. And the singular fact occurs, of which I have knowledge, from an intimate acquaintance with the operations of the courts, that the number of persons who declare their intentions, and who take out their final papers, at that same period of the year which the gentleman alludes to, are about equal. I have, perhaps, discharged the official duty of naturalizing citizens, during a long continuance on the bench, to as great an extent as any other person, and therefore when I make this statement, I do it upon knowledge. The practical effect of the clause proposed by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] to be incorporated into the Constitution (and which would be obviated, in my judgment, by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario) [Mr. Lapham], would be to cut off all persons who have declared their intention in a particular year, at any time within thirty days previous to an election, from the privilege of voting in that year in which they would otherwise be entitled to vote by their naturalization. The courts in the city of New York interpret the Constitution in a liberal spirit. They refuse to naturalize within ten days previous to an election, although there is no positive prohibition in the Constitution. But inasmuch as it prohibits a person from voting who has not been a citizen ten days, the court of which I am a member, and so far as I know, the other courts, have never naturalized within that period. And as naturalization is suspended ten days before the date of an election, the greater portion of the naturalization takes place during the twenty days preceding that suspension. The practical effect, therefore, of the adoption of the clause, reported by the committee, would be to preclude from voting, those persons whose five years expire within thirty days preceding the election. For that reason, and because of the injustice of depriving so large a class of the exercise of this privilege, who are, according to the laws of the United States and the laws of the State, otherwise qualified to exercise the privilege of a citizen in voting, I object to the extension of the period beyond the ten days. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I bear evidence to the wisdom of the provision of the Constitution of 1846, which requires some such period as ten days to elapse prior to an election, during which parties coming into the court for the purpose of being naturalized shall not be entitled to vote. It was a most unseemly spectacle in our elections formerly, in the city of New York, when persons who were qualified as voters only on the day of the election, or immediately preceding it, intermingled with the elections. It led to very great abuses, and therefore the courts of New York, carrying out the spirit of the Constitution, have refused even to naturalize, as I have suggested, within ten days preceding the time of an election.

Mr. GERRY — I would like to ask the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], whether the practical effect of the adoption of the clause reported by the committee would not be to disfranchise unfortunate men who have received wounds in the service of their country, and have thus become disabled, and been compelled by reason of accidental poverty to resort for a temporary period to the almshouse?

Mr. BARNARD — We have here three subjects for our consideration. One is, as has been suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Daly] whether we shall cut off in the city of New York, from the privilege of voting, some ten or fifteen thousand individuals, who have within the last few years declared their intentions, within a month before the election, to become citizens, and I may say, in reference to the county of Kings, whether you will cut off from the voters of that county about five thousand who have been similarly situated. Now, sir, you will bear in mind, or if not those who live in those counties well know, that immediately preceding the election, within the last twenty days in which persons can be naturalized, the courts are more accommodating than at other times; they give up their other civil business; instead of sitting from 10 o'clock until 3 o'clock, and instead of the county clerk's office being open from 9 o'clock until 4 o'clock, for about a month before the time that naturalization closes, the courts will be in session from 9 o'clock in the morning till 10 o'clock at night, and the county clerk's office will be open for as long a time. Hence, it is, that those persons who are compelled to earn their living by their daily toil, and cannot be spared for one day to go up to the county clerk's office, as they must go between the hours of nine and four, are unable, without losing a day, to go up to the clerk's office to declare their intentions before nine o'clock at night, during the period I have mentioned. Now, that class of persons are to be cut off by this amendment, and it has been suggested by the chairman of the committee that unless you allow this article to remain, persons may go from one county to another within ten days and have the right to vote. Who has asked of this Convention to change the Constitution in reference to county residence? Has there been a single petition presented here for any such purpose? Why is it then, that this subject of county residence is not insisted upon? Why is it unreasonable that a man should be a resident of the county three or four months before he votes? I submit, the committee has given no good reason in their report for the change, and, if you will look at the spirit of their report and look at the articles which they have proposed, you will see that they are making a very wide distinction among the different classes of our voters. They have reported all in favor of the rich, and seek by every means to cut the poor off from the privilege of voting. They say one reason is that gentlemen in the city of New York wish to reside in the country during the summer months, and possibly they may be so conscientious by reason of their residing there that when they return in the fall they may not go forward to vote. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that in my experience of some thirty years on the subject of voting in our large cities, I have found very few of those conscientious individuals.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask the Chair to request the gentleman [Mr. Barnard], when he professes to controvert the position of the report, to quote the report. His statements are not in accordance with the report itself.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman [Mr. Greeley], that the only way he can address the Chair when another gentleman is on the floor, is to request the gentleman who is addressing the Chair to give way for that purpose.

Mr. BARNARD—If I have misunderstood the report, I will try to correct myself. I think it states here in this report, on page 4:

"At present, a resident in any county for four months is allowed to vote at the poll of any district wherein he actually resides on the day of election, though he may be a total stranger in that district. We ask you to abolish the present requirement of four months' residence in a county as a pre-requisite to voting. This exaction bears hardly on such residents of cities as spend their summer mainly in the country, and cannot afford to maintain a double residence."

Then at the close of the report, in some other part, it speaks of those who are kept away under such circumstance that they cannot vote on account of their conscientious scruples. Now, sir, these rich persons because they are the rich—

Mr. FOLGER—I would ask the gentleman to continue his reading. He has left out the important part.

Mr. BARNARD—I am coming to that part directly. I did not forget it. It is because of that class that are referred to afterward that I intend to pursue the course I am pursuing to-day. These persons that go into the country, and have country residences, I have never known to be so conscientious as has been suggested. As they have an intention to return to the city at the end of their summer vacation, they always claim the right to vote. I have found very few that had these conscientious scruples that are referred to in this report. Now, it is said here afterward that thousands of intelligent and patriotic young mechanics, employed as carpenters, bricklayers, painters, plumbers, gas-fitters, etc., go into the country to work in the summer time. That is very true, and when they come back to vote, they vote because, they say truly, that their absence is but temporary; that they had the intention of returning, and they do come back for the purpose of voting. And of all the report of the committee it is only that part of it in which they provide that the registry law shall be universal throughout the State, which I can approve of. That is what these bricklayers, house-carpenters and painters have complained of heretofore, and did last year; that instead of having the same privilege of registering which their fellow citizens in the country had, by having the register to put their names down if they knew them to be voters, or by having a friend to go forward and have their names inscribed on the register, some enemies of these hard-working men had inserted into your laws a provision requiring them to go down, during the time that the register was open, and appear in person before the registers and have their names inscribed, or they would be excluded from the privilege of voting. These men ask no such benefit as this given them here. They know their rights; they know that if they go into the country for the purpose of working they are leaving their homes in the city; that on election day they can return to the city and vote. But what they have complained of heretofore is this: that they have been compelled to go twice to the city, once to register, and again afterward to vote, and each time at a considerable expense. We are here for the purpose of submitting a Constitution to the people that we believe they want, and one that we believe they will approve of; and if we dare to send down a Constitution which we may reasonably believe, from past experience, the people will reject, we are guilty, I believe, of a great act of folly, and are wasting our time here. Owing to the peculiar division of our people in this State, it cannot be expected that any mere party Constitution can prevail. You will always find people enough of both parties; people who are satisfied with things as they are; who live by the present system, and who profit by it; who will vote "no" to any change which this Convention may propose. We are, therefore, bound here to endeavor to send such a Constitution to the people as they will, by a majority, approve of. We must take care, therefore, to lay aside all this war which has heretofore prevailed in this State for the few years past against the people of our cities, seeking to deprive them in one way or another of the right of suffrage. And this deprivation you are about to continue by this proposed thirty day clause, or, if you please, the four months' residence provision. I see no difficulty in the way. I am satisfied that but few persons who go into the country to reside for the summer, have not the right to vote when they return; and the laborers that are mentioned in this report will also have the right to vote. And then as to the other class referred to, the Methodist ministers. It is not a matter of doctrine when the Methodist ministers shall be changed in their location, and if they find it burdensome to change within four months, they may ask of the presiding elders of their conference that it shall meet earlier and make the changes so that they can exercise the right of suffrage in common with their fellow citizens. That is an easier thing to do than the other alternative proposed here, which is to open the door so that within the space of one short month, a system which we all deprecate, a system of colonization which can take place from one county to another as well as from one ward to another. I, therefore, hope that before we adopt this first section, we will consider this matter, and ascertain whether we will, with the knowledge that by the adoption of this section as reported, be likely to disfranchise, at the Presidential election, some fifteen or twenty thousand citizens, who will then be citizens, and who, relying on the Constitution continuing as it is, and relying upon the practice in our cities, have, within a month prior to the election of 1866, declared their intentions, and expect within a month prior to the election of 1868, to take the oath and become citizens of the United States. And if we find so great a body of men likely to be disfranchised by this article, may it not have a tendency to induce many hundreds and thousands of those who might otherwise vote for the Constitution, that we shall submit to the people, but for this great disfranchising clause, which might seem to have been inserted for a mere party purpose, to vote against it. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews], in his remarks yesterday, seemed to think that it would be better that a person should be a long time naturalized — as long a time as thirty days before the election — on account of his keeping clear from the corruptions of politics, if I understood his remarks rightly, or something to that effect. I will say to the gentleman I do not understand that remark. I do not understand that politics are necessarily corrupt. I do not believe that politicians are necessarily corrupt. I hold it to be the true function of politics to make all our citizens acquainted with public affairs, that they may understand their rights and their duties as citizens and exercise them. One of the greatest evils that has been complained of by the press, and by parties generally, has been indifference on the part of the people to the exercise of the highest right of a citizen — the right to the elective franchise. Now, it is true as we approach an election there is more interest felt in the election. I do not understand that interest is excitement. During the last election in one of our large cities — in the city of Brooklyn, where I reside — I suppose there was as much public interest felt in the election as has ever been felt in that city: the number of voters on the day of the election seemed to prove that. I suppose for more than one month before that time I attended a political meeting every night excepting Sundays, and the only political meetings that were held on Sundays were held by a party that I did not affiliate with. [Laughter.] Now, when we had our meetings, we had large numbers of persons who came to attend those meetings. We had able men from all parts of our State and all parts of the country, addressing our citizens in reference to political affairs. I saw no corruption, no excitement even, that was any way unhealthy. True, it is, that the sons of toil came up in their working dress, "unwashed" as they are sometimes called in the pamphlets that have been placed upon our tables; but they came up with clear heads, with sound minds, with well behaved deportment, and they heard all that was said. They deliberated; they went to their respective homes; they came up on the day of election and cast their votes, and in that county cast a vote that astonished a great many. Yet there was no corruption, no excitement there, and of that number were these thousands I have mentioned, who, for the first time within a month prior to that election, were made American citizens by naturalization. It is not, therefore, necessary that we should stigmatize all political excitement as corrupt; when the people are aroused to their duty, when they feel an interest in public affairs, when they come forward on the day of election in large numbers, and in their might, we may look for a healthy state of affairs and a fair expression of the opinions of the people. Therefore I hope the amendment which is before us, of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] to fix this time at ten days, will remain as it is, and that the present Constitution may remain as it is.

Mr. HUTCHINS — Will the gentleman [Mr. Barnard], allow me to ask him a question. I understand the gentleman to say he is in favor of the ten day clause, the same as it is in the Constitution of 1846. I would ask the gentleman why he is in favor of having even a ten day clause in the Constitution.

Mr. BARNARD — Why, because, Mr. Chairman, it is in the present Constitution! [laughter] and for the present, I want to see no change, unless it is called for by the public sentiment, and unless we have seen some public wrong and some public evil to spring out of it. That is the reason why I want it to remain for ten days. I am a little conservative in my notions, I want to go into no change unless I am satisfied it will be for the better, or unless it will remove some existing evil.

Mr. HUTCHINS — Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a further question. I will ask, when this clause was put in the Constitution of 1846, why the members of that Convention did not see fit to prefer the Constitution of 1821, which had no such clause?

Mr. BARNARD — It is enough for me to say, it was put into the Constitution of 1846, it was submitted to the people and received a majority of the votes of the people! That is enough for me. Now, then, let us come to the second branch of the subject we have before us. The committee have reported a provision to exclude idiots, lunatics, etc., from the right of voting. The gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] proposes we should insert a clause, confining it to those who are judicially determined to be such, and the chairman of the committee has objected to the insertion of such a clause. What will be the effect on the Constitution, supposing it to be adopted, with the provision as reported by the committee? You would have the inspectors of election exercising judicial powers, and I want to see as little of that as possible. While they are investigating whether a man is an idiot, or a person of unsound mind, they may be excluding two hundred legal voters from the privilege of the elective franchise.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to ask the gentleman, if he will allow me, if that is not precisely the case to-day. Suppose an idiot or a notorious lunatic does come up to the polls and offer his vote, I ask whether they do not judge of his qualifications and decide either to exclude or admit his vote?

Mr. BARNARD—That is more than I can tell. If they do, then we do not want to insert the provision in the Constitution; it is sufficient for the purpose if it is done. What I object to, is investing these inspectors of election with any judicial power whatever. If I were to say what was necessary by the law, it would be simply this. "Your duty shall be, to take the vote of every duly registered citizen, deposit it in the ballot box and canvass it afterward; and should an oath be required, put the oath, and so pass on." Why sir, in the election district in which I now reside, at the election in 1866, so great was the crowd of persons seeking to vote, that every person who came into the line after 10 o'clock in the morning, lost his chance to vote. And nothing was done on that occasion but to examine the register and ascertain if the names were on there and to put the oath in case of a challenge, yet more than five hundred persons in that district were excluded from the right of suffrage. But allow the board of inspectors on election day, to investigate whether a man is of unsound mind or not—and what a field of investigation there would be! This very thing was referred to here, in the discussion of yesterday. Those of us who are familiar with our law reports know what has been the action of our courts in this respect. I need only refer to two cases, that have become a part of our judicial history. The Alice Lisperard case, and the Parrish will case, as it was called, which occupied the attention of our courts, from day to day, and month to month, in ascertaining what constituted a person of unsound mind. Seven large volumes of testimony were taken in the Parrish will case, to ascertain whether a man was of sound mind when he made that part of his will which was contested. He made a will when he was in good health, and afterward when he was prostrated with disease, he made a codicil and the court finally determined that in regard to all he did after such prostration, that he was not of sound mind enough to make a will. The question of who is an idiot or a person of unsound mind is a question of great difficulty. I have seen within the last month or two, in some of our leading public journals, that a gentleman who put his name to a certain bail-bond, was an idiot and a madman. [Laughter.] Let us suppose that gentlemen were to walk up to the polls in his election district in Westchester county, to cast his vote, and a voter were to step up and say, "I object to the casting of that vote; I object to it because that man is an idiot and a madman." [Laughter.] Who is to judge of that? Suppose the inspectors of election were the editors of those newspapers I have referred to (one of them an anti-slavery paper), and they should say, "Sir, you cannot vote; you are an idiot and a madman." [Renewed laughter.] The appearance of the man, his highly intellectual countenance, his well known benevolent disposition, his mode of speaking, the musical tones we know the man can utter when he chooses, will all be of no effect with these inspectors. [Laughter.] They will say: "Mr. A., or Mr. G., prove that you did not sign that bail-bond; because if you signed that bail-bond, in our opinion, you are an idiot and a lunatic who ought not to be permitted to vote." [Great laughter, which was promptly suppressed by the Chair.] Now let us come to another class. If I understand the meaning of the word idiot, it is one who is otherwise called a blockhead, and a blockhead, we all know, is a man whose head is made of a block, with no brains in it, and no room to put brains. Then we will suppose a person who issues more proclamations in one month than the President of the United States and the Governor of the State of New York put together, in the city of New York—the head of the city police, were to walk up to one of the polls to vote, and a voter steps forth and says, "I object to that man voting!" "Why?" "Because he is a blockhead!" [Laughter.] And I have seen in one of the leading journals of the city of New York, over the signature of a very distinguished man, and a good judge of human nature, that every man who signed a call for a meeting of a particular club to expel a certain individual for signing a bail-bond, was a blockhead! [Renewed laughter.] Why, sir, the chief of police of the city of New York would be excluded upon any such rule as that! We must not give any opportunity for inspectors of elections to waste the time of the people while they are investigating the question, whether any man is of unsound mind, whether he is a lunatic, a blockhead, or an idiot. Let that fact first be found by some judicial determination, and afterward exclude the person from the privilege of voting, if you will. Then we come to the third proposition before us here, which is in reference to paupers. I have seen (and probably it has been put into the hands of all of us this morning), in the columns of a newspaper in the city of New York, a proposed amendment to the section now under consideration, which is a little more definite as to the parties to be excluded. It definitely excludes the inmates of prisons and almshouses from the right of suffrage. Why did not the committee propose that, and go no further in their attacks upon the poor man?

Mr. GREELEY—If the gentleman will allow me, I will answer his question now. It was simply because we find that the keepers of prisons and almshouses are in the habit of turning those people out a day or two before the election, so they may get their votes, and then taking them back again after they have voted.

Mr. BARNARD—Well, if that is so, it is a very easy matter for the Legislature to make a law to prevent any abuse of that kind. But the provision here goes further. It says: "No person who at any time within thirty days next preceding, have been a public pauper, shall vote at any election." We have had the definition of what is a public pauper made by our courts, and as early as 13 Johnson's Reports, a man who had been sick and had one load of wood donated to him by the superintendent of the poor, was held to be a public pauper and his children taken away from him and bound out against his will and consent. And every man, although he may never have received but one dollar's worth of wood from the superintendent of the poor, yet if he receives that one within thirty days of an election, he is to be excluded from the right to vote, no matter how unfortunate he may have been in his sickness. It is my fortune to be connected with many institutions in the city of Brooklyn, for the relief of the distressed and sick, and every Saturday night I take my place as treasurer of one of those committees, disbursing not less than $150 every Saturday night, and from that up to $350 to those who by misfortune or sickness during the past week have been thrown upon us for aid. To be sure they are not public paupers, but suppose no such institution existed, and persons similarly situated, belonged to no such institution where they could get this kind of aid? Take for instance the month of October, and we sometimes have hard frosts during that month, coming as it does after the summer months, when the usual summer complaints and fevers are so prevalent, and suppose during that time a man is prostrated by sickness and his wife finds she has not a particle of coal to do her usual and necessary cooking with, and she upon inquiring finds that the superintendents of the poor, would send her half a ton of coal if she were to ask for it, as a portion of their outdoor relief, then she sends up and asks for it, gets it, and he is cut off from the right to vote! No matter how intelligent he may be, no matter how long or how ardently he has struggled in behalf of his country in her conflict with her enemies; he is poor, he is without means, a small particle, half a ton or a quarter of a ton of coal given to his family during the month previous to election makes him a public pauper and he is cut off! The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] yesterday undertook to justify this provision, and undertook to say, that any man who will so far accept of the money raised from the people by taxation, ought to consent to give up his right of voting. Why ought he? Is it because he is poor? Or because he receives the public money? If I should be inclined to cut off from voting every man who receives the public money raised by taxation, I should begin with the Governor and go down through all the classes of public officers, even though it might be twenty years hence, when another Convention shall meet to revise the Constitution and make it obligatory upon them to close their session more than thirty days before the election in order that they should receive no portion of the public money. We have men among us who are almost public paupers, who hold public office. They render no equivalent for all they receive, and yet they are receiving public money raised by taxation. The only misfortune of that class of men is, they are not poor, and therefore they do not come within the class of public paupers described here. They do not receive money from the superintendents of the poor or the overseers of the poor. Under that same rule, as laid down by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], every man who sends his children to our public schools, that are supported by public taxation, will be called a public pauper and would be excluded from the right to vote. I trust when we come to look at this question in this light, we shall see there is great danger in sending a Constitution to the people containing any material change in regard to the right of suffrage, that may seem to be an invasion upon rights already exercised. No man can tell at the present time, what may be his situation hereafter; he may be reduced by misfortune or by poverty so it will be absolutely necessary for the preservation of himself and his family that he should receive some relief from our public charities or from the overseers of the poor, and to undertake to cut off that class by the language used here in this provision, in my opinion will endanger the success of the whole Constitution we may send to the people. I, therefore, hope that the liberal amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham] will be adopted, and that we will not, by this thirty day clause, cut off those who have declared their intention, and who without this exclusion would have the right to vote in 1868; and that we will not give to inspectors of election any judicial power whatever to determine who is an idiot, or a lunatic, or a person of unsound mind; and that we will not say that those who by misfortune and poverty are compelled, within thirty days of an election, to receive relief from the moneys raised for the support of the poor shall be excluded from the right to vote.

Mr. SPENCER—I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], to modify the language of his amendment, so as to make it conform to the existing Constitution. The provision of the existing Constitution which is intended to be covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], reads as follows:

"Laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who have been or may be convicted of bribery, larceny or of any infamous crime."

The report of the committee intending to cover substantially that provision, has changed its language, so far as I can see, without intending to provide for the remedy for any existing mischief in the present Constitution. The language of this provision is, "Felons and persons convicted of bribery." The language reported by the commit-toe does not provide that a person shall have been convicted of felony, only that he shall be a felon, leaving it to the inspectors of election to determine that fact. I can myself see no mischief in the language of the existing Constitution in that respect, which requires any remedy, and therefore I suggest a modification of the language of the amendment, to conform in that respect.

Mr. KERNAN — I accept the amendment, and will make it substantially to conform by inserting after the word "felony" the word "larceny," and after the word "bribery" the words "or any infamous crime." I believe that meets the suggestion.

Mr. SPENCER — Omitting the word "felon?"

Mr. KERNAN — I have not used the word "felon." As I propose it, it will read "convicted of felony." Insert after that "larceny," and after the word "bribery" insert "or of any infamous crime." I think the language of the present Constitution preferable. I wish to state that I did not desire, in the amendment offered, to interfere with the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], further than to amend the text in the eighth and ninth lines, as stated in the amendment. The other portion of his amendment I concur in fully. If I may be allowed to make a single suggestion in favor of amending the text, it is not my desire that idiots or lunatics should vote, but it was for the reason that the proposition of the committee is impracticable in my view. As has been well stated by others, the board of inspectors is not the tribunal to decide who are idiots or who are lunatics; and inasmuch as I have never heard of any abuse to call for redress by such an amendment, I trust we shall adhere, in this respect, to the Constitution as it has hitherto existed, and not attempt to have the inspectors of election passing on who are idiots or lunatics. The Court of Errors in this State, in a case coming from the city of New York, held that a person far more incapable than those alluded to by the gentleman [Mr. Greeley], and who, I think, could never be taught to read or say the Lord's prayer, and who constantly required an attendant, in a very learned opinion by a distinguished Senator from the city of New York, held that that person was competent to make a will. If a party had the capacity to make a will I suppose he would have the capacity to vote. I only allude to this as it was a noted case—the case of Lispensard—to show how difficult the question of deciding who are idiots is regarded in law. That was the allegation in that case, and I say that I don't think any such judicial power or duty should be devolved upon the inspectors of election. There might be, as the gentleman says, and as there doubtless has been, from his statement of the facts, now and then a case where there is abuse; but I think the abuse has been very trifling, and the evil of having inspectors of election decide who have sufficient intellect, and who not, would lead to very great abuse and embarrassment; and therefore I believe it would be wise for us to amend the text in that particular, by leaving out the words referred to and by substituting those proposed; and then I would be in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], in reference to the thirty days' residence, and in reference to the exclusion of persons who have received public aid.

Mr. GREELEY — It strikes me that the abuse complained of by the gentleman who last sat down [Mr. Kernan], will be committed by this Convention if we fail to clothe the guardians of the public right and interest in this matter with power to do so. Let us suppose a case. An idiot is brought up by one party who wants to carry an election—an utterly senseless idiot. How is his vote to be kept out? If we say an idiot cannot vote, then he will be kept out; but without it there is no power to prevent that vote being polled in violation of all right and justice.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — Will the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] give way to allow me to answer his suggestion?

Mr. GREELEY — Certainly.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT — I think it is within the observation of every member of this Convention, who has been in the habit of attending the polls, that the vote of such a person as the gentleman has alluded to would be kept out by the simple interposition of the challenge, which would require the "utterly senseless idiot," whom the gentleman alludes to, to answer certain questions which it would be impossible for him to answer, and that his vote would thereby be effectually excluded.

Mr. GREELEY — The gentlemen proposes by an indirect way to accomplish a result—to disfranchise a qualified elector—that is, one whom the Convention proposes to allow to vote, and yet by indirection deprive him of his right of suffrage. I think it is better to be honest and straightforward and say he has no right to vote. Another gentleman, from New York [Mr. Gerry] asked "What will you do with the poor soldier who has fought for his country, and who is wounded and disabled and needs aid?" I say that man is not a pauper. It is our duty to see that, by a pension, he is in some measure compensated for his privation and suffering for his country. If we don't provide for him in that way, we are grossly wrong. I would give him a pension sufficient to enable him not to come with his hat in his hand begging for charity from the overseers of the poor. Let us now look a moment at the objection raised by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard], who gravely argues that this report proposes to shut out the poor and admit the rich in this matter of the thirty days' residence. Why, you are quite aware, and every man is aware, that the citizen who is able to have two residences, nay, who is able to own and to hold, or rent his house in town, and who goes into the country and spends two or three months in summer, retaining his home in the city, does not lose his right to vote. He can come home the day before the election and swear in his vote from the house where he resided, and which all the time has been his home. That is not the class. They do not need any relief. But there is a very much larger class of citizens whose business, whose industry, whose duty, calls them in the pursuit of a livelihood to leave the city and go into the country to work in the summer and fall. They are not able to keep a home in the city, or have a residence there. They close their residence and go into the country temporarily, taking all they have with them, very likely their wives and children, when they can take them there. Now they come back thirty days before election to the city again, and these persons are not entitled to vote by the Constitution as it stands. These industrious mechanics, if they do vote, they vote by an evasion of the provision of the Constitution. The rich man has no difficulty. He comes back to his home. That is what the poor man cannot do, because he is not able to keep two homes. That was the precise reason laid down in the report for the provision, and yet the gentleman gravely argues here that we propose to give the rich man double chances, and exclude the poor man. Now, as to the statement I made with reference to paupers voting in the city of New York. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], says that that occurred near twenty-four years ago, in 1842. I do not know but it did occur then; but the instance to which I allude occurred in 1846, and that I very well know, because of the contest being made in that House of Representatives, and the member returned being unseated, I was elected to fill the vacancy in November, 1848. I say I do not contradict his statement that such an occurrence took place in 1842, but I know very well that this took place in 1846, when David S. Jackson was chosen a member of Congress over James Monroe, and, it was so decided, by votes polled out of the almshouse. He says this does not now take place. I believe that last fall every voter that could be taken out of the almshouse, that had a vote anywhere, and could be taken out, was taken out, and that such votes very largely swelled the majority for John T. Hoffman in that city. He says, that our almshouse officers there are divided in politics, and that they do not control those votes. I do not understand it to be so. I do not understand that, last fall, James Bowen and Owen Brennan were opposed to John T. Hoffman and in favor of Governor Fenton, and I do not believe they were, although they were nominally republicans—of the Weed stripe. [Laughter]. What I ask is that we have a clear and definite provision on this subject which shall prevent the controllers of almshouses having this tremendous power. I do not say how many times it has been abused; I say we are guilty of abuse if we leave the power in their hands; that our duty here is to make this so plain that they cannot be tempted to control the votes of this class as they will, whether they be outdoor poor or indoor poor, if, during the month previous to election, they are dependent upon public functionaries who dole out charity for their subsistence. The ground taken by the report is that one proper qualification for suffrage is exemption from dependence through pauperism or guardianship. We desire they should be independent voters. Now, a man who is not worth the clothes he stands in may be an independent voter so long as he lives on the means he earns, no matter how poorly; no matter how closely his wants tread upon his earnings, if he earns a dollar a day and lives on that dollar a day no one has any right to say "you must vote as I want you, or as I would have you;" but the moment he sinks into a state of pauperism, from that moment the officer who has control of his subsistence has virtually control of his vote, and such votes, so taken, the committee desire to shut out, and I ask this committee to concur in that determination.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I have been a silent listener to the debate, and I have failed to discover any ground for the exclusion of paupers from the right of suffrage, or any justification for the restriction which this report places upon the naturalized citizen. The learned chairman of the committee [Mr. Greeley] seems to rest the disfranchisement of paupers upon their relation of dependence to the officers charged with their care and support.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I rise to a question of order. The question now before the committee upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], which relates simply to the three lines upon page two of the report of the committee and does not include the question of the exclusion of the pauper from the right of suffrage.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I deny that there is any such relation of dependence existing in that case as should call for the application of our organic law. What is this question of dependence? We have heard of employees—of public officers of the nation, and of departments of the government, being sent home just before an exciting election to control, by their votes, such election. We know that in the manufacturing establishments of one section of our country it has been long a cause of complaint that the operatives in these establishments, between whom and their employers there is a dependent condition said to exist, were turned out in droves to vote and control elections. We know that in all the business relations of life there is to some extent this relation of dependence; and if you are to exclude men upon that ground in the one case, why not exclude them in all? It is a fact well known to the members of this Convention that many of these poor laborers are entirely dependent upon their wages for their support. When they are turned off, and their wages are withheld, they pass, by transition, from the condition of what the learned chairman of the committee has spoken of as that of an independent voter to the condition of a pauper, because they are so entirely dependent upon their earnings for their support. As to those persons who are in the custody of keepers of almshouses, I am opposed to the whole system of restrictions upon them. They are intelligent enough to know that it is not the hand of the keeper that feeds them, and that he is the mere executor of a trust, and that it is the public bounty which supports them—that they are supported by law—by authority of the State, and they know enough to know that he cannot withhold this bounty. Again, they know that he is under the vigilance of superior public officers, and this restraint of public duty is operating upon him, while it does not exist in the other cases of a mere private relation of dependence to which I have alluded. I confess I was pained upon the reading of this report, because of the spirit of irony, to use no harsher term, in which this unfortunate class of people were alluded to. I can only account for it by supposing that paupers in the city of New York are made up of transient, dissolute persons, without occupation it may be, perhaps debauchees and immoral persons, who are congregated there. That is not the class of paupers that we have in the country. As a general thing, in the rural districts many of that unfortunate class of persons are the pioneers of the section of the country where they have come to want. They are the men who have struggled with the early forests, have reared families, and have maintained honorable positions; but when the hand of adversity has been laid upon them they have been reduced to the necessity of accepting public alms. In many of the counties where the distinction between the town and country poor is abolished, you will find these paupers living with some relative who is not entirely able to support them, but who with a little assistance from the public bounty, is enabled to take care of them, and make their condition comfortable. You find them with some old friend or neighbor who has known them in better days, and it is out of a feeling of kindness that they, with only partial compensation from the county, take upon themselves the burden of their support. They are men of intelligence, who are guilty of no crime. They are not malefactors. They are not of that class who can be dragged about in the manner that has been indicated here by some of the gentlemen who have addressed the committee. Sir, in looking into the statistics of the poor which have been laid upon our desks, and considering them in connection with this proposition, I was startled to find that of the number who, in the year 1866, received aid from the public bounty, there were 265,000, and in the year previous 278,000. I will not detain the committee by going through the statistics, and taking out the minors and the females; but a simple mathematical calculation will satisfy any one of the sweeping character of the provision that is contemplated. Is this the boasted philanthropy and spirit of progress of this age that has assembled this Convention for the revision of the Constitution? Is this the rising tide of that philanthropy and reform that is advocated by the learned chairman of the committee [Mr. Greeley], and with which he is imbued, that would bear on its advancing wave five or six thousand poor illiterate colored men into a higher manhood, and invest them with greater rights, and place them upon an equality? Is that wave to submerge and destroy the political rights of 25,000 poor white citizens of the State of New York? The gentleman himself [Mr. Greeley] states the number at from eight to ten thousand. But I plead, sir, for twenty or thirty thousand men who are guilty of no crime, who have been loyal to their country, and upon whom misfortune has fallen, and say that if we are to elevate another class to those rights let us not do it at the expense of striking down the cherished rights of fifteen, twenty, or thirty thousand white citizens of this State. Their name is associated in this report with criminals. When you say that an idiot or a lunatic is to be deprived of the right of voting, the antidote goes with the poison, and the very cause of the exclusion stands as an exoneration of the person. But when you say that the malefactor, the felon, and the pauper, shall be excluded, then you indissolubly associate him with crime to the last day of his life. He must stand associated in your organic law with crime, from which association he has no power to disconnect himself, and for no other reason than his misfortune. Now, sir, in regard to the next question, and that is the restriction of the right of naturalized citizens to vote. I am opposed to it entirely. At the proper time I shall move an amendment to strike it out. I have listened attentively to what has been said upon this subject, and I can see no reason for that invidious and, as I contend, unjust discrimination against a large and respectable class of our fellow-citizens. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], who ably and eloquently addressed the committee, spoke of the exhibitions in getting out these voters, and of the excitement that culminated on a certain day when these persons were admitted to the right of citizenship. I can see no difference in the character of this exhibition or the evil, whether this excitement shall culminate on the day before election, or ten days before the election, or thirty days before the election. You must have a concentration of effort inevitably, from the very fact that you extend the right of suffrage to this class of persons which will culminate at the same time, whether it be on election day, or ten or thirty days before. I can see no reason why it is a ground for discrimination. It will not be contended that a citizenship of ten days renders the possessor of it any more competent to exercise the right of suffrage, or that it will confer any greater capacity to vote understandingly than a citizenship of one day. He has been among his fellow citizens; he has contemplated citizenship; he has participated in the excitement of the election; and he is as well qualified to vote if he has been naturalized just prior to the election as if he had been naturalized from ten to thirty days before. The courts are not open on election day, and no interference with the election can occur from these proceedings. But, sir, I beg the attention of the Convention to the question whether the exercise of this power is not open to very grave constitutional doubts. It is a subject upon which I have thought some, and it might seem presumptuous, in view of the reports that have been alluded to, that were submitted to the Convention of 1846, to raise any such question here. But, sir, events have transpired within the last twenty years that have attracted the public attention, and fixed it upon the relation of the States to the Federal Union as to the powers of the Federal Government and as to the reserved rights of the States. The powers of States have been lifted to shatter the fair fabric of your national government to atoms. Now is the auspicious time to proceed carefully in the assertion of State rights over any class of citizens, and especially if there is a seeming repugnance, in the exercise of those rights, to the Constitution of the United States and laws of Congress passed in pursuance thereof, which are declared to be the supreme law of the land. The Constitution of the United States vests in Congress the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. This power the authors tell us is regarded as exclusive in the general Government and cannot be exercised in any manner by the States. Another provision of the Constitution, article 4, section 2, declares that the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. The naturalized citizen, when he is invested with citizenship which he derives directly from the Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land, is invested with certain rights, by virtue of such citizenship, derived, as I have before stated, from a power exclusive in the general government, and over which the States have no control. Now, we are told, by commentators upon the Constitution, that this right of citizenship carries with it certain great fundamental rights, among which are the right to exercise the privilege of suffrage upon terms of perfect equality with the other citizens of the several States; and I invite the attention of the Convention, knowing that I am surrounded by eminent lawyers and jurists, while I review authorities upon that question, with which, I doubt not, they are all familiar, but simply for the reason that the principle is better expressed than in any language that I can use. I read from 3 Story's Commentaries, 674:

"The provision in the Constitution (art. 4, sec. 2), avoids all this ambiguity. It is plain and simple in its language, and its object is not easily to be mistaken. Connected with the exclusive power of naturalization in the national government, it put at rest many of the difficulties which affected the construction of the article of the confederation. It is obvious that, if the citizens of each State were to be deemed aliens to each other, they could not take or hold real estate or other privileges, except as other aliens. The intention of this clause was to confer on them, if one may so say, a general citizenship, and to communicate all the privileges and immunities which the citizens of the same State would be entitled to under the like circumstances."

Chief Justice Kent, in his Commentaries, uses the same language, though he elaborates to some extent in defining what the fundamental rights of citizenship imports.

"The privileges and immunities conceded by the Constitution of the United States to citizens in the several States were to be confined to those which were, in their nature, fundamental, and belonged of right to the citizens of all free governments. Such are the rights of protection of life and liberty, and to acquire and enjoy property, and to pay no higher impositions than other citizens, and to pass through or reside in the State at pleasure, and to enjoy the elective franchise according to the regulations of the law of the State." (2 Kent Com., 36.)

The Federalist, which is acknowledged authority, I believe, upon the subject of the Constitution in speaking of the judiciary of the United States as established by the Constitution uses this language:

"It may be esteemed the basis of the Union that 'the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States.' And if it be a just principle that every government ought to possess the means of executing its own provisions by its own authority, it will follow, that in order to the inviolable maintenance of that equality of privileges and immunities to which the citizens of the Union will be entitled, the national judiciary ought to preside in all cases in which one State or its citizens are opposed to another State or its citizens." (Federalist, vol. 2, p. 306.)

And finally, Sir, the only adjudication upon this subject, that has fallen under my observation, is a decision in the Circuit Court of the United States in the District of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, in which Judge Washington, in considering this very provision, uses this language:

"The inquiry is, what are the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States? We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are in their nature fundamental; which belong of right to the citizens of all free governments; and which have at all times been enjoyed by the citizens of the several States which compose this Union, from the time of their becoming free, independent and sovereign. What these fundamental principles are, it would perhaps be more tedious than difficult to enumerate. They may, however, be all comprehended under the following general heads: Protection by the government; the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject nevertheless to such restraints as the government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole. The right of a citizen of one State to pass through or to reside in any other State, for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus; to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of the State; to take, hold and dispose of property, either real or personal; and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the State; may be mentioned as some of the particular privileges and immunities of citizens, which are clearly embraced by the general description of privileges deemed to be fundamental; to which may be added, the elective franchise, as regulated and established by the laws or Constitution of the State in which it is to be exercised." (4, Washington's Rep., p. 380.)

Mr HUTCHINS—Will the gentleman give way for one moment? In the State of Massachusetts a colored man can vote on the same terms and conditions as the white man? Now, upon the principle contended for by the honorable gentleman from Allegany [Mr. Champlain], why could not such black man, a citizen of Massachusetts, if he removes into this State, vote, although he may not be seized of property of the value provided for in the Constitution of 1846?

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—The question which the gentleman suggests, I do not know that it has ever arisen, but when it shall arise, if there is any thing in the argument, I shall not deny but that the colored citizen of Massachusetts, when he comes into this State, is entitled—if he is a citizen of the United States, and entitled to the immunities and privileges of such—to the terms of perfect equality with the citizens of the State of New York.

Mr. HUTCHINS—Will the gentleman give way for a moment for another suggestion? Is not a citizen of the United States a citizen—

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—I cannot give way. I object to being interrupted in this way.

Mr. HUTCHINS—I am not interrupting the gentleman.

Mr. CHAMPLAIN—When a person by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, which is paramount to State authority, is made a citizen of the United States, it is said he is invested with these fundamental rights, the right to hold property, the right to exercise the elective franchise upon terms of equality with the other citizens of the State, and if the gentleman will understand my argument the point of it is this, that you shall not discriminate against the citizens, or any class of citizens, to deprive them of equal rights with the rest if they can trace their right of citizenship to this supreme law of the land. You may exclude the adopted citizen and white citizen alike; you may require a one year or two years' residence; you may require that persons shall be naturalized citizens for thirty days or three years, but you shall treat all alike on terms of perfect equality where they come into your State clothed with the panoply of citizenship, under the Constitution of the United States. Will the honored Chairman [Mr. Greeley] contend that your Committee on the Bill of Rights may report here, that a naturalized citizen residing in the State of New York may hold property provided he has been such for three years or thirty days? May they say that he shall be entitled to the writ of the habeas corpus, provided that he has been a citizen of the United States for thirty days or three years? May they say that the home of the native citizen shall be his castle, secure from invasion, and that his property shall not be taken without due process of law? But may they discriminate and take away the rights of the naturalized citizen, naturalized under the Constitution in that respect? I would ask the learned chairman sir, what is this right of citizenship worth, if these great and fundamental privileges, which it is asserted, it carries with it, may be stricken down one by one, by invidious discriminations against classes of citizens, until they are entirely destroyed? Now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of illustrating the position taken by the committee in the report, let us suppose a case. I know there are amendments to the Federal Constitution pending which are intended to elevate to citizenship that large and unfortunate class of persons existing in the Southern States, who have lately been made freemen by the abolition of slavery—without undertaking to say what those constitutional amendments are, or to examine them, or to speak of their policy or the propriety of pressing them in the present condition of the country, it is enough for the purpose of my illustration for me to say: Suppose the gentlemen from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] and his friends should be enabled to carry those constitutional amendments, and that it was clearly and indisputably the power of Congress to lift up that degraded race to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizenship, as intended by the constitutional provisions in question. And suppose that Congress, instead of providing courts in which they should receive their certificates, should by law, directly in accordance with the Constitution, declare that from this time henceforth they should be citizens of the United States, and invested with all the privileges and immunities as such, will the gentleman contend for one moment, that some southern State where a Convention then shall assemble, clothed with the powers of the State government that concededly have the right to exercise the powers of sovereignty, that they may strike down those rights, acting upon the prejudice of color, and may by enactment, repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, making the very disqualification that it was its purpose to remove, the ground, and say that the immunities and privileges granted by the Constitution, shall not apply to any citizen unless he shall have been a freeman for thirty years, or a citizen of the United States for thirty years or thirty days. I warn gentlemen that this power they have asserted, if recognized in the great Empire State of New York, will stand as an overshadowing precedent to control events which all can see through the unexplored pathway of the future, and it may return in future time to trouble the inventor, and be used to strike down every thus acquired right of the colored man. Let the gentlemen consider well before they use this power here and now against the adopted citizen. What is this sacred right of citizenship imported under the power of this Constitution? Is it a right that can be hawked at and torn away by State authority? Sir, in the better days of the republic, there was a man who was a political exile from his own country where he had followed the flag of liberty until it went down in the night of despotism. He made this country his asylum. He afterward wandered abroad and at the port of Smyrna he was seized, by the tyrannical hand of Austria for his political offense. He had then done nothing but declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States. But what was the action of our government? In tones as clear as the notes of a silver trumpet which thrilled and electrified the nation, the right of his nationality was asserted. His cry, though feeble and far off, fell upon the quick ear of a great people and the arm of this mighty republic was stretched forth to succor him and at the mouth of the cannon he was surrendered from the prison ship in which he was confined. The principle of this nationality with which the citizen is invested, is that as long as he can discern every star in its place upon the ensign, he cannot wander so far from his country and his home in any legitimate pursuit, but that he carries with him and is protected by his panoply of nationality and the ruthless hand of tyranny and oppression cannot be laid upon him with impunity. It is kindred to that other great national principle, that the deck of an American vessel is as sacred as the soil of the Union, and the colors that float at the mast-head are the credentials of our seamen! I trust that in this Convention, and in this age of the world, nothing will be done to strike down this great right or impair it, in any respect. The language of this report is

"Whites and blacks are required to render like obedience to our laws, and are punished in like measure for their violation. Whites and blacks were indiscriminately drafted and held to service to fill our State's quotas in the war, whereby the republic was saved from disruption. We trust that we are henceforth to deal with men according to their conduct, without regard to their color. If so the fact should be embodied in the Constitution."

A very slight extension of the spirit of philanthropy, that prompted this paragraph in this report, would have added to it, "or their birthplace," so that it would read:

"We trust that we are henceforth to deal with men according to their conduct, without regard to their color or their birthplace. If so, the fact should be embodied in the Constitution."

What reason is there, sir, waiving the Constitutional one, to which I have invited the attention of the committee, for excluding this class, and including the native citizen irrespective of color? Are they not loyal, are they not patriotic? Have they not carried your eagles over a hundred battlefields? Have they not aided to preserve the nationality of this country and of this government? Have they not the right to sit down now and enjoy this restored and preserved nationality with the native citizen upon terms of perfect equality? At any rate, sir, it seems to me it is more in accordance with the spirit of the age, and the patriotic principles with which it is imbued to wait until the grass has grown green upon their thousand graves, and until their wounds, received in honorable warfare, have healed, before we proceed to inflict another stab, by increasing and enlarging an invidious discrimination against them.

Mr. ENDRESS—In regard to this amendment Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the eminent gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan], to the fact that the terms which he has inserted in his amendment very greatly enlarge the prohibition or exclusion of voters. He has taken the language from the second section of the Constitution of 1846, which says "that laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage, all persons who may be convicted of bribery, larceny or any infamous crime." Now, sir, these words are to be put into our Constitution where it amounts to an actual prohibition, an utter and entire prohibition, and I think the gentleman did not intend that, for these words are of such large comprehension that the Legislature has never acted upon them. Observe, sir, the language includes "larceny"—petit larceny, for instance—and "infamous crime," a word of no signification in the law. I think if the gentleman will reflect upon his resolution, he will either withdraw it or amend it. As it is now, I think the Convention would hardly undertake to put it into the provision we are considering. The provision we are now considering, is a definition of the word elector—that he shall be a citizen of the United States, that he shall have resided a certain length of time within a district, that he shall be a man not tainted with crime, etc. But this prohibition will very largely and indefinitely extend this exclusion.

Mr. Chairman, I move that this committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Endress, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President resumed the chair in the Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; that they had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report the fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. GREELEY—I now move that this Convention take a recess until four o'clock P. M.

Mr. BARNARD—I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT—The motion of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] is not amendable.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Greeley.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I rise to a point of order. Before the vote is announced, I insist upon my point of order, which is that a motion to adjourn takes precedence of a motion for a recess.

The PRESIDENT—The point of order is well taken. The question is upon the motion to adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Barnard, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1867.

Mr. FOLGER—The Committee on the Judiciary have already been discharged from the consideration of that subject, inasmuch as it more properly belonged to Committee No. 1 on the Preamble and Bill of Rights. I move to amend the report of the committee so that the resolution may be referred to Committee No. 1.

local character (as to which under the present Constitution the State Legislature exercises full jurisdiction), within the respective limits of such counties; and especially embracing the following subjects, viz.:

1. The laying out and construction of roads and bridges in the incorporated villages and in towns, and the raising of the necessary funds for such purposes.

Mr. BICKFORD called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter, until otherwise ordered, the daily sessions of this Convention shall begin at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Mr. BICKFORD — I move to amend that resolution, in accordance with the suggestion of some friends yesterday, by striking out the word "hereafter" and inserting the words "after this week."

The PRESIDENT — There having been no action taken on the resolution, it will be amended as requested by the mover.

Mr. ALVORD — I move, for the present, that this resolution lie upon the table.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Alvord and it was declared carried.

Mr. BECKWITH called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on the investigation of canals, be and they are hereby requested to furnish to this Convention, the evidence so far as the same has been taken by them, and especially the evidence in respect to the Champlain canal.

Mr. C. L. ALLEN — Before the consideration of that resolution, I beg leave to state that I saw one of the members of that committee yesterday, and had a conversation with him upon that subject. He informed me that the committee had received the resolution passed by the Convention some few days since, and had directed the stenographer to have a copy of the testimony made as soon as possible and transmit it to the Convention, that the testimony is very voluminous, and it would take some time to have a copy made, but as soon as it was copied it would be transmitted.

Mr. BECKWITH — If the Senate Committee have received a request of the Convention, I am willing that this resolution should be passed over. The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BECKWITH called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department be and he is hereby requested to furnish to the Convention a copy or copies of contracts now in force for repairs and improvements, of the Champlain canal; and also, any and all assignments of such contracts, or any of them, by the contractors, and any and all powers of attorney given by such contractors, or any of them, to other persons to perform on their part such contracts, or any of them.

Mr. PROSSER — I move to amend the resolution, so as to include all the canals of the State as well as the Champlain canal.

Mr. BECKWITH — I accept that amendment. The question was then put on the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. CHURCH called up for consideration a resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller and the Auditor of the Canal Department be requested to report to this Convention a statement of all sums advanced or paid for canal purposes or on canal debts, from other sources than canal revenues, and all sums advanced or paid from the canal revenues for other than canal purposes or on canal debts (specifying such purposes), in each year from 1817 to the present time; and also the interest upon each item from the time it was paid or advanced, to the present time, stating the items of interest separately from the items of principal.

The question was then put on the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. RATHBUN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Canals be requested to inquire into and report to this Convention, as to the propriety of requiring the several railroads in this State to establish annually, on or before the first day of May, a tariff of charges on freight to be transported on said roads, for the year thence ensuing; and also as to the propriety of restricting said roads from increasing said charges during said year, beyond such percentage as will compensate said roads for the increased expenses during the suspension of navigation upon the canals of this State.

Which was referred to the Committee on Canals.

Mr. VERPLANCK called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Auditor of the Canal Department report to this Convention, the number of breaks in the Erie canal within the last ten years, the expense of repairing the same, and the length of time that each break interfered with the navigation of the said canal.

The question was then put on the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. BARTO called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read from the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Instruction be requested to prepare, as soon as possible and communicate to this Convention, a tabular statement, showing:

1. The whole number of children in each county in the State entitled to attend common schools each year since 1840.
2. The number of children attending such schools in the several counties each year since 1840, and the number not attending.
3. The amount of taxation imposed upon the people in the several counties of the State for school purposes, in each year since 1840, State, county, town, and municipal tax, each stated separately, and the percentage each of State, county, town, and municipal tax, upon the amount of taxable property.
4. The ratio of taxation to the whole number of children entitled to attend common schools in each year since 1840.

5. The ratio of taxation to the number actually in attendance in each year since 1840.

6. The ratio of increase in the attendance upon schools in each county, as taxation has been increased.

7. The number of such schools which have become free, and the year in which they became free.

8. The ratio of increase or decrease in attendance upon such schools in municipal corporations, as have been made free, to the whole number of children entitled to attend such schools.

And further, that the Superintendent be requested to report to the Convention, how soon he can make the above statement.

Mr. RATHBUN—I know but very little of the subject-matter of this resolution, but I have had some conversation with the Superintendent of Public Instruction and he stated that it would take all his clerks for six months to answer the inquiries contained in the resolution; that as to a large portion of the matter called for, there are no records in the office which would give it. The resolution goes back to a period when no records were kept and there are no means accessible for obtaining the information. I would suggest to the mover of the resolution that it would perhaps be better to consult with that officer and learn from him how much of the information he can furnish and in what time. It would be of very little use to the Convention to have a report made here six months hence, because, I suppose, it is very likely we shall have got through before that time with our labors. It seems to me we are rolling up these inquiries, requiring an amount of labor beyond the capacity of the department to furnish, when we ought, if we can, to restrict it so as to make it as available as possible.

Mr. BARTO—I don't wish to require impossibilities from the Superintendent of Public Instruction, but I think it would be better to let the resolution go to him and let him report what information he can give and state the difficulties of giving the residue. If it is information he cannot give, I do not wish to trouble him with it.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I wish to say, it seems to me, it is entirely unnecessary for us to put the State to the expense of obtaining all this mass of information called for. I think the resolution ought to lie on the table and be printed, in order that we may see precisely and definitely what is called for, and inform ourselves what would be the probable expense and outlay of procuring the information. I move that the resolution do lie upon the table.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. W. C. Brown and it was declared carried.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to hold office, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the Chair.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, to prolong the very interesting debate which now, for two days, has occupied the attention of the Committee of the Whole, further than to say that it seems to me that the discussion, so far as it has proceeded, has disclosed the fact that the propositions reported by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the Qualifications to hold Office, so far as they have been under consideration in this committee do not, either, in substance or in form meet the views of this Convention, nor are likely to be as acceptable to the people as the Constitution as it stands to-day, approved by the experience of twenty years with the advantage of judicial construction upon very many, if not all, of its provisions. I propose, therefore, sir, if it be in order, to offer as a substitute for the whole of the first section of the report of the committee, the following sections, and I will state in substance what they are. The first section is in the precise language of the first section of article two of the Constitution of 1846, except that it strikes out that provision, deemed invidious and unjust by very many, not only in this Convention, but of the people of this State, which imposes a property qualification upon a certain class of the citizens of this State. The second section proposed in this substitute is in the language of the second section of the present constitution, except that it embodies at its close one provision which is contained in this report of the committee, to wit: After providing that the Legislature may pass laws depriving of the right to vote at any election, those persons who are interested in any bet or wager, it goes on to provide further that they may thus provide for depriving of such vote any person who shall receive or expect to receive pay, or offer to pay any money or valuable thing to influence or reward a vote to be given at any election. Such, sir, is the substitute which I propose to offer now, if it be in order.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] that an amendment to an amendment being already pending, his proposition is not now in order.

Mr. KERNAN—If I withdraw the amendment which I have offered to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], will it then make the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] in order.

The CHAIRMAN—If the proposition of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] is withdrawn, the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] will be in order.

Mr. KERNAN—Then I withdraw my amendment for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Oneida [Mr. Kernan] having withdrawn his amendment, the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] is now in order.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT—I ask that the substitute be read.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment as follows:

Substitute for the whole of Section 1, the following:

§ 1. Every male citizen of the age of 21 years, who shall have been for ten days a citizen of the United States, and an inhabitant of this State one year next preceding an election, and for the last four months a resident of the county where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to a vote at such election in the election district of which he shall be at the time a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people; but such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote; Provided, That, in time of war, no elector in the actual military service of the United States, in the army or navy thereof, shall be deprived of his vote by reason of his absence from the State; and the Legislature shall have power to provide the manner in which, and the time and place at which such absent elector may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes in the election districts in which they respectively reside, or otherwise.

§ 2. Laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage, all persons who may have been, or may be convicted of bribery, larceny, or of any other infamous crime; and for depriving every person who should make or become directly or indirectly interested in any bet or wager dependent upon the result of any election, or who shall receive, expect to receive, pay or offer to pay any money or valuable thing, to influence or reward a vote to be given at any election, of the right to vote at such election.

Mr. FOLGER—I wish to ask whether the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford] has been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair understands that the amendment of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bickford], was withdrawn by the mover.

Mr. FOLGER—Then it leaves pending only the amendment offered by myself?

The CHAIRMAN—It leaves pending only the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], as modified by the acceptance of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham].

Mr. FOLGER—Then is it in order for me to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight].

The CHAIRMAN—It is in order.

Mr. FOLGER—Then I accept the amendment.

Mr. MURPHY—I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 1 of article 1 by adding thereto, as follows:

No man of color, unless he shall have been for three years a citizen of this State, and for one year next preceding any election shall have been seized and possessed of a freehold estate of the value of two hundred and fifty dollars, over and above all debts and incumbrances charged thereon, and shall have been actually rated and paid a tax thereon, shall be entitled to vote at such election; and no person of color shall be subject to direct taxation unless he be seized of such freehold estate; Provided, however, that if the qualified electors of the State shall, at the general election, to be held in November, 1867, on a proposition to be separately submitted in relation to suffrage of men of color, shall determine in favor of suffrage to such men of color, then all persons of color shall be entitled to vote at any election, anything in the existing Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Early in this debate—
Mr. MURPHY—I believe Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], is entitled to the floor in his proposition.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—If the gentleman desires it, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Murphy to the amendment offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight, to the amendment of Mr. Folger, and which had been accepted by Mr. Folger.

Mr. MURPHY—The object of this amendment, perhaps, is sufficiently obvious, without any further explanation. Still, it may be necessary to give a brief statement of its purpose, the reasons of it, for the present, and possibly for the future understanding of it. It will be observed, sir, that it adopts the provision in the existing Constitution of the State, word for word, in regard to persons of color. It makes no change in that respect, except the contingency which it contemplates, to which I will presently refer. In presenting this amendment I have followed what I have believed to be the public sentiment of the State, as repeatedly and distinctly affirmed upon this subject. That sentiment has been adverse to extending the elective franchise indiscriminately to persons of color, because it seems inexpedient for political reasons, and because it was deemed by many morally and socially wrong. I, for one, concur in this view. I do not believe that the extension of the elective franchise to this class of persons will add any strength to our government; that it will tend to good government; but, on the contrary, that it will confound the races, and tend to destroy the fair fabric of democratic institutions, which has been erected by the capacity of the white race. I am aware, sir, of course, that this provision as it is in the existing Constitution, which is proposed by my amendment to be re-affirmed in the Constitution, are constructing, is inconsistent with the general principle which I have laid down, and that in admitting men of color to vote, with a proper qualification, it will seem to admit their capacity, which is denied by the general provision. I am aware, sir, this was an open question, if it were to be considered for the first time, I should not introduce even the property qualification as the majority of the electors of every decided vote, have deemed it expedient to give the elective franchise to the class of persons to which it relates. I do not deem it proper for me at this time to make any change. The only change which is one simply of expediency, and not of principle. I deny in toto the amendment from Rensselaer [Mr. Rensselaer] announced yesterday [Mr. Rensselaer] announced to-day when [Mr. Rensselaer] that same purpose, that that man to participate in government. The gentleman founded his argument on the Declaration of Independence doctrines therein recited. I deny that "all men are c and "that government derives its just power from the consent of the governed. Now sir, in my judgment those doctrines laid down in the Declaration of Independence have no reference whatever to this question and cannot be introduced in support of the views of those who maintain the natural right to govern. If so, how strangely the men of the Revolution and the men who framed that instrument acted, and how inconsistent. Look at the Constitutions of the different States which were adopted after the Declaration of Independence; examine their provisions, and you will not find a single one in which a property qualification is not required of the elector, except perhaps in a single State, and that a southern State, and there only to a partial extent—I mean the State of Georgia, which did allow mechanics to vote for officers without a property qualification. Now could those men who sent forth that celebrated document which contains the principles to which the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], referred, have intended in that enunciation to consider the right to vote—the right to govern, as it were—an inalienable, natural right? They could not have been guilty of the gross inconsistency which followed from their conduct in adopting the State Constitution immediately afterward. What is a natural right—an inalienable right of man? It is a right which pertains to every human being, and pertains to him in all the relations of society; pertains to all conditions; pertains, of course, to the man of color as well as to the white man; pertains to the woman as well as to the man; and pertains to the child as well as to the grown person. It is the right, as specified in the Declaration of Independence itself, the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; the right to remove from one place to another. Perhaps there are others, but they may all be summed up in that phrase of the Declaration of Independence itself, the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. This pretended natural right of man to govern is a perfect absurdity. Where do you and I get the right to govern any one man? Whence comes this right of a majority to govern a minority? There is no natural right in that. It is merely a form of government which society has adopted as the best form of government; the right to vote is merely a right, as stated by the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], yesterday, conferred by society—a franchise to be exercised for the purpose of good government. Such are my views of this question, and with such convictions have I presented this amendment. I will not go further. It is not necessary for me to say anything more in regard to the black man, than that I believe it is inexpedient, nay, it is wrong to place him upon a political equality which will lead to a social equality with the white race, tending as I said before, to confound the races, and bring us to a condition not much superior, if they were in numbers sufficient, to the people of Mexico. Of course I do not apprehend any difficulty here from the small number of blacks that may be introduced to this right of elective suffrage, but I stand upon the principle. It is the great political question that agitates the country, and the example of the State of New York would be used perhaps to introduce the elective franchise to blacks in communities where perhaps they may equal, if not outnumber my own race. Now, sir, without going any farther into this argument I will state further what is proposed by my resolution—I propose that this question of the extension of the right of suffrage shall be submitted to the people by a separate proposition. I think it is fairly to be presumed that the people of this State are opposed to negro suffrage (if not I may be allowed to use an expression without intending to convey by it anything offensive to the race); their repeated acts in that respect show it, and we should not endanger this Constitution by placing in its body, by incorporating in the instrument itself, a provision which is obnoxious to that majority, and which, of course, would cause them to reject the Constitution, however good you may make it in other respects. And in the amendment I propose, nothing is lost to those who believe that this right should be exercised by the negroes. If there is a majority of the people in this State who are disposed to confer on them the right of suffrage, it can be done under a separate provision and if they do so, no one will acquiesce in it sooner than I will. But I ask at the hands of this Convention, that the question may be submitted to those who form the constituent body of our government. I propose further in this proposition, that whatever may be the fate of the Constitution which we shall submit, whether it shall be adopted or not, if the majority of the people of this State shall determine that negro suffrage shall be the rule, it shall be incorporated in the present existing Constitution.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—In rising to discuss this question I must pause for a moment to congratulate my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand] upon his ally and upon the excellent use which he finds so soon made of that most statesmanlike doctrine which that gentleman laid down the other day. For some reason, which I am unable to explain, I seem to have given offense either to the intellectual or the sensitive man from Broome [Mr. Hand], and it resulted, certainly, in a very severe exhortation, under which I suffer somewhat at the present time. My friend from Broome [Mr. Hand] in the first place held me up here as the utterer of a monstrous doctrine, when I asserted that man had a natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which he lives. So much was the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] excited, that he himself misunderstood—

MR. FOLGER—Did the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] say the natural right to participate in the government, or the natural right to vote?

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—The natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which he lives was the doctrine which I laid down.

MR. FOLGER—The gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] was misunderstood, for I think I distinctly heard him say the natural right to vote.

Mr. HAND—I certainly so understood.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My friend [Mr. Hand] did not report me so in his speech. My friend from Ontario [Mr. Folger] must have mistaken the conversation we had in the library for a conversation we had in this Convention.

Mr. FOLGER—Perhaps the change of phraseology was the result of that conversation. [Laughter.]

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—If it was, I should not shrink even from the doctrine I laid down in the library to my friend from Ontario [Mr. Folger]; and I say to my friends who come here, instructed by their constituents to extend the right of suffrage to the colored race, that if they come upon this floor, and give up the argument at the outset, their colored friends will accomplish very little from their advocacy. But I will go on, if the gentleman will allow me. I say that my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand] was so excited from some cause, I know not why, that he put into my mouth a word I certainly did not utter, and a word which the printed report of my remarks will show I did not utter, and that is the word "inalienable," because I held then, as I hold now, that a man may alienate every right under the government under which he lives. I say my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand] held me up as a monster for having laid down the doctrine that a man had a natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which he lived, and after giving me an exhortation for laying down that doctrine—

Mr. HAND—I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

Mr. HAND—I rise to a point of order. I deny having spoken of the gentleman as a monster, or using any language—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that under strict parliamentary rules the remarks of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] are not in order, although not for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand].

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My remarks are directed to the printed report of the speech of that gentleman.

Mr. HAND—The report does not show any such language. I beg—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman that order must be preserved in the committee.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—My remarks were directed to the printed speech of that gentleman, which I understand—

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that his attention has been called to the fact by motion in the committee, and it must, therefore, hold that the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] cannot, under the guise of a debate, upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], settle a controversy with the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand].

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I would ask the Chairman if it would not be in order to discuss an argument which was presented against myself? Is not that pertinent to the debate?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair leaves the gentleman to proceed in his own way, and if he is out of order the Chair will call him to order.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—The question under discussion is the question, as I understand it, of the propriety of extending the right of suffrage to colored men, as well as to men that are not colored. And I hold on this question the same doctrine which I have had occasion to urge and reiterate before this committee, that men have a natural right to participate in the administration of the government under which they live; and as I was charged by the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], before this committee, with an inconsistency in my views, and with holding doctrines which were (to adopt the phrase which that gentleman used literally) "absurd," I deem it proper, not wishing to trespass upon the rules laid down by the Chair, and if not deemed by the Chair out of order, to proceed to show that the argument urged against my position by the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], was inconsistent with itself, in this; that whereas the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] charged that this doctrine was absurd, that men had this natural right, he immediately went on to argue that I was guilty of a great moral wrong,—or that my argument was—in proposing to deny to men who were paupers, supported by the public taxes, the right of suffrage. Now, sir, if a man has not a right, I would ask how can the denial of what he claims as a right be wrong? If a man has no right to vote, how is it wrong to deny to men the privilege of voting? Can there be a wrong if there be no correlative right? If the colored man has no right to vote, how can it be wrong to deny him the right—to deny him the privilege of the elective franchise? If there be no right and wrong in regard to this matter, what guide have you but the uncertain guide of expediency? If there be no right to vote, what wrong can there be in a local Protestant majority denying the Catholic the right to vote, as was done by a majority of the citizens of this State, substantially, in the election of 1855? If there be no right, how can it be wrong for a local Catholic majority to deny the same to Protestants? If there be no right in the matter, certainly it cannot be wrong for the immense white majority of the State of New York to deny to the colored population of the State of New York the privilege of voting; and to bring the question a little nearer home, if there be no right in the question, would it be wrong for the colored population of the State of South Carolina, that outnumber the white as two to one, to deny to the whites of the State the right and the privilege of voting? If there be no right as I have said, there can be no correlative wrong. Perhaps I am wrong in referring to any principle. Some gentlemen on this floor seem to think it was wrong to refer to the Declaration of Independence. Some gentlemen, perhaps, may think it wrong to refer to the Christian scriptures; some gentlemen may think it wrong to refer to this matter here, but this question is coming home to the people of this country in a way that it has never come before. But, sir, we have got to come down upon the hard pan of principle or we shall be afloat upon a boundless sea, without chart or rudder. The gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], says that it is absurd to say that a man has any natural rights, but he locates this right in society. Somebody has this right. Here is a power to be exercised. It is a power that is sought to be exercised of right. Where lies the right of government? In whom is it vested? In whom is the right of suffrage vested? Why, sir, from the day when Nimrod rode down the world rough-shod, as the mighty hunter in Asia, down to now, this doctrine has been discussed, and until the landing of the pilgrims upon our shores the doctrine was, that the right of government rested in royalty, and that came from God. That is the picture that the human race has been set to look upon for nearly six thousand years, a picture that has been held up for universal gaze and admiration, that this right rested in royalty, that the right to govern was of divine appointment, and that the individual had no right to participate in government. Shall we do, sir, as a distinguished individual in our country did, in regard to the picture of Sir Robert Peel? It is said that a distinguished individual in the United States took a finely engraved picture of Sir Robert Peel, with all its parts perfect, to an engraver, and had the head taken out and his own inserted. Shall we take this picture of oppression that has been held up to the world for six thousand years, and cut out the head of Sir Robert Peel? No; cut out the head of royalty and put in the head of society, and still hold this picture up as a terror to our children, or to the admiration of our children. Our government did not originate in that way. It was no bastard Norman tyrant that originated our government. I do not know the origin of the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], but my opinion is, that if the gentleman will reflect back, he will reach the day when his blood, some portion of it at least, was sitting down in the cabin of a little ship off the shores of New England, where there was no society except our Indian brethren, who are now pretty nearly extinct, in the far West, and consulting there as to what should be the government of that people when they landed upon the shores of this country, and resolving that, as far as possible, they would be governed by the rules laid down in the Word of God, until they had time for further discussion. Suppose the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] had been there; suppose that in that little cabin his fine presence had been found, and he had frowned upon them and told them that their very talk was absurd; that society had the right to regulate that government; that they had none. "You, John Robinson; you, Miles Standish; you, John Alden, it is nothing to you; you have no rights. It is society that is to govern Massachusetts and the colony of Plymouth. Society must do it. You have no right." Let me suppose another case. The people of this country ought not to be mistaken on this subject. We are a government-making people. We started, at the close of the revolution in this country, upon this experiment of government with but thirteen sovereign States; we have now thirty-seven. Every one of them has been formed—how? By society? Every one of the twenty-four has been formed by the consent of those that occupied the land where the government was to operate—every one of them, and it is too late now to talk about either the divine right of kings, the divine right of "the powers that be," the divine right of anything, except the right of man to govern himself as he shall judge best for his interest and for the interests of his country. When the hardy pioneer goes out beyond the settlements, he goes out alone; he has neither wife nor child. He plants his cabin—he is alone. Does society govern him there? He has selected a choice spot. By and by a neighbor comes, then another and another, until they have five hundred; they consult together and say it is time we had some government here, framed by common consent; we will organize ourselves. An organization is formed, and just at that time comes along the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], and he says, "How are the people governed here?" The first settler says, "I have something to say about this thing; there are five hundred of us; I am one of them, and we govern ourselves. We are laying the foundation for one of those States; perhaps I am going to become a Senator in Congress by and by, as the pioneers of most of the States have done. I have something to say about this thing; I have some right here." But the gentleman from Broome says, "You have no rights, your rights rest in society." That hardy pioneer will reply to the gentleman from Broome. "I was here before society was. I have seen the day when I was the only man in this broad domain; I had rights then; I have agreed to let my neighbors have just the same rights that I have, but I was here before society was here." The pilgrim fathers were in New England before society was. That is the American principle of government. We have not done what the man did in regard to the portrait of Sir Robert Peel; we have not taken the old picture of tyranny—and oppression and cut out the name of sovereign, cut out the name of prince, cut out the doctrine of divine right of kings, and put in the divine right of society. Sir, there is a moral right, and a moral wrong; whether it be right to say it or not; whether it be reasonable or not: whether it be republican or not. What if all the writers talk about sovereignty—talk about society. In the discussion between the plain man and the philosopher, the philosopher wound up the plain man in the argument, and showed conclusively there was no such thing as motion. What did the plain man do? He just rose up and walked. And while theorists are pretending and contending here that men have no rights, we form twenty-four governments, and if that will not be enough, and the land will hold out, we will form twenty-four more, by common consent, where each man has an equal right in the formation of that government. There is no divine society; man was before society. God made man; man made society; men have made governments, and all these divine governments that oppressed the world in ancient times and modern times, were the mere work of man's hand—the work of violence. Our government does not rest upon violence. It rests upon the common consent. It is too late in the day to hold up any man as advocating an absurd doctrine, who contends that there is such a thing as human rights; who contends that any government has no right to oppress its citizens and deprive them of the exercise of their natural rights which God has given them, unless those natural rights have been forfeited. Now, sir, in regard to the colored man in particular, because this was the necessary foundation of the discussion of that question; the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] says that the people of the State are evidently opposed to allowing the right of suffrage to colored men. Does that make any odds with our action? I do not concede the fact. We have lived a great while since 1846, and although a few who held up the doctrine of extending suffrage to colored men in 1848, have gone back, the people with whom they live have not. The people of this State have been marching forward since 1846 up to a higher standard, a purer faith upon that subject. But, sir, let me suppose a case. Should we for a moment tolerate the idea that if the vote in 1855 had been cast last fall, it would be right for us to say that men professing the Catholic faith should not be permitted to vote. Such was the verdict, as I read it, as the vote showed in 1855. No, sir, the men that held the doctrine that men had rights in 1855, and the men who hold now the doctrine that men have rights, no sooner put their hands—

Mr. E. BROOKS—Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment? I wish to say, as having some knowledge of the vote of 1855 and of the popular sentiment of that day, that the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] is not warranted in drawing any such conclusion from that vote, and that there was never any party in this State to the best of my knowledge and belief, that ever proposed the disfranchisement of any men on account of their religious faith.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I know that that has been frequently asserted, but as far as that doctrine is concerned, I am putting myself in an attitude of that plain man I referred to some time ago, who after being convinced or convicted by a philosopher that there was no such thing as motion, set himself to walking. I participated in the struggles that day. I listened to the discussions of public speakers, and I saw what was done as far as it could be done in the State of New York. I occasionally took a look into the newspapers published in the city of New York, and I think in a paper called the New York Express, I read articles against the Catholic population of this State. If I understand the tendencies of the party holding these sentiments here in the State of New York, it was as I have described—certainly in the State of Massachusetts they went forward—

Mr. E. BROOKS—I wish to say to the gentleman [Mr. M. I. Townsend] that he is mistaken when he refers to the journal which he has named, or when he refers to what was the object of the powerful political party in the State he refers to, and that he misrepresents, unintentionally, I believe, was the doctrine of that party at that time.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I have the utmost deference for the gentleman [Mr. E. Brooks] who has just sat down. I had at that day occasion to know that gentleman, and, although we differed in politics, I have looked on him not only as an honest statesman but as a most excellent gentleman in public and private life. Had he been alone the representative of that great party, I should take every word he utters as gospel; but, sir, he was but one man in all that body of men, and we must judge from what we saw and what we heard; and if I misrepresent, I do it from impressions which I gained at that day, and which certainly will never be effaced from my memory; and I confess now when I have seen at any time since 1855 gentlemen either in public assemblies or out of them, maintaining the Catholic faith, and struggling to exclude the colored race from the right of suffrage, I have felt a degree of wonder that they, of all men, should not be touched with a feeling for the disability that rests upon the black man. Now sir, I will continue my argument, and ask, if the vote of 1855 had been cast in 1866, would we be justified in sending down a Constitution to the people, which proposed the disfranchisement of all the men holding to the Catholic faith in the State of New York? If my doctrine be heretical it gives me an immense advantage. I have a much larger brotherhood than my friends who have different views on this subject. I look upon a man who happens to be situated a little differently from myself as my brother, as I have to, recognizing this principle, as a man possessing the same rights that I possess. I know he has the same destiny, I know that he has the same origin. Although a Protestant myself of the straightest sect, I can recognize a man of Catholic faith as my brother, entitled to all the rights I possess. Although it has happened in the providence of God, that I have inherited from some stock of my ancestors, a light complexion, I can take into brotherhood all my brethren whether they claim to be of the Caucasian race, or not, and who have a complexion a little darker than myself. They are all my brethren. They have the same rights that I have. A respected friend of mine, who was a democrat with me in 1846, and who holds to the democratic faith now—and who I see before me, said on that occasion, when he and I were brother democrats together and both voted to extend suffrage to the colored man; "I will not stand up before my God, and deny to any man a right which I claim for myself." My friendship has been great for that man, and if I see a spot for the moment on his fair escutcheon I shall always remember what there is lying below it a substratum of principle pure and brotherly.

Mr. GERRY—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I would like to ask the gentleman, whether in regard to his African brother, he is disposed to favor the intermarriage of the races, and social equality?

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I have some trouble on that subject [laughter], and for this reason: the posterity of such unions are placed in a most uncomfortable position—a most uncomfortable position. [Laughter]. I came from a State, that was proud to call its great democrat, who first held a prominent position, by the name of my friend who has just interrupted me [Mr. Gerry], and in that State, neither then nor now, have we ever had any jealousy of the negro [laughter]; and neither his ancestors nor mine have ever felt any fear that, in a fair contest, the negro would get the advantage in the race of life! [Great laughter.] I wish to say another word to my friend [Mr. Gerry]. I said I was opposed to the mingling of the races, particularly in regard to its effect on posterity in case of the intermarriage of the races. I will say to my friend [Mr. Gerry] another thing: I am opposed to that illicit concubinage, practiced at the South by that party, to which my friend belongs, and which has scattered a black and white posterity over the Southern States, until any field of the so-called African population, looks like a race of what are called skunk-blackbirds. [Laughter.] Sir, there is no danger of the intermingling of the race by a man who respects his own blood. There are those who hold that the colored race are inferior to the white race; there are those who hold the colored race to be a sort of higher order of animals, and they are the men who mingle their blood with this same inferior race, leaving the posterity to make their way in the world as best they can since emancipation, and who before that day sold not only their own children, but the mothers who bore them. I hope the gentleman [Mr. Gerry] considers himself answered. Now, sir, I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] for another reason, you cannot permanently do injustice to any people without degrading the majority which works that injustice. And as my friend [Mr. Wakeman] spoke of me the other day as the "venerable gentleman from Rensselaer," I will say I have seen something of the political action of this State, and I think I do no injustice to the campaign of 1855, when I say, I consider that campaign, and the raid upon the Catholic population of this State connected with it, as the most demoralizing political storm that has ever swept over the State of New York. It was most utterly demoralizing; and it was so because it proposed to do a wrong to the Catholic people. And how did they justify it? By charging everything that was wrong, whether true or false, upon the Catholics of this country or other countries throughout the world. It was the staple of discussion in the political mind, that those people were immoral, that they were dishonest, that they were ridden by their priests, and that under the direction of their priests they violated every obligation, social, moral, and political, until, sir, the feeling thus engendered, ripened, in Louisville, into a mob which proposed to exterminate the Catholic population, and under which the streets of St. Louis ran with blood. And, sir, I would submit it to the older Democrats of this Convention, if they believe that the moral tone of the Democratic party of the State of New York has been in any way improved by the ceaseless tirade of abuse upon the helpless negroes, that have prevailed in their political discussions since the year 1848? Has the moral tone, or the moral status of the Democratic party, been improved by it? No, sir, if we do a man a wrong, we have got to charge evil upon that man to justify us in doing it. It is an old adage, and one that should not be forgotten, that, although a man may forgive wrongs done him, he never forgives the wrongs he does to others. So far as this matter is concerned, there is no man upon this floor, nor in this State, of white origin, who does not feel that the black man came from the hand of the same God that he did. There is not a man in society but knows the black man has not only the same origin, but the same destiny, and that it is worldly circumstances which has made their destinies to differ. If a man has looked at all into the history of the world, he knows that the light-haired Teuton, as light as himself, is the full brother of the Brahmin, with red hair, white complexion and light eyes, in the Himalaya mountains, and is the full brother of the Brahmin of South Hindostan, as black as the ace of spades. The gentleman knows that the Brahmin of South India is talking the same language as we of boasted Saxon blood are talking to-day, the Sanscrit being the mother of both tongues; or if he does not know it, he had better read up. I know that men get up theories to the contrary of this idea of human brotherhood. It is to save the necessity of these theories, that I would have this principle established. It is said that we are not of the same race—not of the same blood. Why? Because, they say, the union of the black and the white produces a diseased animal, and they soon expire. This doctrine has been a favorite doctrine. It is said they do not multiply beyond the first multiplication, and that they are short lived. That would be proclaimed in a lecture-room in New Orleans, and published in the newspapers and preached in the pulpit, and the men assenting to it walked out to the auction-block and paid two hundred dollars more for a negro half white and half black, of the age of forty for a field hand than he would for a full black and simply because he was a "diseased animal" and could not perpetuate the race. That negroes were to be of a different race, the people were convinced in that lecture room. And you would find the same man, with convictions thus strong, having a family raised by a Caucasian in a house in one street, and another family in a quadron in another street. The doctrine now is a sort of literary doctrine at times. And yet Alexander Dumas pere is not more celebrated than Alexander Dumas fils, the father an octoroon, and the son a still further substitution of colors. I believe that Fred. Douglass has not an unhealthy family. Sir, nobody believes this doctrine. It is mere pretense. I propose to talk rather freely on this subject. I want to dispel some of these illusions. A man says "I have seen a great many colored people having white blood in them who are scrofulous." Ah! you have, "and," he asks, "how could that be unless the race is unhealthy?" I will tell you how that came about. It came from the physical character and condition of the father who mixed his blood with the black woman; for until a man had run his blood and his system and moral sympathies down, he would not risk the raising of posterity by the mixing of black blood and white, and thus the mulatto has the accumulated diseases of the father. But now all things are charged, forsooth, to the colored race. What exterminated the Indians? Not the bullet; not the tomahawk; for even the settlers used the tomahawk as well as the Indians; but some of these vile diseases that are scattered through the Indian tribes by the miserable whites who have mixed their blood with theirs. But again, sir, we are told that the physical formation of the black race is such that they cannot be identical with the white. People who advocate the restriction of the rights of the blacks feel they must give a reason for it. They feel the truth of the doctrine that I have laid down. Every man feels and knows that every other man has a natural right. They tell us there are physiologists who have discovered that there are certain physiological differences—that in the human system there is a bony substance in a particular part of the white man, where there is a cartilage in the same part of the colored man. It is not long since, to satisfy the behests of slavery that Agassiz went to Charleston to work out the doctrine which was so satisfactory to a people who had so long flourished and prospered upon the wrong they had done the black race. And yet it is found that the great naturalist made a fatal mistake that will stick to him as long as he lives. I have been betrayed into an incidental discussion on this subject more general than I intended, but do not intend to apologize for it to the committee. I feel as though it was due to the subject and due to myself. I now desire for a few moments, to call the attention of the majority of this Convention to another subject under consideration. I said in the course of my remarks, when once before on the floor, since we have been in Committee of the Whole, that I saw no moral wrong in denying the right of suffrage to the pauper who lived upon the public taxes of the State. I put it upon this ground, that the pauper who is supported by public taxation was in the tutelage and under the control of the dispenser of the taxes devoted to his support. He placed himself in an attitude where he was not a free man. Now, sir, I have no right to complain if the majority of this Convention shall differ with me on that subject, because, under my rule, we not only have in this Convention, but out of it, a most perfect right of private judgment and action. But I wish for a moment to call the attention of my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand], and the committee, to this one consideration in relation to the dispensers of relief to the out-door poor, to say nothing about those in the almshouse, as it has been stated on this floor, that in the city of New York, those persons have the power of aiding and refusing aid to not less than 15,000 at a time. I will estimate, for I have no estimate from others, that there are 5,000 in the city of Brooklyn. I will estimate, for there is no estimate by others, that there are from five to eight hundred in the city of Albany. I will estimate, upon my own knowledge, that they will amount to from three to five hundred in the city of Troy. Now sir, when the election comes I have no doubt that my friend from Broome [Mr. Hand], like a good citizen, goes out into the towns of his county, and discusses political questions, and so far as I know he has always made the people of that county or a majority of them think with him. He can give from eight hundred to a thousand or fifteen hundred majority in the direction in which he votes. When he gets through with the people in this county, who have voted upon their understanding and their convictions, and upon their free will, he is met by fifteen thousand votes in the city of New York which are completely under the control of the possessors of power; by five thousand in the city of Brooklyn; by from five to eight hundred in the city of Albany, and by three hundred in the city of Troy, to go no further west. I think at that time the gentleman [Mr. Hand] and his constituents would begin to come to the conclusion that it would be better to consider for a moment the strange doctrines preached by that strange man from Rensselaer, and see if there were not something in it. I wish to call the attention of the majority of this Convention to a remark which dropped from the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard]. I thank him for it, and it is a text that perhaps we need not preach from; but it is a text upon which we should reflect. That gentleman, in his frankness, told us that those who were aided by the present state of things would of course resist any change in the Constitution. Did not you think so, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman had concluded his speech yesterday? It will not be the men that control the five thousand votes, it will not be the men that control the fifteen thousand votes who are prepared to give up the powers they possess and place themselves upon a footing of equality with the rest of the State. I have used the term "majority" in this Convention. Am I right in doing so? One, perhaps, says "no." I yesterday read in a paper called the Albany Argus (which a delegate in this body has certainly something to do with, whom I see on the other side of the house), an article in which this doctrine was held, that the Democratic party were not responsible for the frauds and corruptions of the last Legislature, because the Republicans had a majority in either body. We did not stop to discuss the question whether his political friends were responsible, whether some of them had been sharing, but he very properly carried the argument out to the people, that the majority of that House were responsible for its action. When the work of this Convention shall have been done, we may run off on this hobby, or on that hobby or the other, but the people of this State will hold the majority of this Convention responsible for its action. We are not even tied up as the gentleman from Suffolk proposed to tie us up yesterday. He proposed to deprive us of certain appendages, that a certain fox was deprived of, to render the majority powerless here by a rule of the Convention, which would prevent our taking action. The responsibility of whatever is done in this assembly, rests upon the majority of this house, and if we go out to our constituents denying, halfway, to the colored man, those rights that every member of the Republican party acknowledges he possesses, and to which every member of the minority here possesses, the people of this State will hold us responsible. If we go out from here with a Constitution so framed, that the city of New York, the city of Brooklyn, the city of Albany and the city of Troy can overwhelm the independent voters of this State by the pauper taxes of those cities, it is we who not only have got to suffer, but we are responsible. Let me call the attention of the majority of this Convention to another consideration in this connection. What is the power of the city of New York? If I read rightly in the public press, it has the power of raising twenty-two millions of dollars per annum in taxes. How are the rest of the State to stand up against it if the men who dispense these taxes use them to corrupt the voters of the State? I do not say that they would do so any sooner than they would in the western part of the State. I would not trust, in the county of St. Lawrence, that power in the hands of an overseer of the poor any more than I would in the city of New York. I don't speak of the city of New York invidiously, I speak of the city of New York because there is an aggregate of population, and an aggregate of power and of wealth in the city of New York, to which nothing else in this State can compare. I would just as soon check this power in St. Lawrence, or in Chautauqua, as I would in that city, I ask no rule to be applied to the republican portion of the State that would not apply to the city of New York.

MR. SMITH—I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will not prevail. While I agree with him fully in his premises, I am compelled to dissent in toto from the conclusion; and on the other hand, while I am compelled to differ from my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] in his premises, I agree with him in his conclusion. It is desirable that we place this question of the right of suffrage upon the proper basis. The question discussed here is, whether the elective franchise is a natural right, or whether it is a political right? My reading and reflection have led me to the conclusion that it is a political right and not a natural right. What is a natural right? Why, as has been said, truly, it is a right which inheres in humanity, a right which God gave man when he created him, a right which pertains to him under all circumstances and conditions. It belongs to the man, it belongs to the woman, it belongs to the child. And if we were to adopt this doctrine that it is a natural right that every man has to participate in the administration of the government, why then I see no reason why we should not bestow it upon the woman, upon the minor, upon the foreigner and upon the pauper. Perhaps we could better understand it by asking the question. What is civil government? As I understand it, sir, the very idea of civil government pre-supposes the existence of society. Society is a divine institution. Man was made by God to live in society, and civil government is the mere agent of society. It may be defined properly, I think, to be the power or instrument, by which society regulates the civil conduct of its members, and secures their rights and liberty. It is a mere instrument which they wield. It is not an end, but only a means. If this be so, then the right to participate in the administration of government, while it belongs to society, as a whole, belongs to no particular individual of that society. Society may bestow it, or withhold it, as to society shall seem proper and right. Of course it must be exercised according to the rules of justice and equality. But when we come to the question of natural right, I contend, sir, that no man in society has the natural right to participate in the administration of government. And I venture to affirm that you can find no respectable writer upon the science of civil government, who adopts the theory, that voting, or the right to participate in the government, is a natural right. Then, sir, the question arises, upon what ground shall we exclude any portion of society from participating in the administration of government? There are certain rules which we may adopt safely, although it is often difficult to determine when we ought to grant, or withhold that privilege. For instance, if any portion of society be hostile to the interests of society, then society may forbid their participating in the administration of government. If there be a class of society utterly incompetent to understand the true ends and best interests of society, then, undoubtedly, society may exclude that class from this political right. There are other grounds of exclusion which it is not necessary now to mention. But says my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], the Declaration of Independence affirms that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. I do not derive the political right of the colored man to participate in government from that clause of the declaration, but from another, which seems to have been overlooked in this discussion. There are two great truths enunciated in that instrument which, though intimately related, are distinct in their character. The first is that "all men are created equal." The second is that they are "endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," "among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Now, sir, I do not place the political right of the colored man to vote, upon this declaration of inalienable rights, or upon a natural right; but upon the broad declaration of the equality of all men, and upon that basis it will stand, and stand firm. "All men," says the declaration "are created equal." Equal in what? Why, not equal in intellect, of course, because as described by Pollock, while there are some who "know all knowledge and all science known," there are others who "never had a dozen thoughts in all their life." Not equal in physical structure or in moral qualities, for in these particulars there are the widest differences among mankind. Not equal in social condition, for there is, in that respect, a marked difference among men. But, sir, they are equal in natural and political rights. Equal before the law. In that sense all men are equal, and for that reason I would not refuse to the colored man the right to participate in the administration of government. Why make this distinction in regard to them? Do gentlemen believe the Declaration of Independence, which declares that all men are created equal? If we believe it, and accept it, then there is no excuse and no good reason for excluding the colored man because he is a colored man, for that is the only reason that can be assigned for his exclusion. I know, sir, that a few years ago, when this question was submitted to the people, another reason may have operated upon the minds of some men. There was an institution then existing at the South which had its influence upon the question. It was deemed expedient for political parties to secure the favor of the ruling class at the South, and in order to do so, it was thought necessary, in accordance with the spirit and practice of that institution, to degrade and oppress the colored man. But that institution has passed away. There is another state of things now. Slavery is wiped out, and the reasons which then existed for denying the right of suffrage to the colored man exist no longer. But, says my friend from Kings [Mr. Murphy], the political equality of men will lead to social equality; and by an inquiry put by another gentleman, it seems that men have before their eyes the apprehension that there will be social equality in the State. But, sir, it seems to me that the idea of equality before the law, equality in political rights, and social equality, have no connection with each other. I would inquire of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], does he now invite into his parlor the lower and degraded classes of men who vote at every election, and others whom he seeks to enfranchise? Does he mingle on terms of social equality with them, and if not, why would he be under any necessity of mingling on terms of social equality with the colored man if he were enfranchised? The laws of social equality are regulated by principles applicable to them alone, and not by principles applicable to political equality. The gentleman also says that he fears, if they are permitted to vote, it will destroy the fair fabric of Democratic government. Is our government based upon a foundation so frail, that allowing a few colored men to vote—one in seventy-seven of the voters of the State of New York, (for that is the proportion of the colored men)—would destroy the fabric of our freedom? If so, we had better lay anew the foundations of the government. It is, sir, in brief, for these reasons, that I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. I did not rise with the view of making extended remarks at this time, upon this question, or going at length into its discussion; but it seemed to me that the right which we claim for the colored man, was placed upon an improper basis, and we shall gain nothing by placing it upon a wrong basis. It will stand firmly upon its true basis; and that basis is, in my judgment, not a natural right, but a political right. It is a right growing out of the equality of all men before the law, that equality with which God endowed them. My friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] remarks that there is no such thing as a divine right in society. He says that the little band of pilgrims in the Mayflower, formed their Constitution before society existed. Why, sir, what constitutes society? When Adam was first formed, and placed in the Garden of Eden, there was no society; there was one man; but when Eve was made, to become his companion and helpmeet, then there was society. And when the little band in the Mayflower joined together and formed the first free Constitution of this country, they acted as a society, and in that society inherited the political power of government. It had the right to say who should participate in the administration of government. Society should not, for improper causes, exclude persons; it should not make invidious distinctions—should not deny the equality of all men, which is announced in our Declaration of Independence. My friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] also remarks that until our government was formed, the idea always prevailed, of the divine right of kings. I think if he will examine the early history of the world, especially as recorded in the Bible, he will find that he is mistaken. During the sixteen or seventeen centuries that followed the creation of man there existed the Patriarchal government. The father of a family was the civil ruler as well as the priest. Following that was the Hebrew commonwealth, and there the principal of free government was established by God himself. On Mount Sinai the Israelites entered into a covenant with God, that they would accept him as their civil ruler. They voluntarily chose God, and He remained, during the entire continuance of the Hebrew commonwealth, the civil ruler of that people. Following that was the line of kings, but they were given in judgment. They demanded a king and God sent them a king in judgment for their rebellion against him as their civil ruler. Afterward followed other despotic governments, but under the circumstances of their introduction and existence, they afford no countenance to the doctrine of the divine right of kings. The right of self government does not necessarily confer upon every member of society the right to participate in its administration. That right, I repeat, belongs to society as a whole, but not to every member of it. If we place the doctrine upon this ground, it will be upon a firm and a sound basis; but if we place it upon the ground that it is a natural right, we are meeting with difficulty at every step of our progress. We shall find other questions here to encounter before we get through. Female suffrage will be demanded on the ground of natural right. If I believed suffrage to be a natural right, I should vote to-day to grant it to women, but believing it to be a political right merely—one which society may withhold or give as it deems just and proper, I shall vote upon that matter as I find it expedient to do when the question comes up.

Mr. HAND—I feel very unwilling to intrude any matters relating to personal feelings upon this Convention, or to waste the time of these gentlemen, in correcting a matter which, I think no member of this Convention could have misunderstood, in relation to what I said the day before yesterday, but for the sake of the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], I wish to correct one mis apprehension. He says I called him a "monster." Well, now, this speech of his will go on to the extremity of the State where I am known, and they will think perhaps he is a "monster," if I said so, and to correct this I take it upon myself to give my opinion about the gentleman. I think the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] is not a monster. He is not a monster physically, but a well-proportioned, fine-looking man, whose appearance here any of us would like to have. Morally he is not a monster, I have no doubt he is conscientious. He shows it in all he says, in the spirit that actuates him when he is not over excited. Intellectually he is not a monster, I don't think he reasons very closely, but I think he reasons very conscientiously. I think he fails naturally to understand abstract principles, and to go down to the foundation of the superstructure of our government. I think the gentlemen of the Convention will agree with me, but I esteem him very highly. His history is the history of the politics of this State. It comes out in bold relief; he has been a faithful advocate of sound doctrine. He has exercised a wholesome influence over the politics of his region, and I am happy to compliment him upon the high position that he has attained. He complains that I misrepresented him, by saying that he used the word "inalienable." I did not misrepresent him. He quoted the Declaration of Independence, the words of Jefferson, and in quoting those words, he made them his own. He says Jefferson's doctrine was, that men were endowed by their Creator with certain "inalienable" rights. He made that word his own.

MR. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] allow me to call his attention to the fact that the word "inalienable" as used in the Declaration of Independence, does not relate to that clause which says that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. It is the other clause in it, the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

MR. HAND—This "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," includes the whole government. The right would be nonsense if it did not include that. If we have not the right to enter into a combination, and to make laws for our own security, then what is the natural right to life, liberty and happiness? What does it amount to? In using the words of Jefferson he made them his own, therefore I was right in saying he based his whole argument in favor of the natural right to vote on this doctrine of Jefferson. He repeated it in language very eloquent, very bold, very frank. It seemed to me better fitted for the stump than for a deliberative assembly like this Convention. There was much of the spread eagle about it; those things are well in their place.

THE CHAIRMAN—The Chair has permitted this debate to have a wide range, and does not desire, therefore, to curtail the remarks of any gentleman in the committee that it now speaks; but if any gentleman of the committee shall rise to a point of order the Chair will endeavor to enforce the strict rules of parliamentary debate. The gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], will proceed.

MR. HAND—Have I transgressed the rules in my remarks?

THE CHAIRMAN—The Chair leaves that to the committee.

MR. HAND—I simply said that certain principles brought forward in this Convention, were absurd, and among them, that the right to vote was a natural right. I refuted that doctrine laid down by the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and would be better pleased with the very eloquent speech that he has just made if he had answered the arguments by which

I supported that, but he did not touch them. It would have pleased me more. It would have shown more cool, calm thought, and close reasoning; it would have shown more conclusively to this Convention if he had really digested that subject, and was ready to grapple with its mighty problem. He asked if a pauper had no right to vote, how it could be wrong to withhold that privilege? I did not claim the right of a pauper to vote as an inalienable or natural right. I claimed it was wrong to exclude him from the right of suffrage, for the reasons that the gentleman gave—his poverty, his misfortune, incurred, as I insist, in thousands of cases, in the service of his country, in our great struggle for our national existence. Why did not the gentleman reply to this? I based it specially upon that ground, and not upon any natural right. Now, this subject has been pretty well discussed. The gentleman in my rear [Mr. Smith], spoke very well upon the subject, and I accord fully with his views; but I will, if it is not out of order, go back to the foundation of society and see where rights originate, and what is their nature. If I live in a forest or on a mountain top alone, no man would have a right to question what I should do. I might blaspheme the Almighty; I might commit any outrage whatever, for no man and no neighbor could be affected by what I should do. But let another man come near me, and claim the right to reside on the same ground where I reside, and he assumes immediately the right to question what I do, because what I do will affect him and his interests. That is the beginning of society. On that is based his right to inquire, and his right to control me in my action. Another man comes there, and another and another, and relations become complicated, and laws more complicated are necessary. At length a man comes there, and brings his wife and daughter. He claims that that wife and that daughter shall have the same rights in the community which the rest of us have. We consult together, and judge whether the public interests, the interests of us all, would be best subserved by a plan of that kind, and we decide against it. We immediately look to the interests of the whole. That, sir, is the origin of society. The moment we enter into society our natural rights are held in abeyance, and their extent depends entirely upon the interests of society, as I showed in my remarks the other day. I do not claim that the colored man shall vote on the ground of natural right; but I hold that the reason for which he is excluded is the worst of all reasons in the world. The same doctrine that gives me a right to vote gives him a right to vote. I have yet to hear (with due deference to what the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has said, the first semblance of an argument that is worthy of the intellect of a boy ten years of age against the right of the colored man to vote. If I vote, why not let my colored brother vote? They resort to a vile prejudice—to what somebody taught twenty years ago. I hope that we have outgrown that darkness in this State, and that we have made some strides in progress during the lapse of twenty years, and that we are not to be bound to and tied to the thoughts and doings of olden times. I hold to the right of the negro to vote, because he holds the same relation to the government that I do. The color of his skin is the merest accident in his organism, and is of no consequence; and the physiologist who, for political purposes, to build up a miserable doctrine, pretends there is any essential anatomical difference between the white man and the black man is a quack, I do not care who he is. The same book of anatomy which describes the colored man describes the white man. Look over any work which you choose, and you will see that the anatomy of the white man describes the anatomy of the black man, and that the little variations existing are no greater than you will find in inhabitants of the same race. You will find less variations between the two races than you will between the two individuals of the same race—taking extreme cases. I contend that the colored man should have the right of suffrage, because slavery has been abolished. It was the degradation which slavery brought upon the race which has hitherto prevented his enjoyment of the right of suffrage. But that is blotted out of existence. It is wicked—it has no existence in common sense—the doctrine that we should continue to exclude him. The wrongs of his race have caused that bloody war which has covered the land with graves, and sent sorrow into every household, because we persisted in this wrong. In righting this wrong, we have been obliged to send our sons and fathers to the battle-field, and the land has been filled with mourning. Now, let us go on and finish this work in the light of justice. As to the social equality growing out of political equality, I am sorry to hear any man of good sense bring that forward. If any man thinks his party is in danger, especially by any such calamity, perhaps he had better look well to it. I think that the party with which I act is in no danger. I think we should look well to our social interests. Don't these gentlemen know that social equality is not a subject of legislation, and never can be. It is a mere matter of taste, governed by every man in his social relations, subject to the supervision of no man outside of his own household. The addressing of such arguments to gentlemen of the character of those who compose this Convention, it seems to me, is a pretty small business. At the south where the gentleman's party has had predominance for a great many years, they are not so afraid of amalgamation. It is practiced there; and if we are to have amalgamation at all, let us have it legal, and not illegal in its character. The race has been whitened so gradually and so persistently and to such an extent that Henry Clay, in a speech made at Indianapolis, came very near telling the truth when he said that for two hundred years negro slavery had existed, and two hundred years hence will find it still in existence; and if causes continued to operate that were now operating, slavery would not be distinguished at all by the color of the people, for the color would all fade out. What was the cause? It was amalgamation forced upon the weaker race by the stronger, to which the weak never consents, which they never desire when they are on an equality with the stronger. I do not propose to go into the general discussion. I should not have spoken of it at all, had it not been for the purpose of setting my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], right. Now, perhaps I have transgressed the rules again. I was not very much excited. For if I had carried that feeling which the gentleman exhibited for two days I should have had an attack of sickness. I could not have come here under the state of feelings that did exist with my friend possibly. I made such a speech as I thought the whole subject demanded, and I thought that an erroneous doctrine had been brought forward that would be used in the discussion of other subjects. When we come to discuss the sale of intoxicating liquors you will hear it said that a man has a right to drink what he pleases. It is not the right of man to do anything except the interests of society will permit it. I have no right to do anything that will demoralize the family of my neighbor, or anything that will operate disastrously to the interests of society. You can see the uses that will be made of this doctrine of natural rights. It meets us at every turn. I wish to dispose of it upon the threshold, which I think I did pretty effectually, so effectually that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] felt it.

Mr. AXTELL—I do not propose to discuss this subject metaphysically, anatomically or pathologically; but I wish to say a few words in regard to a point that seems to have been lost sight of in this debate, and that is that it is purely a question as to whether the property qualification shall be retained in order to entitle the black man to vote. It is not a new question. We propose no new privilege to be given to the black man, but we propose simply to enlarge a privilege which the black man already has. The gentlemen of this Convention will remember that by the Constitution that was adopted in 1821, there was a property qualification required of all electors. The negroes might vote having a certain property qualification. That property qualification was stricken out by the Convention of 1846, so far as it related to white men, and retained so far as related to colored men. Now twenty years have elapsed; great events have taken place in the history of this nation, and events affecting this very question, and the question to-day is, whether we shall retain that restriction which was retained by the Convention of 1846. I for one, sir, feel that it would be an insult to the civilization of this age for us to retain it, and I cannot understand any sentiment or feeling that demands its retention, that is not connected with that spirit of contamination and debauchery of the public conscience that was upon this nation prior to the war, as the result of the violation of the very first postulate of the Declaration of Independence. It seems to me, sir, that the whole question here is this—slavery is dead. We propose to bury it decently. There are thousands in the nation, and thousands in the State who are determined to keep the beloved corpse above ground. That is about all there is of it. And as to submitting this question to the people of the State—who are the people of the State whose opinions are to be respected? Are they not the people of intelligence and of virtue? The people who have moral instincts coinciding with the Declaration of Independence, and the spirit that has animated our nation during the last few years? I grant, sir, that if you were to submit this question as a distinct proposition to the people of this State it might possibly be defeated. And why? Because, sir, unfortunately, in connection with the principle of manhood suffrage which is imbedded in the public mind, and which will continue to be imbedded there, we cannot rule out certain criminal classes who will vote against extending the right of suffrage to the negro. That is all sir. The gamblers of the State will vote against it. All that class of persons who are notorious criminals, and who are always found at the polls, will vote against it, and I am satisfied that if the leading men of this Convention—the great leaders of the party that are here in the opposition, would but come up to this question in the spirit of generosity which has characterized the action of this Convention hitherto, the mass of them would vote for the adoption of the Constitution we shall frame, with a clause in it permitting the negro to vote on the same terms with the white man. I know many men who are to-day connected with that party and who have been connected with it in years past, who on both occasions, when the question was submitted as a separate and distinct proposition to the people, who voted for it, and who are ready to vote for it again, whether it shall be placed in the body of the Constitution or whether it shall not be placed in it—it will be placed there, however, and the people will adopt it, I believe. But, sir, as I have said, there is a class of persons who have still a prejudice, and who deny to colored men rights that they would have themselves—among this class are the men who murdered and burned negroes in the riots in New York in 1863. These are the men, who, whether trammelled or untrammelled by party and party influences, would vote against the extension of the right of suffrage to the colored man. I am in favor, sir, as a matter of justice, as a matter of expediency, of permitting them to vote, because I believe they are a virtuous people as compared with thousands of the others who vote.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—A few words, Mr. Chairman, in relation to one or two questions which are now before the committee. The proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] to retain the property qualification as to colored men, it seems to me ought not to be adopted. Allusion was made by the honorable gentleman to the Constitutions that were framed by the several States immediately after the Declaration of Independence. The gentleman says, and, I suppose, says truly, that in most of those Constitutions the property qualification was included. That was the case in this State. But, sir, that property qualification applied to white men as well as to colored men, and the citizens of this State lived for forty-three years under the Constitution of 1777, that allowed all men, so far as color was concerned, equally the right to vote. The qualification that applied to the colored man applied to the white man. It took forty-three years for the politicians of this State to discover the necessity of excluding from the right to vote, that portion of our citizens. Sir, why was that change made? Before answering that question, let me correct the honorable gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] on one point, historically. This property qualification was very much complicated in the article on that subject contained in the Constitution of 1821, and was entirely abolished by an amendment in 1826; and from 1826 to 1846, there was no property qualification applicable to the white man, though the qualification as to the colored man was retained. I ask why was this change made. Has any good reason been assigned by the gentleman [Mr. Murphy] who moves this amendment? Can any man give the reasons why a man whose color is different from ours should not have an equal right to vote with us? There must be a reason or the distinction should not be made. Sir, as to the capacity of the colored man. Is it said, and if said, is it demonstrated as true, that this class of citizens is not equally intelligent with thousands upon thousands who vote at every election? Is it not true sir, that as to their intelligence and their patriotism; they are as fit to walk up to the ballot-box as the fifteen thousand men who, it is said, must be naturalized within less than thirty days of the next election in order that they may exercise this inestimable privilege of citizenship—the elective franchise? Is it said, and if said, is it true, that that class of our people is not equally intelligent, equally moral, equally industrious, equally worthy of all the rights of citizenship with the fifteen thousand I have named, and the fifteen thousand more who are to be naturalized more than ten and less than thirty days prior to the election of 1868? The question answers itself. Is it said, and if said, is it true, that the class of colored persons who would be enfranchised by the proposed amendment of this committee, leaving out the word "white" as it was left out in 1777, and as it stood out for forty-three years, has not an average intelligence, honesty and patriotism equal to the average honesty, intelligence and patriotism of the whole of that portion of the population of this State that come up to the polls to vote in November? I say, sir, if it is so said, it is said recklessly, without due consideration, and without proof. When the nation was in peril who offered to go to the battle field? Among the traitors in this country do you find this class represented? Has the first black man yet been named who failed to pilot the poor fleeing refugees from the clutch of traitors! Did they fail to guide the armies of the Union in the path they sought to follow? Has the first black man or woman been named among the millions in this nation, during the four years of war, who has failed to be humane, failed to be patriotic or has proven to be a traitor? Sir, if they be degraded, if they have been degraded, out of respect, out of duty to the race to which they belong, I ask if this boon should not be given to them, if this right should not be restored? In other words, should not they be placed upon an equality of rights with every other class of men equally deserving? I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], to submit the question separately. Is it proposed to submit it separately, that negro suffrage may be adopted? If submitted with other propositions no more righteous, no more just, no more deserving the approbation of the people of the State, no better suited to the interests, the duties, the character, the reputation of the people of the State, it would be adopted with them. But if submitted separately, bitter prejudice, if nothing else, may be excited among a sufficient number of persons, who will be induced either to withhold their votes entirely or vote against the proposition, and they defeat negro suffrage without injury to any other question. And the object of the proposition, Mr. Chairman, to submit this question separately to the people is that it may be defeated. Why not act like full-grown men on this subject? Why not stand up and say boldly "We wish to exclude these men from the elective franchise." We do not wish to dodge the question by submitting it separately to the people, and allow the old prejudice against slavery and against the colored race to be used to defeat it. Let us settle the question herelike men. This subject is as old as the government of the State. We understand it as we understand every other subject, and as well. Why not say, and say distinctly, here, that the proposition is unworthy to be submitted to the people, and we will withhold it; that the colored man is unworthy of a vote, and therefore we will withhold it? The proposition of the gentleman does not say that. He admits that if a negro or mulatto has by fair means or by foul, gained two hundred and fifty dollars of property, in real estate, he may vote. If he has robbed hen-roosts, stolen chickens, defrauded his neighbor or in any other way accumulated so much money or property he may vote; then his color does not hurt him or disqualify him. This property qualification had its merits in its day no doubt, and so far as I know it may have merits now. If it has any merits, all the people should have the benefit of it. If it be a burden, to be borne by any, all people should equally be subject to it as a burden. It comes back to the original question. It is a question of color simply—of an unfounded and unworthy prejudice. A few words upon another branch of the subject now before this Convention. The proposition of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage is to abolish that provision of the Constitution which requires a residence of four months in a county before a man may vote therein. That struck me as a change not called for by any particular reason, when I first heard it announced, but coupled with another proposition of the committee, I think it is a good one and should be adopted. That other proposition is to extend the time from ten days to thirty days, that a man shall be a citizen before he can exercise the right to vote. Now, sir, there was reason existing longer ago than 1846, why some course should be adopted to prevent fraudulent voting, and to prevent the bringing to the polls of illegal voters—or to state it in distinct English—to prevent illegal naturalization on the eve of an election. Ten days before an election, all the candidates are in the field. They and their friends are intensely interested in their success, aside from party issues and the success of general tickets in each locality; and in all these localities where this class of persons congregate most, I do not say that there is an unhealthy excitement—I do not say that in all cases, there is a degree of attention given to the election that its merits do not deserve, but I do say that there are some persons, in those localities and in all localities, who feel a great interest in the success of a particular candidate and a particular party on the eve of an election, that that feeling and that interest grows in intensity up to the very day of election. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], who speaks from experience on that subject, and speaks wisely, says in substance that there was complaint made, and properly made, when this naturalization was carried on up to the day of the election. He says that since then the practice has obtained of ceasing to naturalize ten days before the election. I suppose the reason for that—

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I submit with due deference to the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. E. A. Brown] that he is not discussing the question pending before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN—In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from Lewis is proceeding strictly in order, as the motion is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] accepted by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] to the clause reported by the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

Mr. E. A. BROWN—The proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] is to amend the recommendation of the committee by reducing the time from thirty days to ten days, as the period to elapse before a person shall be entitled to vote after becoming a naturalized citizen; and I was endeavoring to state, in as few words as I could, why some time should intervene between the date of naturalization and of voting. The purpose is simply not to exclude any man who may be legally and honestly naturalized, the day before election from voting, but it is to prevent abuses which have sprung up, that the ten days was inserted in the Constitution as it now exists. If that period is a sufficient remedy for the evil, it is all I ask. But, sir, in the county in which I live, some of the towns have more naturalized than they have native born voters; and two or three cases have been litigated where fraudulent naturalization papers have turned up some years after they were given; in some cases, certificates of naturalization came through the clerk's office, which papers were on their face perfectly legal, and yet there was no more authority for naturalizing those persons than there was for naturalizing the Czar of Russia. In other cases, certificates of the declaration of intention had been filed in Oneida county one year before the application was made for the final papers, and they were changed so as to show two years, or the month was changed, and thus people, by no fault of their own, but through the schemes of outsiders, were enabled to cast illegal votes. I say that this was without any fault of the persons who were naturalized. It was the fault of schemers, political men outside, who had got hold of these papers, changed them, and defrauded, not only the men themselves, but defrauded the public. And this practice, sir, has prevailed, so far as I know, on the eve of elections, and has never been thought of or attempted thirty days before election, in any one case. The object of interposing a period of time between naturalization and voting is simply and solely to prevent these frauds and to save the naturalized citizens themselves, as well as the public generally, from the effects of those frauds. If ten days is a sufficient time, I am satisfied. From all the experience I have had, and from the fact that some of the judges of the Superior Court of New York, as is well known, had their names forged to papers last fall, I think ten days is hardly a sufficient time; for, if I recollect right, the case that I speak of, the forgery of the names of those judges, did not occur forty days, or sixty days before the election, but on the eve of the expiration of the time during which naturalization papers might properly be taken out, and the naturalized person secure a right to vote at the ensuing election. But, sir, I do not wish longer to take up the time of the Convention, but as I am at present advised, I should prefer to retain thirty days as the period, for the reason I have assigned, willing, however, to let it remain ten days, if that shall be the sense of the Convention.

Mr. MURPHY — In regard to the proposition I had the honor to submit, there have been speeches indulged in by members of the Convention, to which I will refer very briefly, though perhaps not as justly as I could wish, at this hour.

Mr. BARNARD — Will the gentleman please to give way for a moment. I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. Barnard, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the Convention rose and the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD from the Committee on the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL — I move that this Convention take a recess until seven and a half o'clock this evening.

Mr. SEYMOUR — I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Seymour and it was declared carried.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Continuing Expenses, submitted the following report:

Your committee to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Tucker, asking that thirty dollars' worth of stationery be furnished to each of the reporters, etc., respectfully report that having carefully considered the subject, they have arrived at the conclusions following, to wit: That before advising an appropriation of money for the purpose asked, it is well to inquire why it should be done, and what right, if any, this Convention has to make it, and whether it is intended as a donation, or as money paid in discharge of an obligation which this body has incurred or assumed. These certainly must be pertinent inquiries, and intelligent answers thereto will determine what the action of this body should be in the premises. All will agree that this Convention should pay its honest debts, legally or equitably incurred, and if there be any such obligation in this case, we should at least be ready to acknowledge it and provide for its payment. The proper determination of this question leads into an inquiry into the relation which these reporters sustain to this Convention, by whose permission they occupy their seats upon the floor of the House. Are they its employees, or performing labor in its service? If your committee are correctly informed, said reporters have never been employed by, nor are they at work for this Convention. On the contrary, they are the agents of the press, doing service for their principals, and their only title to the seats they occupy is the license which the courtesy of this Convention has extended to them. We understand, however, that this favor has been most freely and willingly accorded because of the intimate relations existing between the press as intelligent organs of public opinion and the labors of this body, and also of the high character of these gentlemen—the agents of these organs—and their manifest influence in disseminating information among the people of the State, of the doings of this Convention.

Some have erroneously supposed that the relation of employer and employee had been created from the fact that the President of the Convention, has, under the rules appointed these reporters. But the mistake will be apparent when the reasons leading to such appointment are known and understood. The act of the Legislature under which this body assembled, made no provision whatever for reporters as a part of its working machinery, and their employment in that capacity, to be rewarded in the manner proposed, was not contemplated, as is evident from the fact that the granting of stationery is expressly limited by the act to members of the Convention. When the Convention assembled, it, in various ways, well understood, made ample provision for giving publicity to its proceedings, and in doing so incurred an expense, which in the opinion of a considerable minority was inexpedient, if not wholly unauthorized, yet the fact is adverted to here simply to show that there existed no necessity in fact for the employment of reporters. In the meantime, the press throughout the State had sent agents or reporters here for their own accommodation, and in order to afford them ample facilities for prosecuting their business, and also to settle conflicting claims to the favor solicited, it became necessary to award them seats upon the floor of the House, and to determine who should be the occupants thereof—hence the rule for appointing and the consequent appointment of these fifteen reporters. These facts already demonstrate that this Convention, for its own use or convenience, did not employ and is not legally or equitably indebted to these reporters for services rendered as such. If, therefore, we owe these honorable gentlemen nothing, the bestowment of this money would be a gratuity, and it only remains to be considered whether this Convention can make a donation of this character. We will assume that no argument is required upon so simple a point, for it will hardly be claimed by any one that we have the power or the right to give away the public money. Nor is it desirable in any point of view that we should do so in this case. These gentlemen, the contemplated recipients of the proposed favor, are honorable men—too honorable to solicit, at our hands, charity, and we respect them too highly to offer it. Still, if any ambitious member of this body shall desire to signalize himself by performing an act of great generosity, we respectfully suggest that such individual will more successfully vindicate his claim to the coveted eminence by making the donation from his own pocket instead of the public treasury. For the aforesaid reasons, your committee recommend that the resolution be not adopted.

E. E. FERRY, Chairman.

Mr. COCHRAN from the minority of the same committee, submitted the following report:

The undersigned, one of the Committee on Continuing Expenses is unable to coincide with the majority of that committee, in regard to the propriety of allowing the reporters of the Convention, named by the President, the same stationery as is allowed to members. He has no doubt of the power of the Convention to incur that trifling expense, and to supply its own designated reporters with the usual and necessary conveniences for the performance of their duties in connection with this Convention. Neither does he doubt the justice and propriety of such action. He, therefore, recommends the adoption by the Convention of the resolution presented by Mr. Tucker, of New York, and referred to the said committee, that the reporters of the Convention be allowed the same amount of stationery as the members thereof receive.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT COCHRAN.

July 9th, 1867.

Mr. TUCKER—If it is in order I move to disagree with the report of the committee, and to adopt the original resolution. Upon that question I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

Mr. MERRITT—I ask for information whether the motion is upon the adoption of the report, or upon the motion to disagree.

The PRESIDENT—The question as stated by the Chair was on agreeing with the report of the committee.

The SECRETARY commenced calling the roll.

Mr. CONGER—This subject, as presented by this resolution, must necessarily place—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that the Secretary has already commenced to call the roll; therefore, remarks are not now in order.

Mr. COCHRAN—Those who vote aye vote in favor of the majority report, and against the resolution.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call of the roll, and on Mr. Corbett's name being called—Mr. CORBETT—The committee instead of reporting on this question which was referred to them, have incorporated a stump speech into their report, besides having reflected on the action of the Convention in ordering the publication of the debates, which I think, is entirely uncalled for. With that explanation I desire to say that I vote against agreeing with the report of the committee.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call and on Mr. Ketcham's name being called—

Mr. KETCHAM—For the same reasons stated by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], I vote no.

The SECRETARY proceeded with the call, and the report was declared agreed to by the following vote:

Ayes.—Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Armstrong, Andrews, Artell, Barker, Barto, Beadle, Beals, Beckwith, Bell, Bergen, Bickford, Bowen, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Spencer, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, VanCott, Wakeman, Wickham, Williams—86.

Noes.—Messrs. Archer, Barnard, E. Brooks, Burrill, Cassidy, Champlain, Clinton, Cochran, Collahan, Corbett, Corning, Daly, Folger, Francis, Fullerton, Garvin, Gross, Hatch, Hardenburgh, Hiscock, Hitchman, Huntington, Ketcham, Larremore, A. R. Lawrence, Jr., Livingston, Loew, Lowrey, Merrill, Monell, Morris, Murphy, Nelson, Opdyke, Paige, C. E. Parker, Robertson, Roy, A. D. Russell, Seymour, Schell, Schumaker, Silvester, Sherman, Stratton, Strong, Tucker, Veeder, Verplanck, Weed, Young—51.

Mr. DALY—I beg leave to say, Mr. President, that the Chief Justice of the United States being temporarily in this city, and as the rules that we have adopted make no provision for extending the courtesies of the Convention to the judges of the courts of the United States, I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention for a suspension of the rule, and offer the following resolution.

Resolved, That the privileges of the floor be extended to the Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Chief Justice of the United States.

The question was put upon the resolution of Mr. Daly, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. HUTCHINS—As the Hon. John T. Hoffman, Mayor of the city of New York, is temporarily in this city, for the same reasons given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Daly], I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the privileges of the floor be extended to Hon. John T. Hoffman, Mayor of the city of New York.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Hutchins, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. LOEW—I hold in my hand and propose to offer a resolution to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the office of the Superintendent of the Insurance Department and restoring and devolving the powers of that office on the Comptroller, or that the duties of the Superintendent of the Banking Department and the Insurance Department be united in one. I wish to say I have no special information in regard to this matter myself, but I understand from authority which any member of this body would approve, that the measure is necessary in order to secure the best interests of the people of this State. I propose that the Committee on Banking and Insurance shall inquire into the expediency of this, and if they see fit it will come before the Convention at a future time.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That it be referred to the Committee on Currency, Banking and Insurance, to inquire as to the expediency of the abolition of the office of the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, and of restoring to and devolving upon the Comptroller the duties of such superintendent—or that the duties of the Superintendent of the Banking Department and Superintendent of the Insurance Department, be united in one department.

Which was referred to the Committee on Currency, Banking and Insurance.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Standing Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the cause of the non-reception by the Convention of the number of printed documents to which it is entitled by the rules, and to take such measures as may be necessary to correct the delinquency.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. GRAVES offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, The use of money has become an instrument in the hands of the venal and ambitious to procure places of trust and responsibility, without a due regard to the qualifications and fitness of the candidate for the position; and that its almost frequent use at our annual and other elections, corrupting to the giver and receiver, demand from this Convention some action by which the evil shall be arrested; therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Convention, the following provision should be made a part of the Constitution:

Any person who shall pay or cause to be paid any money or other valuable thing directly or indirectly to any voter to obtain his vote for any office for which he is a candidate, on conviction shall forfeit the office to which he is elected and be disqualified and deemed unworthy to hold any office for ten years.

And laws may be passed excluding from the right of suffrage all persons who shall receive any money or other valuable thing as a reward for voting for any candidate for office, and also for punishing, by fine or imprisonment, or both, the voter who accepts or receives such money or valuable thing.

Which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECKWITH offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the resolution requesting the Auditor of the Canal Department to furnish copies of contracts now in force for repairs and improvements of the canals, etc., be modified so as to require, where there are a number of contracts similar in their terms and provisions, one copy only of such similar contracts, and then the respective names of such contractors, the respective dates, times of expiration, the amount of each contract, and the particular section of the canals embraced in each contract, and whether the prices agreed to be paid therefor by the existing contracts, exceed former prices paid, and the amount or percentage of such excess, if any.

Which was adopted.

The PRESIDENT presented a communication from the Comptroller in answer to a resolution of the Convention adopted June 26th in respect to the accrued interest, belonging to the school fund.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Finances of the State and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONGER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be directed to furnish to the reporters who have been admitted to the courtesies of this floor, the stationery necessary for them in the discharge of their functions as reporters, and that he report the amount and value of such stationery as severally distributed by him before the close of the sittings of this Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. POND—On page 109 of the Journal, there is a report of the Committee on Judiciary, concluding with a resolution, that a resolution previously introduced by myself and sent to that committee, should be sent to the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights—that report was laid on the table upon my suggestion. I now move that it be taken from the table, and that the resolution be passed upon.

Mr. MERRITT—I notice that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, Hon. Salmon P. Chase, is upon the floor, and I therefore move that the Convention take a recess for ten minutes, in order that we may pay our respects to him.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Merritt, and it was declared to be carried, and the Convention took a recess for ten minutes.

After the recess,

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be on the motion of Mr. Pond, to take from the table the resolution referred to.

The question being put on the motion of Mr. Pond, it was declared to be carried.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of so much of the resolution of Mr. Pond, of Saratoga, as relates to the subject of juries and their verdict, and that the same be committed to the standing Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights.

The question was then put on the adoption of the resolution, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. MORRIS—I observe, sir, that the Hon. John T. Hoffman, Mayor of the city of New York, is upon the floor, and I move that the Convention take a recess for ten minutes for the purpose of paying our respects to him.

The question being put on the motion, it was declared carried, and the Convention took a recess for ten minutes.

After the recess,

Mr. E. BROOKS offered the following resolution.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Convention, the Legislature of this State should not pass laws local or special in their character, for any of the following objects, viz.:

“Regulating the jurisdiction and duties of justices of the peace and constables; for the punishment of crimes and misdemeanors; regulating the practice in courts of justice; providing for changing the venue in civil and criminal cases; granting divorces; changing the names of persons.

For laying out, opening and working on highways, and for the election or appointment of supervisors.

Vacating roads, town plots, streets, alleys and public squares.

Summoning and impaneling grand and petit juries, and providing for their compensation.

Regulating county and township business.

Regulating the election of county and township officers and their compensation.

For the assessment and collection of taxes for State, county, township or road purposes.

Providing for supporting common schools and for the preservation of school funds.

In relation to fees or salaries.

In relation to interest of money.

Providing for opening and conducting elections of State, county or township officers, and designating the places of voting.

Providing for the sale of real estate belonging to minors or other persons laboring under legal disabilities, by executors, administrators, guardians or trustees.

In all the cases enumerated in the preceding sections, and in all other cases where a general law can be made applicable, all laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the State."

Mr. E. BROOKS—I beg leave to make a single remark in reference to that resolution—

Mr. FOLGER—I call the gentleman to order—as I understand it the resolution lies over.

Mr. E. BROOKS—I ask leave of the Convention to make but a single remark; but if the gentleman objects I will take my seat. The resolution is a very important one, I do not propose action upon it at the present time, but I wish to call the attention of the Convention to the provisions of the resolution. The Governor of the State has signed nearly one thousand bills passed by the Legislature of 1867, only two hundred and thirty of which were of a public nature, and many even of those are trivial in their character. I ask that the resolution which I have submitted be laid upon the table and be printed, and at the proper time I will call it up for consideration.

The resolution was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OPDYKE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the appropriate standing committee to inquire into the expediency of inserting in the Constitution a provision in substance as follows:

"That a whole life policy of insurance with equal annual premiums, during life, for a sum not exceeding ten thousand dollars, payable at death to the wife and children of the insured, or any or either of them, may, if so originally declared in the policy, become and shall be exempt from the claims of the husband's creditors.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

The Convention then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to correct a word in the clause reported by the committee. The Convention is about to pass upon the adoption or rejection of this proposed amendment, and the correction cannot be made if the amendment goes to the Convention. I ask to insert after the word "vote," in line twenty, the words "given or," so that it will read "any money or other valuable thing to influence or reward a vote given, or to be given at such election." What I ask is simply the correction of an error that occurred by oversight, to which my attention has been called by a distinguished gentlemen.

There being no objection, the correction was made as suggested by Mr. Greeley.

Mr. MURPHY—When the committee rose yesterday I was about to make some remarks in reply to observations which had fallen from gentlemen who had spoken on the amendment which I had the honor to propose. My particular purpose was, sir, to correct an impression which seemed to be conveyed by the remarks to which I have referred, that the amendment of itself contemplated a property qualification for the colored race. That, sir, is not the case; but quite the contrary. The object of that amendment was to submit to the people the question whether all restrictions should be removed from the colored race in regard to suffrage, and whether they might all vote, irrespective of any particular qualification different from the other race. Our province here, sir, is to amend the Constitution. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] it is true, would, of itself, effect the same object as that which my amendment has in view. But to my mind it is liable to two very serious objections. It does not distinctly bring before the electors the amendment proposed, viz., that of extending the right of suffrage beyond the point to which it is now given to the black race. It does not put forward affirmatively and distinctly the proposition that the right of suffrage is, with their consent, to be extended to this disqualified race. Another objection in my mind was that it did not provide for a separate submission of the question to the people. I sought to present that question to this Convention in connection with this article, and could not do so unless I recited in the amendment the existing provision of the Constitution, to the effect that no negro could vote, unless he possessed a property qualification of two hundred and fifty dollars. It was, therefore, no proposition of mine, nor is it any proposition of mine that the property qualification should exist in regard to the negro race. I do not believe in a property qualification anywhere, for any race. If a citizen is entitled to vote by the other qualifications, I am opposed to restricting his right to vote by a property qualification, be he black or white. But, sir, I find this provision in the existing Constitution, and my object is to present distinctly to the electors of this State the question whether the elective franchise shall be extended beyond that point, so that all persons of color may be entitled to vote. Now, so far as the impression has been sought to be conveyed, whether intentionally or not, that the object of this amendment is to impose a property qualification upon negroes, I hope it is now removed and the question set at rest. The great object and purpose of my amendment are to have a separate submission of this question to the electoral body which I conceive to be proper, for various considerations. I consider it to be proper in the first place, because the only certain way of ascertaining the will of the people in that regard is by presenting to them distinctly and by itself that question. If you incorporate it in the Constitution itself and submit it in connection with all the other propositions in that instrument to one vote, you do not get a fair and honest vote upon the proposition. Men who are opposed to the Constitution for other reasons vote against this project. There may be a majority in favor of that proposition by itself, and yet not willing to concede other objectionable matters in the Constitution, who will vote against the whole instrument, and thus the extension may be lost. The amendment as proposed, by me, is the one favorable to the views of those who maintain that public sentiment is in favor of extending this right of suffrage to this race; while in my judgment, I repeat, the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] including it in the Constitution, and not presenting it as a separate amendment, it may be defeated when the will of the electoral body may really be in favor of it. Let me not be misunderstood. I am opposed personally to negroes voting, but I am now arguing the point whether this question should be separately submitted. But more than this, sir, it is peculiarly a question which should be submitted to the electoral body, because it concerns the electoral body particularly. It is whether their number should be increased and enlarged, whether the principle of the elective franchise should be changed, and this privilege extended. I may say it is the people's question of privilege, and takes precedence of all other matters in the Constitution. They should determine the material question in the Constitution, in whom the power of the government shall be vested? Society has already intrusted them with it, and they are to say whether they will enlarge it or contract it. They should have the opportunity of voting fairly upon it in order that they may vindicate, if I may so speak, their own personality. I proposed it, sir, for another reason. It follows the safe line of precedent. It is the course which was adopted in 1846, and although then a large majority of the people of the State adopted the Constitution, yet upon a separate vote they rejected this proposition. If they are of that mind yet, let them have an opportunity of saying so. If they have changed their mind, let them have an opportunity of so declaring. A contrary course from that which I have proposed, that course which incorporates the proposition in the Constitution itself, shows a want of confidence in the people — a distrust in their intelligence to vote upon this question, and looks to me very much like a fraud upon the electors in regard to the question. If, as is contended, the people of the State are in favor of extending the franchise in this way, why not let them have an opportunity of fairly and squarely saying so? I have failed to hear a single objection to this course that was satisfactory to my mind. I will not say, as the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], yesterday said in regard to some arguments that were made, that there is nothing in them. They may be satisfactory to the parties who propose them, but they are not satisfactory to my mind. The honorable gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] in some remarks which he submitted yesterday on this question, or the day before, I do not recollect distinctly which, put his opposition to a separate submission upon the ground that it was confusing to the electors, that they could not discriminate between the different propositions that might be presented. Well now, sir, there is nothing in that, because we have, as I said before, the best evidence in the experience of 1846. The people, I tell the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], are capable of determining more than one proposition at a time, and as a mass are quite as capable of voting on this matter and are as discriminating as the gentleman himself. There was another reason advanced by the honorable gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] in the remarks which he made, and a very singular one to my mind it was, if I may be permitted to say so. "It may be lost," he said, "by a separate proposition; it may be lost by the votes of gamblers and men of that ilk," and I believe he had something to say about July rioters. I do not know what was the object of the gentleman in making these particular references—whether he wished to give the question a party direction, or make a party distinction or not; but it is quite evident, if the extension is to be voted down on a separate proposition, it must be done by at least a portion of the party to which the honorable gentleman belongs, since they hold the majority in the elections of this State. It may be possible that there are gamblers and rioters who belong to that party who may unite with others in voting it down, but I hardly think so, sir. That there are gamblers and other improper men who exercise the elective franchise is quite true, but I rather think they can be found everywhere, and in all parties, and in all societies. Not only, sir, in the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], but in those of others who spoke yesterday, I think I see a disposition to make a party question of this. The honorable gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] spoke of the duty of the majority to take hold of this question, drawing the distinction between the members of this body politically, the majority and the minority. Sir, most honestly and sincerely do I deprecate any attempt to draw this question into the vortex of party politics. A political question it is, but it never has been and I trust never will be made a mere party question. These gentlemen in the same breath tell us, indeed, they taunt democrats upon this floor, and democrats not here, with having voted in 1846, and again in 1860, for the proposition to enfranchise the negro. And they tell us that those men, some of them are of the same opinion still and yet they would make this a party question. On the other hand the views of men acting in the Republican party against extending the elective franchise to negroes are quite as distinct as those views of any Democrats. It is a question which rises above party. It is a question which concerns good government, and therefore, concerns us all, one which if there be any that comes under our consideration demanding impartial examination and decision should be met honestly and fairly, and without reference to the shackles of partisanship. Over the seat on which you sit, above yon canopy, are inscribed the words of one whom the majority of this Convention delighted to honor, and whose fame and good name has become a part of the history of this Union. Did he not see in this question the objection which I alluded to yesterday, and to which the honorable gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] took exceptions? Let me read what Abraham Lincoln said. This was in his famous debate with Mr. Douglas, in September, 1858. He says: "While I was at the hotel to-day, an elderly gentleman called upon me to know whether I really was in favor of producing a perfect equality between the negroes and white people. While I had not proposed to myself on this occasion to say much on that sub-the author, "and containing notes and plates, never before published," and which was printed in 1853. Mr. Jefferson says:

"It will probably be asked, why not retain and incorporate the blacks into the State, and thus save the expense of supplying, by importation of white settlers, the vacancies they will leave? Deep-rooted prejudices entertained by the whites; ten thousand recollections by the blacks of the injuries they have sustained; new provocations; the real distinctions which nature has made; and many other circumstances, will divide us into parties, and produce convulsions, which will probably never end but in the extermination of one or the other race."

He goes on to discuss the differences physically, but that does not belong immediately to this question and then proceeds:

"Comparing them by their faculties of memory, reason and imagination, it appears to me that in memory they are equal to the whites; in reason much inferior, as I think one could scarcely be found capable of tracing and comprehending the investigations of Euclid; and that in imagination they are dull, tasteless and anomalous. It would be unfair to follow them to Africa for this investigation. We will consider them here on the same stage with the whites, and where the facts are not apocryphal on which a judgment is to be formed. It will be right to make great allowances for the difference of condition, of education, of conversation, of the sphere in which they move." * * "Some have been liberally educated, and all have lived in countries where the arts and sciences are cultivated to a considerable degree, and have had before their eyes, samples of the best works from abroad." * * "They astonish you with strokes of the most sublime oratory; such as prove their reason and sentiment strong, their imagination glowing and elevated. But never yet could I find that a black had uttered a thought above the level of plain narration; never seen an elementary trait, of painting or sculpture." * * "The improvement of the blacks in body and mind, in the first instance of their mixture with the whites, has been observed by every one, and proves that their infirmity is not the effect merely of their condition in life."

So much for the patriarch of the Democracy, whom my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. L. Townsend] follows. Mr. Jefferson, the founder of Republicanism, according to my friend, sees between the races a distinction which many assert is a ground why the elective franchise should not be extended, and a difference not merely physical, but an inferiority mentally, which will not allow them to advance, as he states, beyond the power of mere narration or imitation. And, sir, we have had laid on our desks a pamphlet which has been put forward by a distinguished body of the republican party, which, however, I believe, is not in sympathy with my friend from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], called the Union League of New York [Laughter], prepared by a very distinguished philosopher, Professor Lieber, intended, no doubt, to enlighten and guide us in our conduct here. I looked curiously into it to see what the learned professor had to say on the subject of extending the elective franchise to negroes. I found nothing there except the idea which has already been suggested by several gentlemen in debate, and with which I fully accord, that it was unjust to restrict negroes from voting merely by a property qualification — taking the ground that a property qualification, if insisted upon, was wrong, or in other words, showing the inconsistency to which I alluded yesterday of imposing a property qualification upon that race, under which any of them with property were entitled to vote, and then upon no ground of reason or right as regards their mental condition or capacity, insisting that those not so qualified were not entitled to vote. He merely makes what lawyers call a special plea. But what his real views upon the main question are, I find in his book entitled, "Political Ethics." I quote from the latest edition of the work, which I obtain in the library here. Let us see what he says about the physiological distinction between the two races.

"Yet though the distinction between man and brute has thus been distinctly drawn, comparative anatomy and physiology are establishing daily more clearly the fact, that all those beings comprehended under the vast term of human species are not only morally or individually distinguished from each other, but in a very marked way, physiologically, and as to their capacities by whole races, forming a gradual scale of superiority. The most peculiar skulls of the so-called Pre-Inca race, found in South America, are so entirely different from ours, that they alone show an essential difference of that race from ours. The Caffres, the Boushmannes (Bushmen), the Hottentots, and the poor Papous, for instance, differ so materially in their anatomy and physiologic organization, from the races which comparative anatomy as well as the history of civilization teach us by conclusive facts, to consider as superior, that we should abandon all truth, were we to deny the difference. There is probably no reflective man, who was not painfully startled when he became first acquainted with these nevertheless imperative truths. We love to treat in our theories and meditations, all men as absolutely equal, but truth is truth, however it may militate with beloved, nay, generous theories: and God is the God of truth."

Here, sir, is a writer of distinction, who is indorsed politically, who maintains very distinctly the inferiority of the negro race in capacity, the ground upon which many who oppose negro suffrage base their opposition. I have referred, sir, to these authorities not for the purpose of indorsing them before this Convention, for that is not the question before us, but for the purpose of showing that this is not a partisan question and should not be decided upon partisan grounds; that there are fixed moral convictions in the minds of many people against the extension of the elective franchise in that direction. Mr. Chairman, I have already spoken more than I had intended to, and yet I may be permitted to make a few further observations before I close. It must be borne in mind that there is a great difference between emancipating the slave, freeing him from the unjust restraint by which he was held—giving him those natural rights to which he was entitled by God, and conferring upon him, the high privilege of participating in the government of the country. There is a difference between abolishing slavery and enfranchising the slave. Giving him his liberty undoubtedly will have a tendency to improve his condition, but it does not confer upon him capacity. He remains in that respect a member of his race still. He does not, by that act, become qualified mentally with the powers necessary to exercise this province of government. The men who have contended against this slavery of the body, those who have fought and have successfully fought for his freedom, will not, must not, and cannot confound that with his right to vote. It is true, sir, history tells us that when the Helots of Sparta were emancipated, they were admitted to the rights of citizenship; but the Helots of Sparta were white men, having a capacity by nature, equal to their former masters. They were not a distinct and different race, and we can draw no argument by analogy, from that historical circumstance. But the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], based the right of these men to vote upon the ground that they were our equals. He argues that these people are not entitled to this right by nature, that they are entitled to this privilege because God has made them equal with us. How does mere naked equality, in the sense in which it is used in the Declaration of Independence, to which he referred, confer any right or any duty upon us to enfranchise them? Are not females our equals? Are not all the other disfranchised classes our equals in the sense of that instrument? How does he escape from the dilemma in which he places himself when he denies that there is a natural right, by saying that they are entitled to it because they are our equals? The gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] does not exactly like that definition or that doctrine. He does not put it upon the ground of natural right, which he most satisfactorily demonstrated did not exist, nor will he accept the proposition of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith]. It is not, he says, on the ground of their equality, but it is because he [Mr. Hand] has a right to vote. Now, the gentleman [Mr. Hand] has a right to sit in this Convention, but how has he a right to sit in it? By the determination of the electoral body. But no other man is entitled to that seat. How is it that by the gentleman's having a right to vote the negro gets a right to vote, any more than a woman gets a right to vote? He does not change the position of things. He uses new words. He goes back to the doctrine which he repudiated himself when he puts it upon that ground, and makes it to be a natural right. He does not advance, it appears to me, one step in the argument. The reason that many persons are opposed to extending the elective franchise to the blacks is that it tends to social equality. The gentleman [Mr. Hand] hoots at the idea. When you make a political equality you produce, necessarily, a social equality, where there is anything like an equality in number, and every where in the proportion that the race bears to another in political equality or political power. If the extension of the elective franchise to blacks does not bring into this body or into our own legislative bodies and executive chair black men, it will do so in other States where the races are more equally divided or where the blacks predominate—and with such power, all history proves, and which is especially marked in the case of the Republics of South America, social equality follow. From this co-mixture of races will follow the degradation of our manhood, that condition which is spoken of with so much feeling by gentlemen. This proposed extension of the right is opposed by others on the ground of inferiority of the race, and of their incapacity to comprehend the principles and axioms of the government, or to rise to a proper discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise. I know it was said yesterday that there were hundreds and thousands who exercised the elective franchise who ought not. Allusion was made to those ignorant persons of the white race, who are allowed to vote. That comes in as a matter of necessity, under the general principle which we have adopted. Whatever may be the condition of that class, ignorant as they may be in regard to matters of the world, uneducated as they may be in schools and colleges, they still have the power, as far as my experience has gone, to make observation and distinguish between those who are in favor of popular liberty and those who are not. But your black man, it is said, has not the capacity. He advances to a certain stage and there stops. He is not capable of doing anything more than imitating. Now, Mr. Chairman, I refer to these points merely to show the propriety of referring this question to the electoral body, that the people may, in their original capacity, have the opportunity distinctly to vote upon this question, whether they will open this right and privilege to a class to which it is sought to be extended. I stated yesterday that if such be the sovereign will of the people of this State, I will acquiesce in that judgment most cheerfully. But let us have an intelligent decision upon the question. If such be the result, certainly, as an American citizen, I shall submit, although I may not myself agree with them, and will feel bound by their decision, for it will be the law.

Mr. CORBETT—Yesterday this question was discussed in a sort of skirmishing manner. We talked of paupers, lunatics, and idiots. The question was surrounded with a great deal of extraneous matter. The substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], however, has somewhat cleared the atmosphere, and we are now permitted to discuss the plain proposition of manhood suffrage. The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Murphy] says that this is not a party question, that it is a question above party. Sir, it is not above my party—and if it is, I am in the wrong company. The striking out of the word "white," marks distinctly the dividing line between the two political organizations in the State of New York to-day, and perhaps, in the United States; between the men who derive their ideas and their rule of action from the past, and those who see in the future something to hope for; between the men who think that all wisdom died with the generation which preceded us, and the men who believe there is yet wisdom with the generation of to-day. It marks the distinction between the classes of society who are regressive and those which are progressive; between the men who are clinging to the prejudices of the past, and those who would use the results of advancing civilization; between those who still get their nourishment from the dying traditions of slavery, and those who have associated their sympathies with the growing aspirations of liberty. So far as this distinction holds good, this is indeed a party question. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] has cited to us eminent authorities to prove the negro's incompetency to exercise the elective franchise, and from one author especially, who claims that the negro intellect could never be so far developed as to enable to solve a problem in Euclid. Why, sir, if the ability to solve a problem in Euclid were to be a test of one's capacity to exercise the elective franchise judiciously, the gentleman's party would be exceedingly select. [Laughter]. Besides, the negro in America is a vast improvement on the negro in Africa. Owing to the kindness, and, I might add, the social laxity of Southern morals, he is favored with a generous infusion of Caucasian blood, and it is the representative of that element that we have in the Northern States. The gentleman has quoted from a speech delivered by Abraham Lincoln in 1858, to prove that that great and good man did not believe in the negro's capacity to vote. Why, sir, a vast gulf divides the years 1858 and 1867. Since that time the thought of the nation has made gigantic strides, and we witness on every side of us the results of a new and a better faith. Civilization has made, since that period, grand conquests, and we stand in the shadow of another and a better revelation; and before the hand of an assassin had robbed the nation of her wisest ruler he had accepted the new interpretation. Yesterday the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] expressed his regret that the State of New York should take such a position as the majority here seem disposed to sanction, for then her example would be held up to other States to influence their action. Sir, it is for that reason that I am in earnest. We desire to show to the people of the United States that the experience of the past six years has not been lost upon the men of the Empire State. We desire to show to those who are struggling for liberty in Europe, and to the victims of oppression in every land, that the heart of the great State of New York, first in power, first in glory, first in history, beats in unison with their pulsations. There is another reason for my position. I cherish a creed, and have sprung from a nationality that have felt oppression and have been the victims of prejudice. I remember the time when a great party in this State had for its watchword, "None but Americans on guard." We felt what persecution was then; and in that bitter school learning its force, my sympathies ever shall be with, and my voice shall ever plead for those who suffer from injustice and wrong. When the Native American organization dissolved, the fragments naturally aggregated with the pro-slaveryism of the country, for there the proscriptive spirit found congenial society. From abuse of the foreigner to abuse of the negro the transition was easy and rapid. We are also told that our doctrines will lead to social equality; but of that I am not afraid. Social standing is determined by merit, and all the legislation in the world will fail to make a man a gentleman unless he possesses the qualities of a gentleman within himself, and then no amount of legislation can prevent his recognition. What is the political power which the gentleman so much dreads? the grim specter which stands before his heated imagination? Is it to come from the enfranchisement of eleven thousand negroes in the State of New York—eleven thousand amongst almost a million of white voters? I regret that the gentleman has seen fit to resort to such profitless considerations. I had hoped, sir, that in this nineteenth century there were other and better reasons for the exclusion of our colored citizens from the exercise of the elective franchise. And yet it was to be expected. Hatred for the negro for the last thirty years has been the political capital of the party of which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] is an honored member, and it is not to be wondered at that he still desires to be consistent with the record of the past. The gentleman charges that hope of retaining political ascendancy in the nation is the motive which actuates us in seeking the enfranchisement of the negro in the south. Sir, we ask the ballot for the negro in the south, first because he is entitled to it as a freeman, and secondly, as a proper reward for his fidelity to the government in its hour of peril—for his devotion to the Republic in the day of sorest need, for springing to the help of the nation when traitors of a paler hue conspired against its very existence, and when perhaps gentlemen who now talk of his inferiority were not so faithful. He then knew enough to fight, was intelligent enough to be loyal, and after such a record I cannot question his capacity to vote. The gentleman says that suffrage does not necessarily follow citizenship. Well, sir, citizenship is incomplete without it. Suffrage is the complement of citizenship. The separation might be likened to the arch without the keystone, the temple without the capstone. Their combination is necessary to complete the unity. I am opposed to the separate submission of this question. There is no reason why the question of suffrage should be submitted separately more than any other proposed change in the organic law of the State. Besides, in my opinion, it would be an exhibition of cowardice and a compromise with the timidity of those who profess to be the friends of freedom. Some men are ever looking back to the past, and every change they regard an innovation. I have all reverence for the past, but, at the same time, a degree of respect for the present and confidence in the future. Since 1846 we have made rapid advances toward the bright star of our destiny. I had hoped that the younger and more vigorous element of the democratic party had observed the results and counseled with the ideas that triumphed in the recent glorious struggle for freedom and nationality. But it seems we must march without them. I turn to those, then, of whom better things can be said, and of them I ask unity of purpose and firmness of faith, and that they falter not at the threshold of victory. As for me, the work of this Convention shall stand or fall with manhood suffrage.

Mr. LANDON—I am in favor of so much of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] as proposes a separate submission of the question of negro suffrage to the people, and I deem it, sir, proper that this statement should be made thus early in this debate, since it can only happen that the further extension of the right of suffrage to the negro can be granted by the votes of the electors of this State, and since all parties are agreed that it is best that the question should be submitted to the people in some way or other, it seems to me that the only question that is pertinent here is, how shall it be submitted? The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Corbett] says that the plan for separate submission is cowardice. I affirm, sir, that the plan of separate submission is bold, direct, and manly, and that the plan of joint submission is a plan that savors timidity and indirection. I, for one, am as much in favor of extending the ballot to the negro as any gentleman upon this floor. I am not afraid of the negro, I am not afraid of his power, of his superiority, or of his influence. I am willing to accord to him the same rights that I claim myself. No law can ennoble me by degrading him. When I have to turn to the statute-book to prove myself his superior, or to find in it a restraint upon my desire for his companionship the statute will deserve contempt, and myself no less. No, sir, let him advance as best he may in the pursuit of prosperity and happiness, protected in his liberty by the shield and the weapon which the ballot will afford him; but I am, sir, in favor of meeting this question plainly, squarely and directly. I do not wish to dodge it in any particular, but it seems to me that this plan of separate submission is just to all and prejudicial no none. Those who shall favor the Constitution which we shall submit and also negro suffrage can vote both ballots. Those opposed to both can vote both ballots. And that other, and perhaps numerous class, who shall favor the one and oppose the other, can also vote both ballots. None will be in anywise restricted in the liberty of choice; but by embracing the two in the one instrument, it will happen that the liberty of choice of a large portion of our citizens will be restricted. If I like my landlord's beef but do not like his onions, I will thank him not to mix them. All of us are well enough advised with regard to the public sentiment of this State, and in regard to this question of the further extension of negro suffrage to the people, to know that there is a wide difference of opinion in regard to it. We need not stop to inquire how that difference originated, or why it exists. Perhaps it ought not to exist. But we know the fact that it does exist among the people whom we represent, that they desire to express their opinions in regard to it; and I say that we, sir, as their representatives owe it to them, and owe it to our own manliness and directness, to give them the opportunity. And I know no good reason why the desire of the people to express themselves upon this question plainly and directly should be in any wise restricted or suppressed. Every citizen in this State, is entitled to the same right as every other citizen, to vote upon this question as he pleases. Again, sir, by the separate submission of this question, we shall confine the party question to one issue, and shall lift the main instrument out of the domain of party politics. By this course the people of this State will be permitted to examine it, without prejudice and without restraint—"a consummation devoutly to be wished." Passing through such an examination, if it shall then happen that it meets with the approval of the people of the State, we may well hope that we have labored wisely in our efforts to revise and amend this organic law. But, whatever may be their verdict, I can conceive of no occupation more dignified or ennobling than that of the hundreds of thousands of electors of this State engaged in the examination of its proposed organic law, free from bigotry and restraint, free from party trammels and influence, with the sole object to approve of it, if it be found right, and to reject it if it be found wrong. Under such circumstances the right to vote is worth more than a kingly crown, and the citizens may well be sovereign. But I greatly fear that by this joint submission, the influence of parties, rather than the dictates of sound judgment, will be found to control the result of the vote of the people. I lay no stress, sir, upon the precedents which have been cited in the report of the minority of the committee, or by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. If I based my action upon these precedents, I should accuse myself of seeking a pretext to do a pre-determined thing, rather than for a reason to guide me toward the right. Precedents, sir, are the forms in which things are clothed, not the things themselves. However useful they may be to shape our action after we have determined it, they do not hit the main question; they do not aid us in determining whether we ought or not to do it. I doubt, sir, whether these precedents convince anybody. I am conscious that in the course I am now indicating for myself, I am acting at variance with the wishes of many trusted and more experienced members of this Convention, with whom it would be a pleasure for me to co-operate in this as in other matters of public policy. But, sir, if this question is to be made in any wise a party measure, then I have to say that I shall allow no considerations of party to influence my vote upon these questions of detail which are submitted to us. We cannot afford, we ought not, as a matter of duty, looking forward into that future in which it may be that our labors will long survive all our parties, and all of us, to limit our action by any mere consideration of party. No, sir, our object should rather be to frame as wise a Constitution as our best judgment can devise, and then to lift the parties up to a generous rivalry how best to perpetuate and promote the principles of which, after all, the best Constitution can only afford a meagre outline. Again, sir, I hope that we shall submit a Constitution worthy the adoption of the people of this State, a Constitution better adapted than the present one to its ever expanding, and multiplying and competing industry and interests, a Constitution better adapted to its financial, judicial, and educational requirements, a Constitution, sir, which shall better promote, than the present one, the prosperity and happiness of the people of our State, and be more in consonance with the civilization of the age in which we live. I confess sir, that I am unwilling to hazard the whole upon this single question of extending the ballot to the negro; and I am the more unwilling because, in my judgment, the hazard is altogether unnecessary and of questionable right. I know sir, that it is supposed that those who are principally instrumental in asking the separate submission of this question, desire to frame upon it an issue which shall go down to the next election. This, sir, I can readily believe, but I do not know of any means by which we can prevent it, unless it shall be abandoned altogether, and that I for one will not consent to it. It seems to me, sir, and I believe it to be true, that if we will not allow them to make their party issue upon this separate question of suffrage, they will make it upon the joint submission of the whole instrument, and this will place them upon a higher vantage ground. The gentlemen of the majority with whom I am accustomed to act, will then have to champion not only the question of negro suffrage, but the educational, the judicial, the financial, and all other questions that our proposed Constitution may embrace, and if it shall happen, as I think it is likely to happen, that the interests of the whole party will be found to hinge upon successful fault-findings, the party may not be found to have virtue enough within itself to refrain from fault-finding. It is the easiest thing in the world to find fault; partisan interest can readily coin charges of folly, extravagance and corruption—"a breath may make them as a breath has made;" and though easily made, they may prove hard to be defended. So it may happen that the political contest which you hope to avert by smothering this fertile generator of strife—this question of negro suffrage, between the financial and judicial blankets, will thereby become intensified and aggravated instead of quieted and subdued. A little leaven sometimes leaveneth the whole lump. Let us meet this question plainly, separately and directly, and not in confusion, or mixed in any indirect way with other questions. Let us go before the whole people upon the single issue, with the same confidence in our power as in our virtue. In this age of ever recurring elections, no success which is founded upon the advantage derived from the present possession of power can be anything but short lived. If we go into the contest upon the separate question and succeed we shall gain an honorable victory, and if we fail we shall not be humiliated by the consciousness that we have deserved defeat by our timidity and indirection.

Mr. NELSON—Although the Convention has spent considerable time on this question, and although it may be impossible for me to add anything that would change a single vote that is to determine the important issues we are to settle, still it may not be a loss of time for me to review the questions as they are now presented to this Convention, and make those suggestions which occur to my mind. We have here two plans, or two systems, so to speak. On the one hand we have a plan or system reported by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], as the chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and on that report arises the question about which we disagree. In that report the chairman proposes to confer suffrage upon the colored people of the State. Perhaps I should not thus state it, but rather say that in the plan he proposes he desires to embody in the instrument itself a provision which, if the instrument is adopted, will, by such adoption, confer suffrage upon the colored men. Now, without stating how any of us, or desiring to know how any of us feel, it has occurred to me that the fairest and most just treatment of the people at large, is to let them pass upon that question independently and separately, as they may. We look back upon the action of the Convention of 1846, that framed the Constitution under which we are now living, and find they made a form of government that was satisfactory to a very large majority of the people of the State. That Constitution was adopted by a very large majority. The same Convention that framed that instrument submitted to a separate vote of the people, the question of the extension of suffrage to the colored people of the State, and the result on that question was some 140,000 majority against the proposition. I submit it to the sense of this Convention if it would have been right or just to the people of the State of New York—in view of the history of the past, in view of the action of the people upon the Constitution submitted in 1846, when the instrument itself was adopted by a large majority, and the question of conferring suffrage defeated by a large majority—to have embodied a clause in the Constitution to extend suffrage to negroes, to be passed upon with all the other provisions in the instrument? It has been suggested here by the chairman of the Committee on Suffrage [Mr. Greeley], that this Convention should have the boldness to embody this principle in the instrument as an entirety. Sir, it is ever bold to do right; it is ever bold to deal fairly with men and with communities, and when you present to the people of the State a clear abstract proposition, they, in their intelligence will decide it one way or the other. But the chairman, of the committee tells us, in undertaking to give a reason why the property qualification should be abolished, that slavery, the vital source and only possible ground of what he terms an invidious distinction, has been abolished. Sir, it is not for me to define the distinction. In my judgment, looking back to the action of the people of the State of New York, when they said, by the large vote they gave that they would not confer the right to vote upon colored men, it was in the exercise of their right of sovereignty that they so decided, and none of us should question it. But, is it true that slavery was the cause of this decision? Slavery had long before been abolished in the State of New York. It was not slavery, nor the recollection of slavery, that made the people give that decision; and it becomes us, succeeding those men who formed the instrument under which we have lived so long and so prosperously, that we should give a better reason for the action of the people of the State than is here given. What reasons may be suggested? We look over these classes excluded from voting, and what do we find? We find young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one, excluded; and we find the women of our State, also, excluded from the exercise of the elective franchise. Why have these two classes been excluded? In support of extending suffrage to the negro, the chairman of the committee suggests that whites and blacks are required to render like obedience to our laws, and are punished in like measure for their violation; but I would suggest to the honorable gentleman [Mr. Greeley] that young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one are also bound to render obedience to the law, and are alike punished for its violation. So, also, Mr. Chairman, are the women of our State bound to render obedience to the law, and are punished for its violation. It is also suggested that whites and blacks were indiscriminately drafted. That is true. But, sir, were not our young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one also drafted? You go to the rolls of that army which fought so bravely for the purpose of handing down to posterity free institutions, and on those rolls you will find long lines of honorable names of young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one. Then go to your national cemeteries, and read the inscriptions upon your monuments, and there you will find the names of thousands and thousands of heroes whose ages were between eighteen and twenty-one. One other fact, Mr. Chairman, in following out the idea. In reading the history of the war from which we have just emerged, you will find following in march of that army for which so many millions of hearts beat with a lively interest, woman with kindness, tenderness and sympathy to bestow upon the sick and wounded. And yet, women and young men between eighteen and twenty-one are excluded from voting. Mr. Chairman, as citizens, young men, women and children owe obedience to law—

Mr. AXTELL—Will the gentleman [Mr. Nelson] give way for a moment. I should like to ask the gentleman by what principle should the people be governed in conferring the privilege of elective franchise? Should they be governed by whim or prejudice, or by some great general principle.

Mr. NELSON—I propose to reach that question by and by. If I do not answer it sufficiently to the satisfaction of my friend, before I have concluded my remarks, I will give way for him to renew his interrogatory if he should desire it. I have mentioned these matters, Mr. Chairman, not because in my judgment, the right of suffrage should be conferred upon all of these classes. I hold it to be immaterial what may be the individual opinion of members of this Convention upon this subject. Those opinions are immaterial, because whatever we do must be submitted to the action of our sovereigns, and our sovereigns are now the people of the State of New York. We used to profess, in all public documents, to derive all legal authority and power by virtue of "our sovereign lord the king," and so the old records of the State show on one page; and yet, turn over to the next page, and it recites that the sovereign power is in the people of the State of New York. In the records of the State, but a single side of a leaf separates records with those two recitals. An individual opinion is only important so far as it carries with it power to influence electors at the polls. When my eloquent friend from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett] (if this question comes to be submitted to the people) addresses the electors of his community, he will give the reasons which he thinks should lead them to adopt it, and others will be heard in opposition to it. But to return. I was answering the question suggested by the report. It is not slavery, in my judgment, or the reasons that are named in the report of the committee on this section which caused the people in 1846 not to extend suffrage to the classes I have named. We must look for a different reason as actuating the people who cast that vote. The reason may have been, that in their judgment young men should not be allowed to vote because they had not reached that time of life to have the experience necessary to intelligently exercise the elective franchise. We all know young men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one, numbers of them, who would cast as intelligent a vote as perhaps any of us could cast, and yet they are excluded. And in excluding women from the right to vote, it may be that the people of the State of New York—looking at her power and influence—looking at her presiding in a higher, nobler and holier sphere than party politics—the charmed circle of home said, “there let her be,” as the good women of this State, in my humble judgment desire to remain. “to rule with a power by which she has ever ruled, and keeping clear of the party strife, squabbles and contests of political life.” Undoubtedly, women would exercise the elective franchise with intelligence; but they are excluded. Then, sir, in the light of the past, what is the reason for the various exclusions? Is it not this, that in defining the right of franchise, it is necessary to have a rule of limitation somewhere fixed. If that is so, in a written constitution, that fixed and settled line will work harshly or arbitrarily in some cases. It undoubtedly excludes some very competent and intelligent young men below the age now recognized for voting and it undoubtedly excludes some ladies who are so anxious for the elective franchise, and who astonish their sisters by telling them how terribly oppressed they are in the free State of New York. But, sir, though that is an arbitrary line, it must go somewhere. If I remember aright what is spoken of as the Constitution of England, of which the Englishman is so proud, is a Constitution that no living man has ever read. It is a Constitution not existing in writing, it is a Constitution existing in theory and made to bend to the circumstances of particular cases. But in a republic all Constitutions are written, and whenever you write a rule, in some cases, it will be arbitrary. It is now suggested, Mr. Chairman, that although in 1866, there was a large vote against extending the elective franchise to colored men, that that question should again go to the people. How should it go? Should it not go to their intelligence to be carried by their vote unincumbered and unembarrassed by any other question? If they are opposed to it, as the people in 1846 were opposed to it, should they not, in the same manner, have the right to pass upon it and defeat it? Including it in the body of the instrument, you carry with it, perhaps, a financial policy to be adopted here that some men are opposed to, and you say to them who are in favor of negro suffrage, “you must take with it a financial policy to which you are opposed.” You may have a judiciary system to which many men may be opposed—a system that may fasten upon the people of the State men for life, who will have to stay there with all their own and wives’ relatives in office, and with no way existing to reach the abuse, and you say to a man in favor of negro suffrage, you must take that system though you are opposed to it, for the purpose of obtaining negro suffrage. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that fairness, candor, honor and courage require a separate submission to the people, for them to determine this question separately and alone from the other questions embodied in the instrument that we shall frame. I do not know but what the rule applies in Committee of the Whole that has been spoken of, but there are some suggestions in this report that I desire to call attention to. It is proposed by the chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage to strike out all requirements as to residence in the county. I would ask if there has been any complaint made with reference to the present requirement in that respect? Has a single request made to alter it been sent to this Convention? All that is suggested by the chairman of the committee is, that that should be changed, for the reason that certain classes of mechanics, which he has named, leave the city during the summer, and thereby lose their right to vote. The answer to that is this: residence depends upon intent. If a man leaves a place with the intention of returning, under the Constitution as it now stands, he is entitled to the elective franchise without doubt or quibble. The majority of this committee also propose to require a residence of thirty days, though a man only moves from one side of the street to the other, if he thereby moves to a different election district. Is there any reason for that? One reason suggested, is, that that length of time is necessary to look into the right of persons to vote. Fix your districts so that they shall be so small that you will be able to learn the qualifications of men to vote; because the worst of all provisions in an instrument, and which will be the most offensive, will be any provision which deprives a citizen well known in his neighborhood from enjoying the right of casting his ballot, by some machinery of law. It was suggested by the chairman of the committee [Mr. Greeley], that this thirty-day requirement was necessary to do away with the anomaly of allowing persons in case of a removal, to vote a part of a ticket at an election when they would not be allowed to vote the remainder of the ticket. For instance, under our present Constitution, a man may vote the county ticket, and not be able to vote for Member of Assembly

But why should a man who has lived his whole lifetime in any particular county, as thousands have in the county where I reside, if he should move to the next farm or next town, lose his right to vote as county elector or elector of the State, as he would be if the proposition were adopted? Can any reason be suggested? But the greatest and best answer is, that the experience of the past in the State shows that no complaint is made to the present provision of the Constitution. There is one thing further. The committee, by their chairman, propose to strike out a provision that prohibits or prevents those attending colleges or schools from casting a vote at an election. Now, I can appreciate, living where I do, the effect of that provision. Have you heard, Mr. Chairman, any complaint by reason of it? Have those representing the educational interests come here to ask you to change it? The city where I live has an institution of learning, in which, sometimes, there are eighteen hundred, and sometimes as high as two thousand students. They come from all over the State, and from other States. Is there any right, justice or reason in the students of that college, or any institution of learning, stepping in and controlling our city elections? Should they be allowed to say how much money we shall raise to build a bridge, or to do this thing or that? Have they any interest in it? Not one bit. They have not asked for it. Adopt the provision, and the result will be, in places like Poughkeepsie, Albany, and others I could mention, that you would have persons who were really non-residents casting votes at elections. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest one thing, that perhaps the wisest course to take is to let well enough alone. Wherever you find difficulty, there step in and endeavor to amend it; but where there is no complaint let it alone. There is corruption, and there has been for years corruption of voters at the polls, and if the wisdom of this Convention can devise a plan to stop it, the people of this State will be grateful to it for having done it. The amendment proposed by one of the gentlemen, to my mind will reach that. Then is it not best to adopt the Constitution as it is with an amendment to prevent the corruption of votes, and submit, as a separate question to the opinion of the people of the State, the subject of extending suffrage to the negro for them to determine.

Mr. GOULD—I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech upon the general subject. I only wish to offer a few remarks in reply to those submitted this morning by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], while they are fresh in my memory. In the first place, the gentleman from Kings alleged that those who are opposed to a separate submission of the question of negro suffrage to the people are opposed to it from a spirit of cowardice, because they fear the people, and have no confidence in their intelligence. I wish to deny that conclusion altogether. He stated that he had never heard a single argument from those who desired to prevent a separate submission. Sir, I will give one on this occasion, and but one. The argument is, that it is an insult to the people to give a separate submission of the subject. Sir, the question whether a negro should vote or not was settled years ago. For almost fifty years the people of this State have decided, and that decision has been acquiesced in, that the negro was qualified to vote, and the only question is whether that ancient relic of feudalism, the property qualification, shall be annexed to that right. The whole issue is as to that one point and there is none other whatever. On that issue it is an absurdity to submit the question to the people. There are but two great parties in this State—one the Republican party and the other the Democratic party. Where will you ever find among the authentic utterances of the Republican party that they were in favor of the odious property qualification? Have they not rejected the idea in every form in which they could give it expression? Sir, I ask what have been the staple declarations of the Democratic party of this State for years? Have they not themselves declaimed against this odious property qualification? Well, sir, when the parties are one in this matter, there is nobody but what rejects a property qualification. The gentleman himself declared that it was odious to him; that he did not like it. Why, sir, insult the people by sending to them so obvious a proposition?

Mr. WEED—May I ask the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould] a question. Suppose negro suffrage with all other questions are submitted in one instrument, and in that instrument is something I cannot vote for conscientiously, though I favor negro suffrage, how can I cast my vote in favor of negro suffrage, and, as the gentleman says, in unison with the universal sentiment of this State.

Mr. GOULD—I take it that the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] will cast his vote against the property qualification. He is a democrat, and as a democrat he is bound to vote against it.

Mr. WEED—The gentleman has entirely avoided the question. I certainly, as a democrat, too, shall vote for negro suffrage, if I can get a separate submission of that question, or even if put in the body of the Constitution, if the other amendments submitted meet my approval. I am and have been during my whole life in favor of negro suffrage in this State, and have so cast my vote at all times. I desire an answer to my question.

Mr. GOULD—Sir, I come to another point which I wish to speak of, and that is the matter of precedents, which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] read to us. The people of the Southern States, who have studied the utterances of Mr. Jefferson more carefully and persistently than the people in any other section of the country, are in the habit of alleging that it is of no use to quote Mr. Jefferson on any subject whatever, for whatever you quote from him on one side is met with an antagonistic utterance by himself on the other side. And, sir, the quotation which was made by the gentleman from Kings to-day is but another illustration of that settled opinion of the southern people in regard to Mr. Jefferson. He read a statement from Jefferson's Notes on Virginia in which he said that the negro had no reasoning power whatever. Now, sir, if there is any one of undoubted negro blood who has manifested distinct reasoning power, if he has exhibited great intellectual acumen, that sir, settles the question forever, and shows that a want of intellect does not lie in the race. Now, sir, for twenty years Benjamin Banneker, a negro with a nose as flat as any negro was ever seen with, with lips as thick as any negro that ever walked the streets of Albany, calculated in Chester county, Pennsylvania, an almanac. He was one of those who was employed by the publishers in making the Poor Richard almanac. There was not his superior, except Dr. Rittenhouse, as a mathematician, in the United States at that time. Now, what I would ask is, whether the gentleman from Kings himself [Mr. Murphy] can compute an almanac? Can he lay on your tables to-morrow a page of an almanac calculated for the year 1967? And yet that thick-lipped, flat-nosed negro did that thing for twenty years. Sir, does that not require intellect? I would like to ask how many gentlemen in this room are competent to do what Benjamin Banneker did, and did most accurately? How many are as sufficiently conversant in the mechanical laws that are involved in the science of astronomy to do it? If the negro has a sufficient amount of intellect to do that, I think he may be intrusted with the right to vote on the question as to who shall be path-master or who shall be the constable of his village. We are told by the extracts which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] read, that no negro had ever been known to approximate to anything like æsthetic power—that no negro had ever been able to distinguish himself in the arts. Well, sir, in the year 1847, I myself, with my own eyes, saw a negro in the State Prison at Sing Sing, who was earning for his contractor twenty dollars a day by the exercise of one of the fine arts. He was accustomed to paint window shades, which readily sold for fifty dollars a pair. They were admired by every one who saw them. There was a gracefulness in the outline, a delicacy in the blending of colors, which attracted the highest admiration of every one, and which was attested by the price at which the window-shades were sold. If you have one man who has exhibited this kind of intellect, it is sufficient to overthrow the negative testimony which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] quoted this morning. Now with regard to the character of the race itself. It is alleged that because the negro is of a different race and different anatomical construction from the Caucasian race, therefore he is unfit to be trusted with suffrage. But, sir, I allege beyond all fear of successful contradiction, that there is no such extraordinary difference in the anatomical or physiological condition of the negro, as has been alleged here this morning. It is true sir that certain well marked and well developed instances may be found where the shin bone of the negro is different from the shin bone of the white man. But, sir, does the negro reason with his shin bone, or does he vote with his shin bone? Is that any element whatever to determine a question of this character? We are told, it is true, that their brains are different—that their skulls are flatter. Sir, you have only to go to the Geological rooms in State street in this city, and you will find a skull of one of the ancient Caucasian race—the root from which every Caucasian race has sprung—which is flatter than the skull of any negro whatever. Go, sir, to those island mounds in the Swiss lakes which are now attracting so much attention from physiologists and you will find in those mounds characterized as the mounds of stonehenge, skulls flatter and smaller than the most advanced monkeys of this day. The truth is, that as you cultivate the mind of the individual, you enlarge the brain-case. As the race rises or progresses in intelligence, just so does the covering of the skull rise, and the argument that because the rise is not distinguished in one race, does not prove by any means that there may not be this progress. Again, sir, I assert, beyond all fear of contradiction, of the lines by which the African and Caucasian races blend into each other so regularly and gradually that no physiologist in the world is able to point out the exact difference between them. You may take the projecting jaw of a certain class of the negro race; you may take the retreating foreheads; you may take the low skull; you may take the crooked shin-bone, but in a contiguous district, you may find a negro just as much a negro, as he is, where there is a progressive improvement in these characteristics. And as you pass onward through the extent of Africa, you will find the lines are so graded into each other before you get into the limits of the Caucasian race, that no man can point out the difference. Last evening I came along the banks of the Mohawk on the railroad, and gradually as the sun sank down behind the western hills, and the light was progressively diminishing, I sat there reading my paper, and finally looked around at the landscape, and saw the moon rising up; but I could not tell the period when it ceased to be light, or when it became dark. The gradation was so very slight that it was utterly impossible for me to tell, and just so it is with regard to the race. This argument based upon their shin bones and skulls is 'not worth a straw when it is examined practically and carefully. If you go to Mount Caucasus, and it may be exemplified by a series of portraits, you find most admirable physical specimens of humanity, through which, if you draw a line from the exterior angle of one eye to the exterior angle of the other, the line will strike the interior angle of each eye. Mathematically parallel to that line is the line adjoining the two corners of the lips. The line of the nose is exactly perpendicular to these lines, and every element of symmetry you find in that Caucasian race is the utmost perfection. Just precisely as you recede from the foot of Mount Caucasus, just precisely do you recede in the race from that perfect symmetry of form. We may take an individual example in the extreme and reason upon that, but it will always be found to be an exceedingly unsafe guide. I want to tell a story, and then I shall have done. My eloquent friend from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett] said that no amount of legislation could make a man a gentleman unless he had the elements of the character of a gentleman within him. And so, in the same way, no amount of legislation can keep down a gentleman who has the elements of that character within him. In 1818 I saw at my own father's table, a negro as black as the ace of spades. He was entertained there as an honored guest. He was the Ambassador from the Emperor of Hayti to the Court of Great Britain. I never saw a man of more elegant manners than there was manifested by that same gentleman. There was a grace and elegance in his deportment that were wonderful, and there was a range of information displayed in his conversation such as is rarely heard at any table. It may be, sir, that at a dinner table, my friend from Kings [Mr. Murphy], might surpass him, but if he could surpass him in all that belongs to the character of a gentleman at a dinner table, I believe he is the only man in the Convention who could do so. After that gentleman went on his mission, my father received a letter from him, and in that letter he stated that he had called upon the Hon. Richard Rush, at that time our minister at the court of St. James. He said that Mr. Rush treated him with the most distinguished consideration, that he had spoken to him in the kindest manner, and that as he was about to leave him, Mr. Rush said to him, "Sir, I would be very happy to invite you to my dinner-table to-day, but I have a number of my distinguished countrymen who will dine with me on the occasion, and you, who know so well the prejudices of race, will perhaps excuse me from giving you an invitation." "Certainly," said Mr. Sanders, "I will, for I have already been honored with an invitation to dine with the Prince Regent, with a number of distinguished ambassadors, and therefore I should be unable to accept the invitation." So much, sir, for this.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Dwight and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the PRESIDENT resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the qualifications to hold office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had requested their chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and asked leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL—I move that the Convention do now take a recess until 7½ o'clock.

Mr. SILVESTER—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Silvester, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1867.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock A. M.

Prayer was offered by Rev. W. S. SMART.

The Journal of yesterday was read by the SECRETARY and approved.

Mr. BECKWITH presented the petition of Willis Mould, N. C. Boynton, and eighty-six others, citizens of Keeseville and vicinity, asking that the Legislature, Boards of Supervisors, and other municipal corporations, be prohibited from appropriating money to schools, colleges, churches, hospitals, etc., of a purely sectarian character.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a communication from George Curtis, of Utica, in relation to defects in the present assessment laws.

Which was referred to the Committee on Finances of the State.

Mr. GROSS presented four memorials signed by several hundred citizens of the city of New York, asking for a provision in the Constitution regulating the traffic in fermented liquors and wines, and the passage of general and uniform laws for the maintenance of public order, decency and morality throughout the State, as the sole objects lying within the province and jurisdiction of the Legislature of a free and enlightened commonwealth capable of self-government.

Which were referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

The PRESIDENT presented several memorials signed by citizens of the State of New York, asking for the submission of a separate clause prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

Which were referred to the Committee on Adulterated Liquors.

Mr. SEAVER from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

Your standing Committee on Printing would respectfully report that they have made inquiry into the cause of the non-reception by the Convention of the number of printed documents to which it is entitled by the Rules, and find that the same have been printed, and after supplying the requisite number thereof for the files of this Convention, and for the Governor, and several heads of the State Executive Departments, and after retaining the necessary number for binding under the rules, and for the exchanges ordered by this Convention, there have remained for the use of the Convention two hundred and fifty-six copies of the usual number of each document, report, and of the Journal, which have been retained by the printer, awaiting the order of this Convention as to their disposal.

These documents, reports and Journals will this day be delivered to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

J. J. SEAVER, Chairman.

Which report was laid on the table

Mr. SCHOONMAKER offered the following resolution; and asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Resolved, That the Canal Appraisers be requested to report to this Convention a list of the claims against the State still undecided, and pending before them for adjudication, specifying the general nature of the claim, and the amount as demanded by the claimant, and particularly designating such as are pending by virtue of a special statute and giving a reference to the statute.

There being no objection, the question was put on the resolution of Mr. Schoonmaker, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. GOULD—On the 28th of June last, I presented a paper to this Convention, on the unanimity of jurors, from Prof. Lieber, and I then moved that it be printed. The motion to print does not appear upon the Journal, and when it was referred to the Committee on Printing they supposed it was sent to them by mistake. It is now in the hands of the Committee on the Preamble and Bill of Rights. There are many references sir, in that paper too out of the way, and rather uncommon sources of information, and it seems to me it is very desirable that it should be spread upon our printed Journal. I therefore move that that paper be printed.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Gould, and it was declared carried.

The communication is in words the following:

NEW YORK, 26th JUNE, 1867.

DEAR SIR: Observing in the papers that you have proposed in the Convention to abolish the unanimity of jurors as a requisite for a verdict in civil cases, I beg leave to address to you a few remarks on a subject which has occupied my mind for many years, and which I consider of vital importance to our whole administration of justice. Long ago I gave (in my CIVIL LIBERTY AND SELF GOVERNMENT) some of the reasons which induced me to disagree with those jurists and statesmen who consider unanimity a necessary and even a sacred element of our honored jury trial. Farther observation and study have not only confirmed me in my opinion, but have greatly strengthened my conviction that the unanimity principle ought to be given up, if the jury trial is to remain in harmony with the altered circumstances which result from the progress and general change of things.

The present Constitution of our State permits litigants to waive the jury, in civil cases, if they freely agree to do so. This would indicate that the adoption of verdicts by a majority of the jurors, in civil cases, would not meet with insuperable difficulty; but it seems to me even more important, and more consonant with some reasoning to abandon the unanimity principle in penal cases.

At the beginning of my "reflections," a copy of which has been laid before each member of the Convention, I stated the different causes of the failure of justice, in the present time. I ought to have added the non-agreement of jurors. It would be a useful piece of information, and an important addition to the statistics of the times, if the Convention would ascertain, through our able State statistician, the percentage of failures of trials resulting from the non-agreement of jurors, in civil, in criminal, and especially in capital cases. This failure of agreement has begun to show itself in England likewise, since the coarse means of forcing the jury to agree, by hunger, cold and darkness has been given up.

In Scotland no unanimity of the jury is required in penal trials; nor in France, Italy, Germany, nor in any country whatever, except in England and the United States; and in the English law, it has come to be gradually established in the course of legal changes, and by no means according to a principle, clearly established from the beginning. The unanimity principle has led to strange results. Not only were formerly jurors forced by physical means to agree, in a moral and intellectual point of view, but in old times it happened that a verdict was taken from eleven jurors, if they agreed, and "the refractory juror" was committed to prison! (Guide to English Juries, 1882. I take the quotation from Forsyth, History of Trial by Jury, 1852.)

Under Henry II it was established that twelve jurors should agree in order to determine a question, but the "afforcement" of the jury meant that as long as twelve jurors did not agree, others were added to the panel until twelve out of this number, no matter how large, should agree one way or the other. This even changed occasionally. Under Edward III it was "decided" that the verdict of less than twelve was a nullity. At present a verdict from less than twelve is sometimes taken by consent of both parties. At first the jurors were the judges themselves, but in the course of time, the jury, as judges of the fact, separated from the bench as judge of the law, in the gradual development of an accusatorial trial as contradistinguished to the inquisitorial trial. The English trial by jury is one of the great acquisitions in the development of our race, but everything belonging to it as it exists at present, is not perfect; nor does the trial by jury form the only exception of the rule that all institutions needs must change or be modified in the course of time, if they are intended to last and outlive centuries.

The French rule, and I believe the Italian also, is, in penal as well as civil cases, that if seven jurors are against five, the judge or judges retire, and if the bench decides with the five, against the seven, the verdict is on the side of the five. If eight jurors agree against four it is a verdict, in capital as well as in criminal cases. There is no civil jury in France. This seems to me artificial, and not in harmony with our conception of the judge, who stands between the parties, especially so when the State, the crown or the people is one of the two parties; nor in harmony with the important idea (although we Americans have given it up in many cases) that the judges of the fact and those of the law must be distinctly separated.

On the other hand, what is unanimity worth, when it is enforced; or when the jury is "out" any length of time; which proves that the formal unanimity, the outward agreement is a merely accommodative unanimity, if I may make a word. Such a verdict is not an intrinsically truthful one; the unanimity is a real "afforcement" or artificial. Again, the unanimity principle puts it in the power of any refractory juror, possibly sympathizing more with crime than with society and right, to defeat the ends of justice by "holding out." Every one remembers cases of the plainest, and of well-proved atrocity going unpunished, because of one or two jurors resisting the others, either from positively wicked motives, or some mawkish reasons, which ought to have prevented them from going into the jury box altogether.

I ask them, why not adopt this rule: Each jury shall consist of twelve jurors—the agreement of two-thirds of whom shall be sufficient for a verdict, in all cases, both civil and penal, except in capital cases, when three-fourths must agree to make a verdict valid. But the foreman, in rendering the verdict, shall state how many jurors have agreed.

I have never heard or seen in print any objection to the passage above alluded to, in which I have suggested the abandoning of unanimity, than this, that people, the criminal included, would not be satisfied with a verdict, if they knew that some jurors did not agree. As to the criminal, let us leave him alone. I can assure all persons who have investigated this subject less than I have, that there are very few convicts satisfied with their verdict. The worst ones will acknowledge that they have committed crimes indeed, but never the one for which they are sentenced, or will insist upon the falsehood of a great deal of the testimony on which they are convicted.

The objection to the non-unanimity is not founded upon any psychologic ground. How much stronger is not the fact that all of us have to abide by the decision of the majority in the most delicate cases, when supreme courts decide constitutional questions, and we do not only know that there has been no unanimity in the court, but we actually receive the opinions of the minority, and their whole arguments, which always seem the better ones to many, sometimes to a large majority of the people. Ought we to abolish, then, the publication of the fact that a majority of the judges only, and not the totality of them, agreed with the decision? By no means. Daniel Webster once said in my presence that the study of the "Protests" in the house of Lords (having been published in a separate volume) was to him the most instructive reading on constitutional law and history. May we not say something similar concerning many opinions of the minority of our supreme bench?

In legislation, in politics in general, except, indeed, in diplomacy, the unanimity principle savors of barbarism, or indicates, at least, a want of development. The United States of the Netherlands would pass no law of importance, except by the unanimous consent of the States General. A single voice in the Ancient Polish Diet could veto a measure. Does not, perhaps, something of this sort apply to our jury unanimity.

Whether it be so or not, I, for one, am convinced that we ought to adopt the other rule in order to give to our verdicts the character of perfect truthfulness, and to prevent the frequent failures of finding a verdict at all.

I am, with great regard, dear sir,

Your obedient servant,

FRANCIS LIEBER.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the Convention adjourn to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 7 o'clock P. M.

The question was put on the resolution of Mr. Sherman, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. FULLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be referred to the committee on Corporations other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance, to inquire into the propriety of inserting a provision in the Constitution, requiring the adoption by the railroads of this State, of a pro rata tariff for carrying freights thereon, subject to regulation by the Legislature or Canal Board.

Which was referred to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal.

Mr. BELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That pending the discussion of the report of the Committee on Suffrage, etc., in the Committee of the Whole, the Convention will hold evening sessions, commencing at 7½ o'clock.

Mr. ALVORD—I trust that the resolution of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] will not prevail.

The resolution giving rise to debate, was laid on the table.

The Convention then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, in the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to hold Office, Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be upon the substitute offered by Mr. Murphy, for the substitute offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight, for the amendment of Mr. Folger, which had, by Mr. Folger, been accepted.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I did not intend to address the committee at this stage of the discussion, and would not were it not been that during the course of the debate yesterday, some remarks were made in regard to the opinions of my friend and colleague Dr. Lieber. Having, however, determined to say something in regard to those remarks, I have concluded that it would be a proper time for me to take up the whole subject under discussion and to give my views upon the present pending amendment, as well as upon the other amendments which have been offered to the original proposition of the committee on the right of suffrage. Now, sir, in order that we may come to a clear understanding of this vexed question of the right of suffrage, it seems to me it would be well to establish, if possible, certain general principles, and in the establishment of those principles to deduce, if we can, the conclusions which ought to be applied to the particular cases that we have before us. And in order to reach those general conclusions, it will be necessary, it seems to me, to go to some of those points which gentlemen have already handled during the course of this discussion, and to speak of the origin of government and society, and of the right which society has, if it has such a right, to impose limitations on the right of suffrage. Now, sir, I am one of those who believe that man is of necessity a social being, that he cannot live and develop himself—live in any proper way—outside of society, or, in other words, that society is established by the will of God. I do not feel in this way at all the pressure of some of those instances which have been cited, in which men have met together and framed a social compact, such as our pilgrim fathers, or the instance which has been cited of the few men going out into the interior of the country and associating together; because in all those cases, those individuals were in society. The pilgrim fathers were still members of the great English society which they had left, and it was one of their earliest provisions to claim the rights of English freemen. And so, sir, if men go out into this western region of which we are told, are they not there under the ægis of the great society of the United States, and if they are attacked by Indians or other persons who are outlaws to those laws of the United States, do they not at once claim protection? They are members of society still, sir, and therefore I do not feel the pressure of those cases at all. And sir, I hold that men outside of society, though they may have rights, if you please to call them so, have no remedy, and what is a right without a remedy? What would be all our absolute rights as we call them, outside of society? Take the right of personal security. How does a man protect himself outside of society? What would be the right of reputation, that most priceless right, outside of society? How could a man defend himself when attacked? So, sir, I believe that for the necessary development of man, society is essential, and therefore it is an essential institution, and consequently when once established, it has a right to perpetuate its existence; to perpetuate and develop itself; to establish for the purpose of development, large libraries, educational institutions, and other means for carrying men forward in the progress of civilization. This same right which society has to perpetuate itself, to my mind limits and controls the right which we have before us in discussion at this time. Here we are, living under a representative government, one of the last and best devices of human thought to govern men. Still, it is a device of man and not a gift of nature. With this government we seek to perpetuate and carry on society, and we find in looking around society, a mass of persons who are to be governed, and who also seek to participate in the government. Now, sir, I desire to ascertain a principle by which we shall discover who of those persons shall participate in the government and who shall be excluded from it. What is that principle? The same one which I have already indicated, that, if the participation of these men will tend to perpetuate and uphold and carry forward society, then they ought to participate in it; but, on the other hand, if their participation will tend to subvert, and destroy, and overthrow society, then they ought not to participate in it, and I cannot find any other principle on which to rest the right of suffrage. Everything else is arbitrary, and everything else is without rule. This is with rule, and can properly be applied. If we proceed still further, in the elucidation of this subject, we will find there are two classes of persons who, on this theory, can be excluded. The first class is those who have personal incapacities, and the second class those who, having no personal incapacities, would by their action in a particular case tend to arrest the progress of the government, or perhaps to subvert it. In regard to that second class, I do not intend to speak. I will simply allude to them. They are such men as the Jacobites of England, for example, to whom it was proper to submit the oath of allegiance in order to determine whether they would or would not subvert the government. There was no allegation of incapacity in such cases, but simply that having the capacity they would not properly use it, so I shall dismiss these for the present from my consideration. I now come to the other class, which bears upon our present discussion. Who are the persons who from incapacity ought to be excluded from the exercise of the right of suffrage? As far as I can ascertain, they may be classified into five classes. That is, in other words, men ought to have five requisites or qualifications to enable them to participate in the elective franchise. What are they? First, intelligence—sufficient intelligence to comprehend the structure of the government and properly to vote. Second, independence. Third, integrity. Fourth, interest. Fifth, incorporation into the mass of society. Sir, I will elucidate those particular cases, and I think that I can show that those are proper pre-requisites. First, in respect to intelligence, we have a class here that we exclude for that reason. Infants, persons not able to comprehend the government, 'idiots,' if you please, lunatics and persons of such a low degree of intelligence that they cannot properly exercise the right of franchise. Second, dependence. Whom can we exclude on that ground? Persons who are so dependent on others that they cannot exercise this right properly. Such persons, if you please, as paupers, although I will say nothing in regard to them at this stage of the discussion, but merely suppose they belong to that class. Third, integrity. Whom do we exclude on that ground? Men who have committed crimes, and who have been convicted of them. Fourth, interest. Whom do we exclude on that ground? Men for example, who have a wager on the result of election, and who therefore may be supposed to be more interested in the wager than they are in the result of the election. Fifth, incorporation into the mass of society. Whom do we exclude on that ground? Men who have not yet been long enough with us to become one with us. They are in the society but not of it. Such persons as aliens and others—citizens of others States, if you please, but not yet long enough in the government to participate properly in the franchise. Sir, if there are any other classes than these, I would like to know it. If any man can give a principle for excluding on the ground of individual incapacity, for any other reason except want of intelligence, want of independence, want of integrity, want of interest, and the failure to be incorporated in the mass of society, I would like to know it. Sir, it seems to me that we may divide all the inhabitants of the country or of the State into two great classes—active and passive. The active inhabitants are those who have these qualifications, who have the suffrage, and who hold offices. The passive are those who have them not. So that the elective franchise must of necessity be exercised by a portion of the population. There never was a case in which the suffrage was universal, and there never can be because the application of these rules will exclude a certain class of persons from the exercise of the franchise. If we attempt to act on any other principle, if we attempt to exclude men because they are not of the same height with ourselves, because they are not dressed as we are, because they do not have the same origin, or because they do not have the same color—then, sir, instead of settling this doctrine of franchise on principle, we settle it on a more arbitrary rule; and society never will permit in the long run, any such question, to be settled on an arbitrary rule. It will insist that we shall come around to a principle in time, if we are not already there, and that, sir, explains the convulsions and excitements in society on such questions, because instead of seeking to settle them upon principle, we seek to settle them by an arbitrary rule. Now sir, having laid down in a brief way these general principles which seem to me to be impregnable, but which might be much more fully developed than I have attempted to do, we may apply them to the particular case, and distinct question which we have now before us, that of the right of the colored man to vote. Let us apply these five rules to his case. Let us take them up in the reverse order of that in which I have given them. Can we say that the colored man is not incorporated in the mass of society? Evidently not, for he is born on the soil. He has been here as we have been. He has all the elements of citizenship, for by the common law, birth gives a man his citizenship; he is therefore incorporated into the mass of our society. Is there any want of interest on his part so that we may say, as a class, these men feel no interest in the elective franchise? Plainly not. That cannot be urged. Is there any want of integrity as a class? Clearly not. They have not been convicted as a class of any crime. Is there any want of independence? Clearly not. They are not in the almshouse. They support themselves. What then is the only ground in this analysis, if my analysis be a correct one, on which we can exclude them? On none other but the want of intelligence. Now, sir, let us meet this question, if we are to meet it at all, on that broad ground; and I will say that I much prefer the last part of the speech of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], where he attempts to attack the ability of the negro to vote because he is of an inferior order of beings, rather than the first part where he wishes that we would present to the people of this State the question whether they would not exclude him on the ground of not having two hundred and fifty dollars' worth of real estate. In respect to intelligence, he says he believes himself, that is no ground of exclusion, though he wants us to ask the people to say whether it is or not such a ground. On that point it seems to me, that when the people sent us here to establish a constitution for them, they did not wish us to submit it on a ground that we ourselves think is radically bad. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], says this ground is radically bad and yet he wants us to submit it to the people. Shall we submit everything that we think is radically bad to the people, simply because the people have once passed upon it in a given direction? If so, then instead of being representatives here, we are mere servants, mere slaves, without exercising our own judgment in any respect. Our own judgment dictates one thing, as he admits, and yet he wants to have another thing, contrary to our judgment, submitted. Now, sir, I wish to say a single word in respect to the property clause in the Constitution of this State. In the first place, property, as we all concede, is no ground of exclusion from the elective franchise. And why is it not? Because it does not come within one of these five principles, which have been stated. It is no test of intelligence or independence, or integrity, or interest and therefore is an arbitrary thing entirely, coming within no general principle.

Mr. HALE — If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask, under which of the five principles of exclusion would the gentleman be justified in excluding women from the right to vote.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT — I would say with regard to that, I have already made a general division into two great classes, one of which includes persons who may be excluded for personal incapacity, and the other is where the admission of the persons to vote would tend to subvert the constitution of society or arrest its progress. If this exclusion, the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] refers to, is to be placed anywhere, it is to be placed under that class, and not under one of these five principles. Admitting the capacity, it is to be placed upon the ground, that if they were permitted to vote the tendency of it might be to prevent the development of society. Now, sir, recurring to the thread of my argument, in respect to the qualification of property, I wish to say still further that, even supposing we ought to make property a test in any case of the elective franchise, the particular form in which it exists in the New York Constitution is the worst possible form in which it could be presented, because it requires the possession of a free-hold estate of land. So that a negro may own fifty thousand dollars' worth of personal property and have no right to vote; but if he has $250 worth of land then he has the right. And more than that, sir, it not only requires an ownership of land, but a freehold interest in the land. So that, if a negro had a lease for ninety-nine years, he could not vote. He might have the most valuable piece of land in the city of New York under a lease for ninety-nine years, yet he cannot vote unless he has a life interest in it. Thus we can see what an arbitrary distinction this is, which in effect says that a man has all the virtues who owns a tenement house for life, but who has none of them, if he holds a lease of it for ninety-nine years. The principle of the amendment is simply this, that it includes the freehold of the estate, and every lawyer who hears me will recognize that that means not only the fee of the land, but a life estate, and excludes every lease holding interest, no matter how long it may be. If we are to insult the intelligence of the people of New York by submitting to them this proposition, then I say, let us make it a little more perfect than the one we have now before us. When I was in the law school of Yale College, it was the practice and a part of the law of the State of Connecticut to require, in certain contingencies, that a man should have a freehold estate of land to the value of seven dollars a year in order to vote. The students who came to that college from various parts of the country had no land there, of course. What practice was adopted in order to enable them to vote? A well-known politician, as I have heard, though I do not vouch for its exact truth, had a large building in the city containing a number of rooms, and it was his practice on the morning of election day to convey to those students, who sympathized with him politically, one by one, a room in this building. After the election, and when the night came, these rooms were deeded back, and so on in succession the rooms went round to the various generations of students. When the morning of election came, and the deed was given, then all the civic virtues passed to the student; he was a man of integrity and of honor, and had all the qualities necessary for the exercise of the franchise; but in the afternoon, when the deed was given back, all these virtues went away. I suppose, sir, it passed under that clause of the deed which conveys "all the rights and hereditaments thereunto belonging." That is my view, sir, of this question of the right of property. Now sir, I have come to the last part of my argument, in which I wish to pay my respects to the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. I refer to what he said in respect to my friend and colleague, Dr. Lieber, on the broad ground that the negro is a man utterly unfit to vote because he is of an inferior organization, and in order to do him no injustice, I will read his remarks as I find them reported in the morning paper. After quoting what he did from Dr. Lieber's book, he goes on to say:

"There, sir, is a writer of distinction, and who is indorsed politically, who maintains very distinctly the inferiority of the negro race in capacity, the ground upon which many who oppose negro suffrage base their opposition to granting to the negro the right to vote."

There, sir, is the distinct assertion of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], that Dr. Lieber, in these pages from which he quotes, had asserted the inferiority of the negro to such an extent that he ought not to have the elective franchise. I have, sir, in my hand the book from which he quoted at the time, and I find that he read about eight, ten or twelve lines on the first part of the page, but did not read the last part of the paragraph which bears distinctly upon the subject; and in order to make Dr. Lieber's opinion perfectly clear, I shall be obliged to read the whole of the passage. I will say before reading it, that what Dr. Lieber said was this, that there were certain races, such as the Pre-Inca races in South America, and the Hottentots, and Bushmen, that were inferior races, but he did not say that of the negro, but distinctly said the opposite, which the gentleman did not mention. I will now proceed to read the whole passage.

"Yet though the distinction between man and brute has thus been distinctly drawn, comparative anatomy and physiology are establishing daily more clearly the fact, that all those beings comprehended under the vast term of human species, are not only morally or individually distinguished from each other, but in a very marked way physiologically, and as to their capacities by whole races, forming a gradual scale of superiority. The most peculiar skulls of the so-called Pre-Inca race, found in South America, are so entirely different from ours, that they alone show an essential difference of that race from ours. The Caffres, the Boushomanras, (Bushman), the Hottentots, and the poor Papous, for instance, differ so materially in their anatomy and physiologic organisation, from the races which comparative anatomy as well as the history of civilisation teaches us, by conclusive facts, to consider as superior, that we should abandon all truth, were we to deny the difference. There is probably no reflecting man, who was not painfully startled when he became first acquainted with these nevertheless imperative truths. We love to treat, in our theories and meditations, all men as absolutely equal; but truth is truth, however it may militate with beloved, nay, generous theories; and God is the God of truth."

That is where the gentleman closed his quotation. I will proceed to read you the rest of the passage.

"He must have had his all wise ends in creating these different races, as he must have had his ends in creating those many tribes and races, who without light, without expression of thought, or cultivation, have increased and vanished, or who continue to people so many parts of the globe, yet do no more than people them; tribes which live without history, that is, without progressive change, interesting to the naturalist, but of no account in the history of mankind. Nor is it for us here to speculate how far these tribes, now so low and brutish, may be susceptible of organic improvement, which, it cannot be denied, has taken place with some races. The negro of Virginia is superior, as to the formation of his head, to the negro of the more southern states, because he descends from earlier imported generations. The negro of the most southern of the United States again, has much more expression of intelligence than the newly imported negro in the West Indies. So has civilization improved the formation of the head in the Celtic race."

There sir, you will perceive distinctly what Dr. Lieber says, that such races as the Pre-Incas, the Caffres, the Bushmen, the Poor Papous, never improve, but the negro does improve, and he puts him upon the same plane with the Celtic race. Why the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] read the first part of this page, and did not read the last, I cannot say. I presume him to be an honorable gentleman, as I have heard that he is, and therefore, I suppose that he had some good reason for it—that he overlooked it. I blame him for his precipitancy, though I do not charge him with unfairness. Philosophers, sir, at the present day, take no such position as that taken by the gentleman from Kings. Have we not seen within a day or two in the newspapers a denial from Prof. Agassiz of the statement that he advanced such a doctrine—and that it was a villainous calumny? And my friend, Judge Daly, a member of this Convention, has informed me that at an interview he had with Humboldt, than whom no authority stands higher, he said to him there was no distinction either anatomically or physiologically between the negro race and our own.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question. Does he understand that Prof. Agassiz denies having said at Charleston that the races were not equal.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I understand so, sir, though it was a mere newspaper report; therefore I will not pledge myself for its truth.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND—I am very glad to hear he has got to denying it now; it is much more creditable to him to deny it than to be making such remarks.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT — As I believe I have fully vindicated Dr. Lieber from this charge, I would not go a single step further were it not that he has been brought before this Convention, and has submitted certain papers to us for our examination; so in addition I will say that that gentleman [Dr. Lieber] has been known for years as a most ardent and persistent anti-slavery man; and that he lost the presidency of the college of South Carolina, where he was shortly before the rebellion, because he was not supposed to be sound upon that question. He was a professor there and had every reason, as far as the surroundings were concerned, to be quiet, if nothing more, but in his books he had laid down some principles which led people to suppose he was not sound. That I have, sir, from reliable authority. During the whole progress of this rebellion there has been no man who has stood more firm on the side of those who believe that the negro is ultimately to be elevated. Having disposed of this charge, and having, as far as I can, disposed of the anatomical and physiological argument, by citations, from the authority of such men as Humboldt and the like, I have only to say one word further in respect to the general question of the intelligence of the negro. I, too, sir, in past times have had my prejudices on this subject. When this subject was last submitted to the people of this State, I voted that the negro should not vote. I, sir, in those days, was busy looking at the negro's heels to see if he had brains [laughter]. But, sir, a certain incident occurred in the course of my life which gave my thoughts another turn. I stood, two or three years ago, on the corner of Fourteenth street, by Union Square, in the city of New York, having walked up the street simply for a stroll. I came into a crowd and wondered what the assembling of the crowd could mean. Instinctively drawing back, as I do from crowds, I looked about me and I saw, a few rods further on, a body of men coming from the other side of the square, and marching down the street; as I looked a little closer, I saw a half-dozen men whom I well knew—such men as John Jay, Charles P. Kirkland and others of that stamp. Before them was a platoon of men to clear a way for the procession to march forward. I wondered what that could mean. I saw that the gentlemen named stood erect with a manly port and bearing, as though they were filled with some great thought. As I looked a little further on, I saw, coming behind them, men clad in the United States uniform, standing erect with a manly port also, and also looking as though they had some great thought to inspire them. I looked a little downwards, and as I raised my eyes and looked upwards, I saw that they were soldiers with black faces—the first of this class I had ever seen, and the first of the class, I believe, who marched down the streets of New York to go to the war. Then I cast my eyes around me, and looked further, and I saw standing on the sidewalk, the wives and children of these men, and I saw that they had the same feelings that the wives and children of other soldiers had when their husbands and fathers went to the war, of whom I had seen many; and I saw that while the wives and children of those colored soldiers felt the deepest sympathy, yet they thought the time had come when their race should show that they were men, and thus should be enfranchised. And from that hour, sir, I have felt that the negro was a man. The hammer of conviction fell on the hard rock of prejudice, and there gushed forth from my heart a stream of sympathy, and even of affection. I am not ashamed to say that from that hour, I had an affection for the man who, when everything else was dark and gloomy, would go forth to protect me and my wife and children, and my friends and society, and above all, his country, knowing or feeling, as he did, that if there was suffering to be endured, he must endure it, that if any cruelty was to be practiced it was to be practiced upon him, for that then the cry of "no quarter" for the negro soldier was re-echoing through the South. And men who have done that for me I believe, sir, to be men. I have no doubt about it. I have no doubt of the men that I saw with such a port and bearing as those men had. There was no stolid look about them. And now I am convinced that the negro has intelligence, and that he has cultivable power within him. And if he has not intelligence enough now, we can educate him, and make him what he ought to be; hence I think that he complies with my requisition as to the qualities a man should have of intelligence, independence, patriotism and an appreciation of the duties he owes to the State and to society. There are particular instances among them where they are unfit to vote, and so there are among other classes. We cannot establish a class without having some such cases. We may establish a class above the age of twenty-one, and yet there are some who could vote intelligently under the age of twenty-one. But we must have a general rule, though it may bear hard in particular cases. Therefore, in this case, it is no argument to say that some of these men are unfit to vote, when we find that as a class they have the qualities to fit them to be enfranchised. I shall therefore dismiss that branch of the subject without further remark. I wish now to say a few words in regard to the amendment reported by the committee. I regret that I must ask for so much time, in order to fully bring out my views, but I do not expect again to trespass upon the attention of the Convention upon this point. The clause reported by the committee provides that idiots, lunatics, persons under guardianship and paupers, shall not be permitted to exercise the elective franchise. I have thought that all these persons come within the rule I have laid down. Idiots and lunatics plainly do. In fact I have heard no one say that an idiot or lunatic ought to vote, but only that it was very difficult to ascertain at the polls, whether a man was an idiot or a lunatic, or not. I think there has been some little confusion in regard to the three classes of persons which are characterized in our Revised Statutes, who are called idiots, lunatics and persons of unsound mind. The third class—persons of unsound mind—are not known to the common law. There are only two classes, so far as I know—idiots and lunatics—there referred to. Now, in order to determine who is an idiot, the rule is very simple. A man who cannot tell his age, and do other simple acts of that kind, is known as an idiot at common law. A lunatic is a person who has departed from the natural course, and shows natural evidence of it—outward evidence—in what is called frenzy. Here we have ocular evidence as to who a lunatic is. Then there is a large class of persons who have lost their faculties by age—whose memory is impaired and who have become unfit for the management of their affairs, who would come under the other class—persons of unsound mind; so that there is practically no difficulty in telling who a lunatic or who an idiot is, because we have the outward signs. Whatever difficulty there is, applies equally in determining who is a minor or who is a male. We cannot establish any system of voting without allowing the inspectors to exercise some judgment. There is a famous case found in the law books, of a person who appeared in the habiliments of a man, but who was supposed to be a woman—the Chevalier D'Eon—and many wagers were laid in regard to his sex, in England, so much so, that it led ultimately, among other things, to the abolition of the whole law of wagers. In the case of young men it is often impossible to tell whether they are twenty-one or not, so that the inspectors must exercise a judgment. Therefore, there is no objection where the case is determined by ocular inspection, to introduce these classes into the law. If the gentleman will consult one of the early writers, Blackstone, he will find there has been from an early period of the law, a kind of trial called the trial by inspection. Though we had trial by jury, judges were to determine by ocular inspection whether a person was or was not what was alleged. This idea is only an extension of the principle of trial, by inspection, to a case of this kind. A few words in reference to persons under guardianship. I am of the opinion that it is a proper mode of characterizing persons who have been declared to be of unsound mind—that guardianship is a fit and proper word for that purpose. Mr. Willard, in his Equity Jurisprudence (and he is understood to have been skillful in this subject of lunacy), uses this word “guardianship” a number of times, in reference to persons who had a committee appointed over them. He speaks of a lunatic as a person under guardianship. The same word is used in several States of the Union, and I, therefore, believe that it is correctly used here. In regard to the class of paupers, I should not go as far as the committee in excluding them. I think no pauper should be excluded unless he has been in the public almshouse, for the reason that the law holds distinctly, that persons who are supported thus—who receive even temporary relief, are included under that name. While I think the committee is strictly accurate, I have my doubts whether in these special cases of indigence, not familiar to the people, and about which there may be some discussion, and in respect to which some odium may be cast by the report of the committee if it should be adopted there should be any exclusion. Consequently, while I judge the committee to be right, I would rather wish they would waive that branch of their report, so that we may have a simple, plain question, whether any male person, of the proper age and other usual qualifications, may be allowed to vote.

Mr. FRANCIS.—Mr. Chairman, the question before us, if I rightly understand it, is simply this: Shall a separate proposition be submitted to the people for their decision at the ensuing election as to whether a property qualification of $250 shall be imposed upon the colored citizens of this State as a condition of their exercise of the right of suffrage? Stripped of all verbiage and extraneous accompaniments, this is the sum and substance of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. Yet he tells us that he is opposed to a property qualification for either white or black voters, still arguing, however, in favor of submitting a proposition that embraces the principle. Why? Because, he tells us, it is sanctioned by precedent. Almost any wrong, all wrongs in fact, connected with human government, may be sustained if precedent affords a good reason for their perpetuation. Slavery itself, with the claim of divine right to justify it, might to this day have reposed in security, and been strengthened to an overpowering institution, even in the great Empire State, if precedent had been the guide of State action with reference to it. The property qualification for white voters would, on the same ground, have been upheld. Adhere to precedent, and progress is impossible. Every forward movement in government, in civilization, in all that elevates mankind and improves the world, is a divergence from precedent—a breaking away from the wrongs and abuses of the past, and the assertion of a higher power of manhood. So that, in putting forth the proposition to the people for the retention or rejection of the property qualification, on the assumption that this course is justified, if not sanctified by precedent, the gentleman pays deference to a repudiated principle of the past—a heresy which can never more obtain ascendancy among a free people—rather than recognizing the freedom of the present, or the higher hopes of the future. I say, let no precedent stand in the way of our doing right, as God gives us light to see the right. Then, again, consider for a moment the question of a separate submission as proposed: My friend from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], in language apt as it was strong, yesterday, pronounced the policy “cowardly.” And when my friend from Schenectady [Mr. Landon], in a spirit of earnestness that indicated the strength of his convictions, expressed the fear that, unless separate submission was adopted, our whole work here might possibly be rejected by the people, I felt that the policy was not too harshly characterized by the declaration that it was “cowardly.” Why should there be separate submission of this question any more than others that are to be presented to the people in the amended Constitution? There will be wide differences of opinion, no doubt, upon proposed changes in our judicial system, our municipal organizations, our canal policy, our financial plan, our recommendations as to the powers and duties of the Legislature, and upon other subjects deeply affecting the interests of the State.

Why not have these each submitted separately to the people? Why single out the one question of suffrage, or rather property qualification for suffrage as affecting colored citizens, and say this alone shall stand by itself—all other questions shall be embodied as a unit? But I am answered, "Ah, but upon this subject of suffrage there is to be a party contest—the passions of partizanship are to be drawn out, and that cannot be said of the other questions." And is this true? Why, only yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], with certainly as good a democratic record as they make them now-a-days—a representative Democrat, young, fresh, vigorous and influential—avowed here in his place, openly and boldly that he was now, and always had been, in favor of extending the elective franchise to the colored man upon the same terms that it is enjoyed by white people, and his vote in the legislature, at its late session, shows that he means what he says. Other gentlemen of the same party, not here, perhaps, but elsewhere, I know avow themselves in favor of manhood suffrage. Why, the Democratic mayor of my city—the city of Troy—a gentleman who has a keen appreciation of justice and the obligations of gratitude, it is understood, received a large proportion of the votes of colored electors at our charter election last spring, and I feel confident that the Constitution will all the more strongly be commended to his support if it embodies the principle of suffrage equality. Then, it may be asked, why not submit it by itself, and let democrats and republicans vote upon it as they choose? The question may be answered by asking another. Why not submit the other questions by themselves as well? We want no piecemeal policy in the matter; we are to have a Constitution, not in separate patches, but as a whole, and as a whole it should stand or fall, precedents of the dead past to the contrary notwithstanding. Besides, sir, I am quite clear in my convictions, that there will be less of party feeling, far more harmony of public sentiment in connection with our work here, if we present for popular acceptance the form of a Constitution complete and as one question, rather than by the proposed division. And this, for the reason that the people will judge it one and complete upon its merits, and free from the antagonisms and political strife and prejudice which would inevitably attend a separate submission. In so far as the suffrage question, separately submitted, would receive special attention from the people—and that it would in that form provoke an active, and in some quarters, a bitter contest, I have no doubt—to that degree would the public mind be diverted from the consideration of the other important questions embodied as one in the proposed Constitution. "One thing at a time" is good doctrine in all the affairs of life, and we shall, in my opinion, best discharge our duty, and best serve our constituents, by presenting to them the results of our labors here in one form and that of a complete Constitution, without any fragmentary work about it. I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to discuss here at any considerable length the merits of the question of the extension of suffrage to colored citizens. It does seem to me that, in this noon-day of the nineteenth century, there should really be no issue raised on the subject. The black men are our fellow-citizens, possessed of the qualities of manhood, susceptible of improvement, capable of progress, marked by all the attributes that characterize human beings, subject to the same laws of God and man, and advancing with us to the same inevitable destiny of mortality. In so far as they have opportunities we know that they advance in knowledge, and as they are schooled in virtue or vice, so they rise or fall in the scale of manhood. Pursued by cruel prejudice, with the elements of manhood crushed out of them almost in infancy by the intolerant spirit of caste, it is surprising that they should have, in spite of all, so much of intelligence and virtue as they manifest—so much of the good sense that distinguishes our civilization—so much of the sterling patriotism that has stamped them with the honors of loyalty, so many representative men, eminent for their intellectual greatness and oratorical powers, of whom Garnet and Douglass are illustrious examples. Shall we continue the policy of cruel injustice to this people by denying them equality of political rights, and for no better reasons than those of precedent, and the opinions of some statesmen of a past, and, I may add, a less enlightened age? No, sir, the barbarism of the past must give way before the advancing power of liberty and civilization. The logic of the war, the claims of manhood, the decree of the Almighty, who has written our destiny in the very light of heaven, which is alike free to all his children—all proclaim the brotherhood of man, and assert the doctrine of impartial freedom. God directs; we must obey!

Mr. OPDYKE—While I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the report of the committee generally, I wish to say a few words on the subject of conferring the right to vote upon the colored man. I think much misapprehension exists as to the question at issue. It is not a question whether we shall confer the right of suffrage on colored men. That question, sir, has already been decided. They now exercise that right. The Constitution of the State has guaranteed it to them. The only question before us, is whether the property qualification which the present Constitution requires shall be continued. That is the whole question, and it does seem to me, that in a body of intelligent men, that question should receive but one answer, and that in the negative. The opinion that property confers on man a higher capacity to exercise the elective franchise exists in Great Britain still; but the fallacy has long since been exploded here. We have found that there is no necessary connection between the possession of property and political knowledge. Very often, sir, it is found that they do not co-exist in the same individual. That qualification became odious; we expunged it from the Constitution so far as relates to the white man. Why not do it now as relates to the black man? I would like to ask what characteristics the black man possesses that justifies the requirement from him of this qualification, when it is not required from the white man? Is there, sir, some hidden virtue in property when in the hands of the black man that it does not possess when in the hands of the white man? If so, has that virtue the power of going up from itself into the moral and mental nature of the black man? It would be absurd to suppose that these questions could, either of them be answered in the affirmative; and yet, unless they can both be thus answered, the requirement is as ungrounded in reason as it is invidious in character. I cannot conceive, sir, how a great party can go before the people and advocate its continuance. I cannot even conceive how an individual elector, in view of the odium which now attaches to that requirement, can give it his vote. Sir, if I were more strongly opposed to negro suffrage than the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] it would not have the slightest influence on my action on this question; and I believe that the people of this State, when they come to understand this question in its naked simplicity, as they assuredly will, before they are called upon to vote for the Constitution that we shall present, will, with a degree of emphasis and unanimity that will greatly surprise us, declare that this partial and invidious distinction shall be expunged from the Constitution of the State. It is, after all, simply a question between the voting negro with property, and the non-voting negro without property. That is all there is about it. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another important aspect to this question upon which I desire to say a single word. It is known that the people of the United States, through their representatives in Congress, have decreed that the colored men of the South shall have equality of suffrage. A large majority of the representatives from this State concurred in that decree, and the people of the State have indorsed their action subsequently at the polls. I cannot see, therefore, how the people of this State can, in fairness, refuse to prescribe for themselves a rule which they enjoined and enforced upon others. The rule, sir, with regard to ourselves is unobjectionable and free from danger. But with regard to those on whom we have enforced it, it is most obnoxious, and of very doubtful expediency, on account of the greater ignorance of the masses of the colored race in that section. At the South the colored population nearly equals in number that of the white, and they have but just emerged from that benighted ignorance engendered by slavery, while here they are few in numbers and comparatively enlightened. It does seem to me that the people of this State will not put themselves in the unenviable position of refusing to take a homœopathic dose of the political medicine which they have administered in such allopathic doses to others. Sir, I believe that if they knew its qualities were noxious they would feel in honor bound to present the poisoned chalice to their own lips. In regard to the question of separate submission I will say at this time but a single word. I cannot for the life of me, see the propriety of submitting to the people separately, a question in regard to which there are no just grounds for difference of opinion, nor would there be now, or hereafter, were it not that the black man has hitherto been an exciting element in our political contests.

Mr. COMSTOCK — I very much regret that this Convention has embarked in a debate which it seems to me is unnecessary. I desire to submit a few observations for the purpose of stating the question as clearly as I am able. In my judgment we have been debating a question in regard to which there is not, and cannot be, a negative voice in this Convention; and that is whether the law of suffrage shall be sent down to the people for them to decide upon the freehold qualification in regard to colored men. For it will be found when we have examined the subject, that every proposition before this committee involves that very question, and the only point remaining will be, whether it shall be sent in one form or in another form. Now, sir, it will be remembered that the Constitution of 1846 provides, in its principal enacting part, that the male inhabitants of the State who are citizens, shall be clothed with the elective franchise. It is supposed that that would confer the right of suffrage equally upon men of every color. It certainly would, if colored men as well as white men were citizens. But that enacting part of the Constitution of 1846 is followed by a proviso which prescribes a freehold qualification for colored suffrage, and taking the whole of the Constitution together, the elective franchise is vested in the white male citizens of the State, and in the colored citizens of the State, who, by thrift and prudence, have acquired a small freehold estate. So much for the Constitution of 1846. I now call the attention of this committee to the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage. That report, like the Constitution which it proposes to revise, vests the elective franchise in the citizen inhabitants of the State. But, unlike the Constitution of 1846, it omits the proviso which imposes the freehold qualification upon colored suffrage. Sir, suppose this Convention adopts the plan of suffrage submitted by the committee on that subject, what will be the question before the people? Not only that feature of the Constitution, but every other feature. All that we do in this Convention is but a mere proposition to the people, and, therefore, the plan of suffrage adopted by the Convention in that form, will merely ask the people to say whether they will or will not retain the freehold qualification for colored suffrage. That is the only essential difference between the plan of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Constitution of 1846. There are other differences of detail to be sure, but in regard to the great right of suffrage, that is the fundamental and essential difference; and, therefore, the plan of the committee proposes precisely to submit to the ultimate verdict of the people the question whether that freehold qualification shall continue or shall not. I come next to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], and we shall find that that has exactly the same characteristics. It differs only from the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage in regard to the thirty or ten days' citizenship in the State, and in regard to paupers, lunatics and some other matters of mere detail; but, like the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, it limits the proviso imposing the freehold qualification upon the suffrage of the negro. Suppose, instead of the plan of the committee, that this Convention adopts the substitute of the gentleman from Cayuga polls and before the people, and take the popular verdict and be content with it? Upon every consideration, sir, which occurs to my mind, this question ought to be submitted separately.

Mr. AXTELL—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Axtell and it was declared lost.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to detain the committee long, but before this question which we have before us shall pass from the consideration of the committee, I very much desire to make some remarks, particularly upon the real matter at issue, which is as to the manner in which the question that has been discussed shall be submitted to the people. I am pleased that the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] has presented the question, by his amendment, in the way in which he has. It presents it for the consideration of this Convention far better, in my opinion, than it is presented by the proposition as it came from the majority of the committee. It submits this single question, by striking out the word "white" from the proposition regulating suffrage, whether the white citizens and the black citizens of this State shall stand upon an equality at the ballot box. That is a simple, plain question, to be presented to the people, when they shall be called upon to pass upon the result of our labors. And I think in that form, coupled with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] it submits the whole question upon which the people of this State will be called upon to act in reference to this subject. Now, sir, if you recur to the clause as it was reported by the committee, it will be found to contain various other considerations tending very much to embarrass the minds of members. We have noticed that in the discussion. I will merely allude to, but not dwell upon them, for they have been fully considered already by the committee. There is the important question with regard to the minimum period which shall elapse between the time when the citizen shall be naturalized and the time when he shall be allowed to vote, whether it shall be thirty days or ten days. There is also the question with regard to the disfranchisement of paupers—a question very embarrassing, as it is presented in the report of the committee. And there is the other question which the committee have coupled with it, in regard to lunatics and idiots. But all these matters are found in a much clearer and plainer manner, if you take the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], coupling it with the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. For one, I could never give my adhesion to a Constitution that should disfranchise from twenty to thirty thousand men of foreign birth who, acting upon the good faith of the previous rule on that subject, have declared their intentions to become citizens—have passed in part the ordeal that is required to become a constituent part of our government, with the expectation that, at a certain time, they will be permitted to participate as citizens in the right to vote. Whatever else might be found in the Constitution which we shall frame, that is worthy of consideration and worthy to be adopted for the benefit of the people of this State, I never would give my consent, and I believe there are thousands in this State, who would withhold their assent from a Constitution which should contain such a provision. It would be a wrong to many thousand of worthy men who would make good citizens. They come from a class of people upon whom we have relied for years past in doing the great work that has built up our State and made it what it is to-day, the Empire State of this Union.

Mr. BARKER—Will the gentleman give way to allow me to ask him a question? I understood the gentleman to state that twenty or thirty thousand persons would be disfranchised if the thirty day clause were embodied in the Constitution?

Mr. SEYMOUR—Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKER—I would ask him if, in his inquiry, by which he ascertained this number, he found any fact disclosing why there were more persons applied for naturalization between that period last year and the two or three years previous?

Mr. SEYMOUR—I looked at no other time than in reference to the period when, in 1868, these persons coming forward to be naturalized will expect to be naturalized according to the rule that has been previously established. I do not consider it—

Mr. BARKER—I ask him if he has ascertained it as a fact that more applied for naturalization during the year 1866 than there did the three previous years together.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I do not know. I looked only at the year 1866, and I know this fact generally, with regard to these applications, that when the person applying is looking forward to the opportunity to give his vote for the Chief Magistrate of this country, which will be given in 1868, as we hope, it has been always found that, in regard to that election, larger numbers are coming forward to be naturalized than at any other election; and the number which I have stated here has not been obtained by a count or a record, but by a general estimate of the number of votes that may be expected from this quarter at that time. But, sir, with regard to the principle of this thing; this exclusion which is made by substituting thirty days instead of ten, is just as wrong if it were to apply to but five or six thousand as if it applied to the twenty or thirty thousand, the number which has been stated upon this floor. In neither case, there being in my opinion no necessity for a change of the rule, would I accept of a Constitution that would do such a gross and palpable wrong to a citizen, or to a person who desires to be made a citizen, and to exercise the elective franchise. But, sir, I do not propose to dwell upon that feature. As to the other feature of the report to which I have alluded, that of excluding the pauper, I think there will be equal injustice if you adopt the clause presented by the committee. We have been repeatedly told in this debate that we are living in the nineteenth century, that we are in a progressive age; and the ground upon which the discussion has proceeded in favor of relieving the colored race from the property qualification is this idea of progress, of a more liberal feeling to be exercised by all on the subject of admitting persons to the elective franchise. Yet, at the same time, while it is sought to admit ten or twelve thousand of the colored race in this State to an equal franchise with the white race, it is sought in this arbitrary manner, and contrary so all former precedents, to exclude many thousands of white men from the privilege of voting, simply upon the ground that they are poor. An inconsistency so glaring as this cannot fail to attract the attention of the people of this State, and if retained in the proposed Constitution will induce tens of thousands of intelligent, liberal-minded men to refuse their assent to the whole instrument, whatever of good to the State may be contained in it. For myself, I freely declare here, that before I would give my assent to an organic law which would deprive the poor man of his vote, simply because he is poor, I would withhold my sanction from the whole instrument, and be content to live twenty, nay, one hundred years longer, under the present Constitution with all its defects. There is another subject which has been, to some extent, discussed, in relation to idiots and persons of unsound mind. Now, sir, I prefer the manner in which this is treated in the present Constitution, to that presented by the report of the committee. This is retained in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight]. It embraces the provisions of the present Constitution, with only the erasure of the word "white." By those provisions the Legislature of this State is empowered to pass such laws as are required for the purpose of excluding idiots, lunatics and persons of unsound mind, from the elective franchise. We have seen in the debate on this subject, how much a provision to exclude idiots and lunatics necessarily runs into it. It is unfit to be made a constitutional provision. You cannot regulate that delicate subject without entering into special provisions in detail, which would be unseemly, improper, and cumbersome to the Constitution. It should be left in the language in which the present Constitution leaves it for the direction of the Legislature, that they may apply, in the proper way, the test to discover and determine who are lunatics or idiots, and therefore unfit to exercise the elective franchise, and not require it to be decided at the ballot box. Now, Mr. Chairman, leaving that proposition, with many others in the report of the committee, which I think ought not to be embraced in the organic law of the State, we come to the simple proposition presented by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] striking out the word "white" and to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. After the very interesting discussion that we have had on the subject of the black race, in all its bearings of physiology, anatomy and every other point which can be applied as a matter of test to the capacity of the colored race, I shall not enter into any discussion on those points. It has been an interesting discussion, but I think entirely unprofitable, having no bearing whatever upon the question really before us. Nor shall I dive into the musty antiquity which has exercised some minds in regard to the origin of society, whether this right of suffrage is, or is not, inalienable. The gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], in a speech this morning, full of learning on this subject, has, I think given as good an exposition of the origin and the condition of society, after it is organized, as we could find even if we were to consult the learned authors. It is true, that upon this subject of the original organization of society, the learned writers on natural law differ, and for two hundred years the world has been debating the question, and trying to discover what rights were originally man's, and what were really due to the organization of society. As I said before, I think this is a question which had better be left to those who are pleased to discuss it for their own amusement, rather than for any practical purpose. I take the question as it stands before the people of this country. It comes up as a practical question, and it is to be decided as every practical question is to be decided, as the public may judge of its expediency—expediency in the broadest sense of the term; as they may judge of its policy—a policy co-extensive with all the interests of this State. Now, sir, they have always decided these questions of suffrage, whether they have related to the African race or to the white race as questions of national policy. They have decided them as questions of political expediency, and they always will decide them so, and whatever may be the opinions of gentlemen upon the subject of "natural right," or however much they may feel the right of a class of persons is to be trodden down if they are not permitted to exercise this right of suffrage, the people at large, the mass of the voters, those who will speak on this subject at the ballot box, those who have sent us here to deliberate upon this business of the re-organization of this great State, as to all its interests, they will look at it as a practical question; they will look at it in the light of a public policy. Now, if this were the only question before us, there would be no need of considering the manner in which it was to be submitted. I presume that the gentlemen who are in favor of embodying unrestricted suffrage of the African race in the Constitution, would not refuse to submit that question as a separate proposition. I doubt not that the majority of this Convention would be willing to present it by itself, because it would then be one distinct and separate proposition—the Constitution of 1846 and this amendment to it. Sir, I view the question of the manner of submitting the question as highly important; more important than those questions so much elaborated by gentlemen as to the natural and abstract rights of men in society, or as to the right of the colored race to participate in the elective franchise. After a period of twenty years we have been sent here to endeavor to improve, if we can, the Constitution under which this great State is to be governed for a long period to come. There have been great evils complained of. The public never would have called this Convention for the single purpose of determining the question whether ten or eleven thousand colored people, who do not now participate in the elective franchise, should be permitted to do so;

but they were moved by the pressure of evils arising from imperfection in the present Constitution, rather than by any interest on this subject. They felt that the judiciary system was not adequate to the wants of the State; that for the period of the last ten years it had amounted almost to a denial of justice to the whole of the people of this State, and that question, more than any other, prompted the feeling through the whole State which has called this Convention together. But, sir, there were other questions which have agitated the State for years past, and they are now pressing upon us. We saw some indications in reference to those questions, on the first assembling of this Convention, when the question of the order and regulations of business were brought before us. Sir, this State, its capital, its industry, its progress in material wealth and greatness, has not stood still for the last twenty years. It has advanced. And there are many who believe it has advanced so far and is advancing so rapidly beyond the rules and regulations of the past, that new and more enlarged provisions are demanded in its organic law for guiding and facilitating its further progress. Sir, there is a deep feeling throughout this State, and I think, without disparagement, to those feelings which refer to what have been called the rights of "manhood" far deeper and stronger than they are. This strong and unmistakable public sentiment pertains to our internal commerce and trade. It has called forth conventions in various parts of the country, to express the views of the American people and of others with whom we are connected by the indissoluble ties of business and of trade, and to express opinions in reference to what shall be done in the future. The question is what shall be done that the State of New York may maintain in wealth and commerce, its proud position. If gentlemen suppose that public sentiment and public expectation is all aggregated and concentrated on this one question of extending the right of suffrage to ten or eleven thousand colored men, they are mistaken. The commercial and business men of the State, to whom I have alluded, embrace those who, by their capital and their enterprise, reach every quarter of this State. They reach the masses of the people, nor are they confined to this State. They are the people of the great North-west, and our neighbors in the British Provinces at the North. I declare to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the other members of this committee, that they expect something to be done in reference to the facilities for our internal trade and commerce, a subject dependent for its just arrangement upon a proper system of finance. The great and all absorbing question of finance stands first and foremost in order. Upon that will depend the future prosperity of this great State. Have gentlemen thought how far that reaches—how far the future of our commerce and trade and the honor of this State are dependant upon the financial system to be settled by this Convention? We live at a peculiar era of the country's history. We have just emerged from a great struggle for the existence of our nation, and as a citizen of New York, I am proud to point to the record of this State, to the thousands and hundreds of thousands of men who have gone forth from our borders to preserve the Constitution and the government. It is their triumph which has enabled us to assemble to-day as one of the independent States of this Union. But let me remind gentlemen that this has not been accomplished without a lavish expenditure of money. I need not count the millions of dollars. New York stands pledged for, to the nation, about one-fifth of the whole national debt of nearly three thousand millions. This State alway has paid—she will ever continue to honorably discharge all her obligations. It is one of the objects of this Convention so to arrange our financial system, that the honor of New York as a debt paying State, as a State from the very beginning the champion of internal improvements for the development and advancement of trade and commerce—shall never be tarnished. Besides the large portion of the national debt which is resting upon us, and now pressing upon the tax payers, we have a large debt of our own—a debt of the State proper—amounting to nearly fifty millions of dollars. Besides that, sir, our counties, towns and cities are incumbered by debts amounting to about as much more, making an aggregate, without considering the national debt, of more than one hundred millions of dollars.

Mr. RATHBUN—It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this debate is extending itself to a new field—that the gentleman is discussing questions which ought to be raised at another time.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], is applying his argument to the question now pending before the committee.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I certainly intend to, Mr. Chairman, and if I supposed there were any who failed to appreciate the fact I would sit down now. It is because I am thoroughly convinced that they do appreciate it, and that before the sessions of this Convention shall be closed they will more fully appreciate it, that I have desired to be heard on this question, and on others to which I have alluded. Now, sir, after stating thus much in regard to the great questions to be settled by us, I come to the distinct point, whether the extension of the right of suffrage to ten or twelve thousand of the black race (I do not use the term disparagingly), is to be linked with and to be made an inseparable condition of the performance of those other and higher duties to which we are called. Sir, I ask the gentlemen on the other side, those who feel so sensitive on this question of the rights of the black race, whether they do not believe there are thousands of their constituents who will feel equally interested in these great questions to which I have alluded? And whether, if the Constitution which we are to make shall not, upon the financial question and the canal question, and the judiciary question—the three great prominent subjects of our consideration meet the wishes and expectations of the people of the State—they expect to carry a Constitution simply upon the extension of suffrage to ten or twelve thousand of black men? So, let us not deceive ourselves. This question of the status of the colored race has been the most exciting of all questions. It may be so when it shall be presented to the people in the Constitution we are about to propose.

The tendency is to excite feelings which are dissimilar to those that ought to operate upon the public mind when it comes to settle down upon the great basis of government, and the very existence of this State at this period. I have said it was an extraordinary period, and fraught with great dangers. It is so. With all this debt resting upon us we have nothing to represent values as a circulating medium—nothing but a paper currency, the most uncertain and the most fluctuating. By this uncertainty and great expenses it is exposing us in all our business relations to panics and reverses in finances greater than we have ever before been exposed to. No business man reflects on this subject without regarding these dangers. We must settle these questions and determine upon a public policy at this time in reference to these subjects, and they will demand a business-like, calm consideration of the people of this State. Mr. Chairman, politics die out, parties die out, and the issues that have divided parties pass away. This question of the status of the black race, which has divided the parties in this State, and throughout the Union during the last ten or twenty years, will pass away. But sir, the question of internal trade, the question of the proper adjudication and preservation of your rights in our civil tribunals, and the higher and more important questions of the finances and the honor of this State will not pass away. They will outlive all parties, or else our proud State will sink into decay and ruin. Now, sir, I do not wish for one to mix up this question of the suffrage of ten or twelve thousand people white or black, with these grave considerations. Sir, do not gentlemen see that they are attempting to decide this question of suffrage at a time when the public mind is very sensitive upon the subject of the status of the black man and his rights. It has agitated this as well as our sister States for the last ten or twenty years. It has shaken our Union to its center. It has drawn us into a war. It has severed the Union, and were it not for the strength and patriotism of the people of the North, that Union to-day would have left us a divided people ever to remain divided. Even now, after the glorious triumph of the cause of the Union; even now, after the war is over, men are studying, and considering, and debating, as they never did before, the great problem, what shall become of the black race? Do you not believe that the people, when they shall be called to vote upon the Constitution to be presented for their approval or rejection; when they shall have heard in the canvass both parties on this subject, will be excited by this subject of free suffrage to the colored race? Is there not danger that this subject, temporary in its nature and soon to pass away, may absorb the attention of the people to the neglect of more important questions which will remain with us and our posterity forever? Can this question be discussed in the political canvass without exciting prejudices which ought not to come into the consideration of more important and vital questions? Can the people of this State be called to the ballot box in November next without seeing for themselves or having forced upon their consideration, that this question of suffrage, is but an initiatory step to equality—to political equality and social equality, of the white and black races? Do I state this too strong? Look at the South now—you will behold there those old States, covered with the honor of their revolutionary sires—the States once governed by the Marions, the Rutledges, the Randolphs, and the Macons which may soon, under the operation of this system of suffrage there, be governed by the black and not by the white race; which may soon send to our Congress black men for representatives and black men for senators, and in the end, may fill the office of Chief Magistrate of the country with one of their own race. Do you believe the people will be blind to the progress and probability of things then? Do you think they will ignore the fact also, which more than once has been illustrated in this State, that a party need not be in the majority, but may be in a very small minority and yet hold the balance of power between the great contending parties, and that the very same thing that is now being enacted in the Southern States may yet exist in the State of New York! And will gentlemen on the other side of the house deliberately propose to go into an exciting contest upon questions of this kind, when the public mind is thus disturbed by consideration of this exciting character, and by all those feelings that ever have, and ever will, intensify a contest of different races. Do they deliberately propose to carry into a canvass that is to settle the financial policy of this State—its judicial system and internal commerce for twenty, thirty, or fifty years, the absorbing elements of bitter partisan strife? Now, sir, let the party which claims this to be such a transcendent right, which boasts of this as the grand idea of the nineteenth century, which claims that the young men of the rising generation have been baptized into this idea of the political and social equality of the white and black races—let them boldly present their proposition and let them stand up and vindicate it upon its merits and not seek to make its fate dependent upon other and more important questions. If it is what they claim it to be, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke] has expressed it, a "homoeopathic dose," it need not be sugared over with a financial system which shall suit everybody. That homoeopathic dose need not be made sweet and palatable by a canal system that shall suit those who otherwise would not take it. No, the best interests of the State forbid that it should be thus presented to the people. If gentlemen claim this question to be a sacred question of right, then let them maintain it as a right. After being twice defeated before the people on this distinct question, I hope you will now consent to meet your opponents at the polls upon the merits of this question, independent of extrinsic and foreign aid. If the people shall give a verdict for you, we shall bow in humble deference to that verdict. But we look for other and more permanent results from the labors of this Convention, measures affecting the welfare of our great State in all its material and social prosperity, for years to come. We hope by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], to be able to go to the people of this State and to say: "We have met and we have performed our duty; we have acted upon all these great questions, and in order that we might enable you to preserve and perpetuate those great interests for yourselves and your posterity down to the latest generation, we have presented them by themselves, and we have presented this other exciting question by itself." That is the way, in which, looking at all these interests, I desire these questions to go to the people. If, after we shall have made a good financial system, a good canal system, and a good judicial system, these shall be lost in political excitement, engulfed in the never-ending question as to the status of the colored man—if the anticipated benefits to be secured by a new Constitution, shall thus be lost to my constituents, I shall not without blushing be compelled to confess to them. "These were all lost to you, because I voted, that you should not have them unless you were willing also to take with them the granting of free suffrage to the colored man; that important as these great measures were to your prosperity, I have chosen so to place them before you that unless you are willing to swallow this 'homœopathic dose,' as it has been called by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Opdyke], you shall not have the benefit of any remedies of existing evils, nor any of those important amendments we had proposed to insure the prosperity of our State in the future."

Mr. RATHBUN—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put in the motion of Mr. Rathbun and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD from the Committee of the Whole reported that the Committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had instructed their chairman to report that fact to the Convention and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. MORRIS the Convention adjourned.

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1867.

The Convention met at seven o'clock, pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer was offered by Rev. J. P. MAGEE.

The Journal of Saturday was read by the SECRETARY and was approved.

Mr. GRANT moved that the Convention do now adjourn, which was lost.

Mr. MERRITT offered the following resolution, and asked that it be laid on the table.

Resolved, That the consideration of all propositions having in view the mode or manner of submitting the Constitution as revised, or any article or any part thereof, to the people, be postponed until the Constitution or proposed amendments shall have been definitely acted upon by the Convention and prepared for submission.

Which was laid on the table.

Mr. WALES offered the following preamble and resolutions which he requested be laid on the table and printed:

WHEREAS, The President and Vice-President of the United States are elected by a board of electors, the members of which are apportioned among the respective States; and

WHEREAS, The part of said board of electors apportioned to each State respectively, is elected or appointed by each State in accordance with its own rule or law; and

WHEREAS, The Senators of the United States are appointed by the Legislature of the respective States; and

WHEREAS, The Members of the House of Representatives of the United States are elected by the voters of single districts, into which the respective States are divided; and,

WHEREAS, The Congress of the United States acts reciprocally upon and for the several States respectively, and upon them all collectively; and,

WHEREAS, The Executive and Legislature of each State are, for certain purposes, agents of the United States, especially in time of war, in raising clothing, forwarding and paying troops; now, therefore,

Resolved, That in the election of the Board of Electors, and of the Members of the House of Representatives, and in the election of the Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, and the Legislature of the respective States, a uniform system of suffrage ought to prevail; and be it further

Resolved, That the standing Committee on the Right of Suffrage be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing, by Constitutional provision, the Legislature of the State to accept such uniform system of suffrage, when such system shall have been legally perfected and promulgated by the general government; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be requested to send or cause to be sent a copy of this preamble and of these resolutions respectively to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Executive of each of the respective States of the Union.

Which were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to hold Office, Mr. ALVORD of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the substitute offered by Mr. Murphy to the substitute offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight.

Mr. MERRILL—I ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments only, to state some of the reasons why I cannot favor the proposed substitute. The proposition is to retain the first section of the article on suffrage, virtually as it now stands. Sir, I object to that section, because it is uncertain in its terms, loose in structure, containing much that is useless and omitting much that is essential—a hopeless tangle of "one year," "four months," "thirty" and "ten" days. I am a conservative to the extent of conserving all that is most excellent in the existing Constitution, but a very decided radical where there is room for manifest improvement. Because a thing has existed for twenty years is no certain sign that it cannot well be bettered. We have indeed wasted our opportunities and rejected the teachings of experience, if we are not able to improve, in some respects, the work of our fathers. And it seems to me, sir, that the assertion made by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], before a vote had here been taken, that nothing but the old article would prove acceptable to the Convention or to the people, was scarcely warranted. If that be true, the various articles should mostly have been referred to the engrossing clerks, "with power to report complete." I deny that the section in question has given satisfaction to the people of this State. I insist that the fundamental law, declaring what citizens shall be entitled to vote, should be specific, clear, and calculated to promote a pure, intelligent, independent expression of the popular will. Under the present complicated article, not one citizen in five has been able to state the precise definition of a lawful elector; and a man changing his residence must needs consult a lawyer, or, as was predicted by an emipent member in the Convention that framed it, "an inspector of a dozen years' experience," to ascertain his status and his rights! It has been easily evaded in some of its provisions, and has kept open "a macadamized road" to frauds. The clause allowing men to vote for certain officers only, on a thirty days' residence in the district, is ambiguous and undigested, and has called for more "judicial construction" than a whole article should demand. The four months' residence in a county is useless, and each year disfranchises far more citizens of the State than would be excluded under any new restriction the committee proposes. I object further to the proposed substitute that it does not make the buying and selling of votes a ground of challenge, and thus secure what the minority report aptly terms "a self-executing law." Without this feature, any attempted barrier against corruption would be futile. If the object of the requirement for ten days' citizenship is to prevent fraudulent naturalization, as suggested by the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Hutchins] which was shrewdly dodged by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] the end would be much more fully accomplished by the thirty days' term proposed; and being equally specific and well known, as well as uniform with the election district residence, it would be equally just. For myself I shall not object to postponing the commencement of its operations until after 1868, not desiring to work injustice to any, though having no special sympathy for the large class who postponed naturalization to avoid the duties of citizenship during the war. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] did well in calling attention to the report of Gov. Bouck on this subject in 1846. The committee of which he was chairman reported unanimously in favor of a sixty days' citizenship and sixty days' residence in the election district, and the report was sustained by many of the best men and strongest Democrats in that Convention,—Mr. Stow arguing that it is better to deprive one legal voter of his right, than have twenty or thirty others deprived of theirs by illegal votes," and Mr. Ruggles declaring that it would put an end to notorious frauds. In regard to the article reported by the committee of which I am a member, I deem it proper to offer a few words of explanation and defense. The majority were not agreed on every detail. Some of the criticisms and amendments here offered are such as myself and others presented in the committee. But the principles embodied in the article, beyond the few exceptions mentioned in the minority report, were generally agreed to. In listening to the debates, I confess to a surprise that learned legal gentlemen should treat the propositions as novel and impracticable. I can only account for this, with the greatest deference, on the supposition that the gentlemen's thoughts have been so much devoted to their special duties that they have not fully examined the questions involved; as was evidenced by one eminent gentleman on Saturday, who spoke frequently of the word "white" as being in the old article, and erroneously asserted that lunatics and idiots can be excluded by law under the present Constitution. The language employed by the committee was not selected without full consideration, research and comparison of views, and it was fully indorsed on Saturday by very eminent authority [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. That which gentlemen have declared to be unsound in theory, harsh in its operations, and impracticable, stands almost word for word in thirteen existing State Constitutions of this country. I will read very brief extracts from various Constitutions, showing the classes excluded from voting.

California—"No idiot or insane person, or person convicted of infamous crime,"

Kansas—"No person under guardianship, non compos mentis, or insane."

Louisiana—"No pauper, no person under interdiction, nor under conviction of any crime punishable with hard labor."

Maryland—"No lunatic, or person non compos mentis."

Massachusetts—"Excepting paupers and persons under guardianship."

Minnesota—"No person under guardianship, or who may be non compos mentis, or insane."

Nevada—"No idiot or insane person."

New Hampshire—"Excepting paupers and persons excused from paying taxes at their own request."

New Jersey—"No pauper, idiot, insane person."

Rhode Island—"No pauper, lunatic, person non compos mentis, or person under guardianship."

South Carolina—"No pauper."

West Virginia—"No person of unsound mind, or a pauper."

Wisconsin—"No person under guardianship, non compos mentis or insane."

Now I ask gentlemen what there can be novel or impracticable in provisions like these, that have worked satisfactorily in so many States. The policy of the exclusions and extension may fairly be debated; but let us meet the principles fairly on their merits, and treat them frankly, as becomes men framing organic law. The committee undertook to, and I think did, define the classes of citizens who shall be entitled to vote. It based suffrage on adult, rational, independent manhood. It excluded idiots, lunatics, paupers, and persons under guardianship (a phrase I do not like, but which has respectable precedents for its use), in addition to felons and those convicted of bribery. Then the fourth section says, as now: "Laws may be passed for ascertaining by proper proofs the citizens who shall be entitled to the right of suffrage hereby established." Under this section, which seems to have been strangely lost sight of in the discussion, the Legislature would, of course, prescribe and provide for ascertaining, who shall be included in these non-voting classes. It seems to me, sir, that the evil results so elaborately set forth as likely to attend a fixed and definite elective franchise, evidence a more lively imagination than sound judgment. The fertile fancy of the facetious gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard] has depicted the ridiculous results of supposititious challenging at the polls of a certain bail-bond signer, and certain persons posted as "blockheads," if inspectors are "made judges of lunacy or idiocy." Now, sir, supposition has no limits. Suppose the bottom falls out of Lake Erie—suppose the sea-serpent swallows the Atlantic cable—suppose, for a climax, that the democratic party should cease to be led by Bourbons [laughter]; "who learn nothing and forget nothing." We must suppose a little good sense, and a due regard for party interests and the public good, to rest in the people. The law which provides a simple method of ascertaining by proper proofs the rights of persons challenged for felony, bribery or infamous crimes now, could easily be extended so as to amply suffice for all the committee proposes. It would be a very simple matter to present the requisite proofs to the boards of registry, and thus prevent wrangling at the polls; or in cases not thus reached, to prescribe a few sufficient proofs for the inspectors, as suggested by the learned gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. In respect to the classes excluded, a few words may be proper. It seems to me that sentiment has run into sentimentality over the class called public paupers. If these dependent people are indeed the "bold peasantry" which the eloquent gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Lapham], drew on the poet to describe as —"their country's pride,"

"Which, once destroyed, can never be supplied,"

[Laughter.]

I give up the case in advance. But if they are, in sad truth, nine-tenths of them graduates of grogeries, wrecks from the rum shop, victims of their own vices, who for three hundred and sixty-four days in the year have no interest in society or government but to be fed and clothed by its bounty, I submit that the case is entirely different. Why, sir, has it altogether escaped the attention of the acute gentlemen who speak on this floor with their eloquent tongues wagging towards the almshouses, that the existing Constitution contemplates the exclusion of this very class? It provides that inmates of almshouses shall not gain a residence while subsisting on public charity, the framers of that instrument naturally taking it as granted that these people would remain in the custody of their governors until finally discharged. The intention evidently was to preserve the dignity and worth of the ballot-box by excluding paupers, leaving their legal residence at the place whence they came whenever they should again be independent citizens. But, like many other sections of this old Constitution that failed to express the intended meaning or fully secure the end sought, this object has been thwarted; and by emptying the poor-houses just on the eve of an election the inmates have been "voted" at their old homes by the partisans who happened to control the institutions. In my own county, and other rural communities having a small percentage of paupers, and those far removed from a legal residence, the evil has been less marked than in the great centers of population, and the intended constitutional exclusion of this class has been more perfectly accomplished. And yet this exclusion has awakened no heroic strains over "a crusade against the unfortunate poor men;" and the poor laboring men—the bone and sinew of the State—have not felt it to be a hardship whenever their votes were not neutralized by governed dependents, dragged out of almshouses for that purpose. Has the State, then, been "to hastening ill a prey," or has this annual exodus of "the bold peasantry" in some quarters of the State, "under watchful keepers," preserved us? And yet, sir, in full view of this plainly intended exclusion of paupers by the existing Constitution, certain portions of the press have raised a hue and cry over the committee's action in remedying what is merely a defect; and an honorable gentleman has declared on this floor that he would vote against the proposed Constitution if this palpable loop-hole in the old one is corked up by substituting explicitness for indirection! The exclusion does not involve a property qualification, as has been often charged. A man may be so poor that by comparison Lazarus was a petroleum prince, he may beg from door to door, and still vote. But if to "honest poverty and a'that" (which having long experienced I should be the last to proscribe) he adds pauperism, and withdraws to the almshouse, becoming too often the mere creature of his governing keeper's will, I hold that his vote unnecessarily degrades the franchise. Of course there are exceptional cases where the exclusion would be unnecessary and harsh. But it is so with all restrictions, and cannot overbalance the great abuse and injustice it prevents. The registry deprives many worthy citizens of their right to vote every year; but, while guarding the purity of the ballot-box, shall it for this reason be given up? As for the disabled soldiers whom it is urged this exclusion might effect, the chairman of the committee has truly answered the objection. They are not, and never should be, paupers. Whatever is needed for the comfort and support of those who cannot support themselves, is vastly less than the nation owes to them. It is all "for value received," and the receipt can never, alas! be in full! But the laws framed under the article could easily confine the exclusion solely to inmates of almshouses, which would more exactly meet my views, excepting the soldiers in terms. And yet, any culpable community that permits its mutilated heroes to languish in the poor-house, should be shamed, rather than sensitive, over the fact that it could not put to some use its dishonored defenders, by seeking them out on one little day in all the weary year, to vote "the right ticket!" [Laughter.] So far as the lunatics and idiots are concerned, the sentiment has been general that they should not vote. Some gentlemen have urged that the terms are not sufficiently explicit; but their use in the Constitutions as before quoted, and the fact to which I have urged the attention of the committee—that the proposed article does not deal in details, but fixing the classes, empowers the Legislature to prescribe and provide for ascertaining who are embraced therein, do not seem to warrant the objection. There is not a single Constitution in existence where these well understood words are not used simply by themselves, without any such qualification as "judicially determined," or "adjudged." If it is conceded that they should not vote, let us say so. Honesty and explicitness are better than indirection and ambiguity in defining the electors in the organic law, and attempting to dignify and render independent "the freeman's weapon." The proposition to establish impartial suffrage, and secure equal rights for equal citizens, has been so fully and so ably discussed that I will not consume the time of the Committee by examining it. But I could not help thinking, during the labored effort of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] to prove the inferiority of the negro race, that, according to our democratic Constitution and the proposed amendment submitted by the gentleman, only "a narrow neck of land," worth $250, separates the black man from political equality with the man of the most regular shin bones and approved Caucasian heels. In view of what is manifest destiny, those who claim that capacity for "solving problems in Euclid," and growing straight hair, carries with it the custody of black men's rights, should end their lugubrious apprehensions of equality by singing the familiar hymn, so soon to be expurgated forever:

"Lord! on what a slender thread Hangs white super-or-l-tee!"

[Laughter.]

For the people of this State will tolerate no longer continuance of a wretched oligarchy of the skin; and will hold us unfaithful to our high trusts if we fail to brand with our disapproval all senseless and undemocratic tests of race, or color, or property.

Mr. EDDY — I am opposed to the exclusion of public paupers from the right of the election franchise. Upon this branch of the subject only I desire to make a single remark. Having been charged with the superintendency of the poor in my own county for a series of years, am somewhat prepared to judge as to the class of voters that are the inmates of these charitable institutions, in the rural counties of this State. It is the case in my own, as well as many other counties, that the different towns support their own poor in the county poor-houses, and the paupers do not lose their residence in the towns while inmates of the poor-house, and consequently the only place they can vote is in their respective towns, and they are, therefore, removed from any influence of their keeper while exercising that right. I could give the history of many different individuals, who have, through the force of unavoidable circumstances, become the recipients of public charities in these institutions, and whose previous history, show that they have been an honor to their country and a blessing to the world. I will detain the committee by reciting only one instance, as there has already been sufficient time spent in debate on this subject, and that the history of the late Hon. Archibald Dixon, who at one time had the honor of representing the county of Otsego in our Legislature, and while this institution was under my charge was an inmate of the same, and in the mean time, early in the history of the late rebellion, held correspondence with Major-General John A. Dix on the state of the country, and some of the letters then received were published in the county papers. Shall we exclude this unfortunate but frequently worthy class of citizens from what, with many, is their highest ambition, and apparently their greatest enjoyment—the right of the elective franchise? I trust not.

Mr. MORRIS — The debates upon negro suffrage have already consumed several days, and it seems probable that some time yet will be given to its discussion, before we come to a vote upon the motion before the committee. We have had learned dissertations upon the anatomy of the negro and many quotations from distinguished authors, ancient and modern, to prove the inferiority of the black man to the white man, on one side, and on the other, to show that there is no material difference except in the color of the skin. These earnest and prolonged discussions show that negro suffrage is the great exciting political question of the day; and it is for this reason that it seems to me eminently proper and judicious to submit the question to the people separately from the new Constitution we are now forming. The high character of the gentlemen constituting this Convention, and the liberal and elevated sentiments expressed on the various subjects of public interest claiming their attention, indicate that the new Constitution will be, as a whole, so much more suited to the present wants of the State than the one of 1846, that if this negro suffrage extension be omitted, and which effects only some 11,000 blacks, there will probably be not one of this Convention who will not conscientiously and earnestly recommend his friends to vote for its adoption. We must not be so carried away by this question as to lose sight of the important reforms in State government which the new Constitution is designed to effect, and which virtually concern the prosperity of this community. Probably the work of this Convention will occupy more than a hundred days, and the expense to the State may exceed the appropriation already made. It is unwise to run the risk of losing the results of so much labor and of expending so much money in vain, by incorporating in what we know to be unobjectionable a condition for its acceptance, which we well know to be highly repugnant to many of the electors. If the people desire the extension of the franchise to the blacks, they will vote for it, and if they do not, it is but right that they should have the opportunity of voting against it. It is not our prerogative to dictate to the people, but to represent them. No one can read the many newspapers published within and beyond the limits of this State, and fail to be convinced that the people wish and expect and demand a separate submission of the extension of negro suffrage.

Mr. AXTELL—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Axtell and it was declared lost.

A division being called for, it was had and the result declared, thirty in the affirmative and thirty-six in the negative.

Mr. WEED—There was no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN—The chair will request the President to resume his seat.

Whereupon the President resumed the chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that upon a division in the committee having in charge the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to hold Office, it was found that there was no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT announced the fact as reported.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask a call of the roll.

Mr. WEED—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared carried.

So the Convention stood adjourned.

Mr. MERRITT called up the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the consideration of all propositions having in view the mode or manner of submitting the Constitution as revised, or any article or any part thereof, to the people, be postponed until the Constitution or proposed amendments shall have been definitely acted upon by the Convention, and prepared for submission.

Mr. MERRITT—My object in offering this resolution is to eliminate from the discussions anything that is a mere matter of expediency. I know very well that there is at the present time pending before the Committee of the Whole a question pertinent to the mode and manner of submitting propositions to the people. I presume that perhaps the Convention may not have fully considered this question. I therefore propose to call up this resolution for consideration to-morrow, and until that time I ask that it be laid on the table.

The resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND called up the resolution offered by him on the 19th of June.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That Committee No. 2 on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., be requested to take under consideration and report to this body, upon the policy of providing that the House of Assembly consist of one hundred members, to be elected yearly from single districts—that the Senate consists of eight members, one elected from each Judicial District, for the term of eight years, one each year on the general ticket; that the sole power of initiating and enacting laws be vested in the Assembly—that the legislative power of the Senate shall consist of considering and revising such acts as may be passed by the Assembly. That the salary of Senators be $5,000 and of Assemblymen $1,000 per annum.

Mr. S. TOWNSEND—I wish merely to say, Mr. President, that I allowed this resolution to lie on the table for the length of time it has, in hope that some other propositions, equally or more definite, would be presented to the Constitution, which would meet my approval more than the one I hastily threw out at the time; but as there has been none that I remember, I now move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Organization of the Legislature. I also take the liberty to state and I believe the majority of the members on this floor will agree with me that this question is one of the most important that will come before the Convention for consideration. We have already been engaged for some time in a discussion of a question called the suffrage question, which only concerns about one per cent of the population of the State, but this question concerns every individual, man, woman and child in the State. The appeal comes to us from the people to endeavor to do something to raise the character of legislation in this State; and I hope therefore this resolution may be referred, and that at least some effort will be made to accomplish so desirable an object.

Mr. BARTO moved to take up the resolution offered by him on Wednesday last.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Instruction be requested to prepare, as soon as possible, and communicate to this Convention, a tabular statement showing:

1. The whole number of children in each county in the State entitled to attend common schools each year since 1840.

2. The number of children attending such schools in the several counties each year since 1840, and the number not attending.

3. The amount of taxation imposed upon the people in the several counties of the State for school purposes in each year since 1840, State, county, town, and municipal tax, each stated separately, and the percentage each of State, county, town and municipal tax upon the amount of taxable property.

4. The ratio of taxation to the whole number of children entitled to attend common schools in each year since 1840.

5. The ratio of taxation to the number actually in attendance in each year since 1840.

6. The ratio of increase or decrease in the attendance upon schools in each county, as taxation has been increased.

7. The number of such schools which have become free, and the year in which they became free.

8. The ratio of increase or decrease, in attendance upon such schools in municipal corporations, as have been made free, to the whole number of children entitled to attend such schools.

And further, that the Superintendent be requested to report to the Convention, how soon he can probably make the above statement.

Mr. ALVORD—For the purpose of having the business of this Convention proceed correctly, I would ask whether it is not necessary to make a motion to take this resolution from the table.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair does not understand it was tabled by a vote.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—It was tabled on my motion.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Barto, to take up the resolution, and it was declared carried.

Mr. McDONALD—I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Education and the funds relating thereto. In regard to that I have this to say: Yesterday I met the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and he stated to me that to get the information required by the resolution would take at least six months; that it required a reference to every school-district and every town clerk's office; that it was not in his office at all, and he could not furnish it. I therefore move the reference to the Committee on Education, in order that we may see whether the statement be correct. They can go to the superintendent and see what they can get from him, and whatever information the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Barto] can get, I am very desirous and willing he should have, but I object to these continual resolutions for information about which we know nothing. You will find by a reference to the clerk's desk that a great many accounts are returned to this Convention for the information we have got. How much it amounts to I do not know. How many county clerks have sent in bills I do not know. It may be a question whether the information is worth the cost. If this resolution goes out it compels the Superintendent of Public Instruction to send to the various towns and school-districts, and by the time he gets the information it may be that we will have adjourned, and then the information will do us no good. I am not opposed to any information that can be obtained where the cost is not greater than the benefit that may accrue, and for the purpose of finding out whether we can get this information at all in time to do any good, and second, what it will cost, I move the reference that I do.

Mr. CURTIS—I hope this reference will not be made by the Convention. The information sought by the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Barto] will undoubtedly employ the Superintendent of the Department of Instruction for more than a year. There is no doubt whatever, but what the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] states, is the case, I therefore, hope sir, that the resolution will be referred to the department which is alone in possession of the information, and that that department will report directly to the Convention, and I trust the question will not be referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. BARTO—If the Superintendent of Public Instruction reports to this Convention that he is unable to furnish the information required I am content, but I certainly think the resolution ought to go to him, that he may send us a report if he possibly can; if not let him state the reasons why he cannot give the information.

Mr. FERRY—If pertinent to this inquiry I will state what is perhaps unknown to many members of this Convention, that bills are accumulating every day, to be provided for by this Convention, from various clerks and other officers throughout the State, who have performed labor in response to inquiries similar to the one in question. I merely make the suggestion without deciding in this case whether the information is proper or not, but I think it would be well that the Convention should know what consequences will follow this action, and I would submit it generally to the consideration of the member himself who moved this resolution, whether the information sought for would be worth the expense incurred.

Mr. WEED—I had supposed, Mr. President, that the educational interests of this State were of some importance—so important that an anticipated cost of a few dollars for information, would not deter this Convention from getting it for their own information in judging upon this question. It seems to me that the members of this Convention would not and cannot take into consideration such a thought. Every member upon this floor should understand and be informed of many of the facts asked for by this resolution. The opposition made by the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. McDonald] does not seem to me to be sound, for the reason that the last resolution of this series asks the superintendent to report how long it would take him to furnish what information he has at his own office. It seems to me when we get that report it will be time enough to give the few dollars called for. If the facts desired, will take so much time in collecting them that they will not be here to answer the purpose desired, then, it will be time enough for us to say we do not wish them. It seems to me that the information asked for here should be given by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and I do not believe that that officer is desirous of hiding from the members of this Convention the statistics or the facts connected with his office. If he is (and I say again I do not believe he is), it would be only a greater reason for our calling for them and insisting upon them.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—The resolution which we have under consideration does not limit the Superintendent of Public Instruction for giving us simply the amount of information which he can find in his own office, but it requires him to get that information in the best way he can without any limit of expense, and from all sources in the State, and the Legislature will, of course, be called upon for an appropriation to pay the expenses. Now, I do not desire to prevent any information being obtained for the use of this Convention, which any member of the Convention deems important, but I would like to limit it to some extent, and I would offer, therefore, this amendment to be added at the end of the resolution, "or so much of said information as can be obtained by an examination of the records in his office, in the Comptroller's office, and in the other public offices of the city of Albany." If the gentleman wants the resolution passed with that addition, I am willing to go so far: I think we ought not to go further than this without further consideration.

Mr. McDONALD—If the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Barto] will accept the amendment I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. BARTO—I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. McDONALD—I then insist on my motion.

Mr. KINNEY—I cannot see any propriety in referring this resolution to the Committee on Education. It seems to me such a reference will do no good. The Committee on Education can give us no information; then, why refer it to that committee? If the inquiry is an improper one then let us vote down the resolution but not evade it, in this way by referring it to a committee which has not in its possession any of the subject-matters we are inquiring for. I do not propose to discuss the propriety of the inquiry at all, but simply the propriety of its reference to the Committee on Education, which seems to me to be very improper indeed.

Mr. CLINTON—As some allusion has been made to the action of the Superintendent of Public Instruction in reference to this resolution, I think it proper for me to remark that the superintendent is a frank, plain spoken, thorough going man, that he is, in my judgment, a good officer, and I have no doubt that he will take pleasure in furnishing this Convention with any and every information which it is within his power to afford. I think, sir, that with reference to this very resolution, he remarked to me the other day, that its call for information extended over a period of time so great that there was no record in his office from which he could draw the material for an answer, and he expressed also his desire (I think that is not too strong a word), to furnish to the Convention the information asked for by this resolution, which it was within his power to furnish. It is also said that it will take six months or a year for him to collect, from sources scattered all over the State, the substance of this information. It may be so, and I take the liberty of suggesting that it would perhaps be proper for us in the Convention, to request him to furnish all the information called for by the resolution which he can furnish authentically, within some limited time, be it a month or be it two months. That is my impression with reference to this matter, and I am also satisfied, from conversation with my friend the Chairman of the Committee on Education that it is of no use whatever, and will result in no good to refer it to that committee. My impression is, that, if we adopt this resolution at all, we had better adopt it with the amendment which I have suggested, and refer it directly to the superintendent.

Mr. McDONALD—In making this motion I have simply done what I think ought to have been done in a great many other cases. It is easy enough for an individual, who is ignorant of any fact, to get up and ask this Convention to authorize investigation and order certain information, that he may wish to have. That information may be nearly or very easily within his reach, and yet the order for this same information may cost this State a great many thousand dollars. I understand from clerks in counties where such orders have been made, that in my own county it would cost $300 and in the county of Erie it would cost $1,900 (I am now speaking only from information), and in other counties to about the same amount. As the Chairman on the Committee on Contingent Expenses [Mr. Ferry] has told you, these bills have already begun to arrive. We are getting the first installment, and here only two or three days ago we refused to give to the reporters who are as much entitled to it as anybody can be, a certain amount of stationery, to the amount of thirty dollars each, because we had not the power. Shall we go into the principle of stopping at the spigot, and letting out at the bung-hole? Is that the principle the gentleman wants to pursue? I am not in favor of that principle. I am in favor of every kind of information that can be obtained, which is worth the cost, and I shall suppose that any information is worth the cost until it is proven to the contrary. I have made this motion simply from the conviction that this action has already been too long delayed. The gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] says the Convention can go to the Superintendent of Public Instruction and inquire for themselves. I think his room would be quite full when we all got there. I propose that we go there in the form and person of a committee, and to find out whether he can furnish us this information in time to do us any good; and I am in favor of all the information he will be able to give us. The amendment of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. W. C. Brown] will effect the same object by its limitation, as by it the Superintendent of Public Instruction is only to furnish what can be found in the various public offices, in the various departments we have in the city of Albany, but the gentleman from Tompkins [Mr. Barto] is unwilling to accept it, and that is the only reason I have for being unwilling to yield; but as a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from St. Lawrence, will effect the same object and will allow the Convention to pass upon the question which I intend to raise and will only require the superintendent to furnish such information as can be obtained in the city of Albany, and in order to bring this thing to a test, I will withdraw my motion and let the Convention come directly to the question on the amendment of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. W. C. Brown].

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I have not the resolution before me, and I don't know precisely how it ends. I will offer my amendment so it will read in this way: "Or so much of said information as can be obtained by an examination of the records in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, in the Comptroller's office, and in other public offices in the city of Albany." I understand that a very small portion of the information required by the resolution can be obtained in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and another, and larger portion can be obtained from the Comptroller's office, and from the office of the superintendent of schools in the city of Albany. A very small part of the information called for can be obtained in the public offices of the city of Albany.

Mr. BARTO—I am very much surprised that any gentleman in the Convention should oppose my resolution, asking information of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. I am satisfied that there is nothing asked for in the resolution that he cannot answer in a short time; and I am informed by those better acquainted with the departments than I, that an active clerk can collect all the information in some ten or twenty days. As to the importance of the information, I need only say that the department is one upon which the Legislature has conferred more power than any other State office. And that the Legislature is aggregating to this department more and more power until it is about to obtain control over the entire educational interests of the State. Is it right to have all this despotic power conferred upon a single State officer, a mere creature of the legislature, without any inquiry that will show to us its working and efficiency. Propositions are made here to discontinue the office and return the duties of the office to the Secretary of State from whom it was taken. Is it right that the millions raised every year by taxation should go through this department and no inquiry made as to whether it is doing the good it is claimed. How are we to base our action without information? How can we know what to do without questions are answered showing what has been and what has not been accomplished. I hope the Convention will send the resolution to the Superintendent of Public Instruction. If he is unable to answer it in time to do us any good let him say so—let him state what he can give us and what he cannot. But let the resolution just as it is drawn go to him, and after his answer the Convention can modify the inquiry if it deems best.

Mr. CONGER—I wish to give the reasons very briefly, why I favor the amendment of the gentleman from St. Lawrence [Mr. W. C. Brown]. If the gentleman who offered this resolution, or any other gentleman in this Convention, would refer to the records of the State and show that there had ever been prepared any series of tables starting with the year 1840, giving the average, which is asked here, in two important particulars, first, the ratio of taxation to the whole number of children entitled to attend the common schools in each year since 1840, next the ratio of taxation to the number actually in attendance each year since 1840,—I say, if it could be shown that any such calculation had ever been prepared, or if any such tabulation had been made and printed for the benefit of the State, then I concede to the gentleman who introduced this resolution that it would be very easy for the Superintendent of Public Education to complete that calculation, and to give the average during the years in which he may have had charge of the department. I do not know whether any such tables have ever been prepared, or ever have been printed, but I think it would have been wise if it had been shown to this Convention, in advance of asking from the Superintendent of Public Instruction, such an onerous work as this, that there had been some attempt, by some of his predecessors, in the Secretary of State's office, to commence the work which he might be properly called upon to finish. When you ask the Auditor of the Canal Department to furnish you statistics, going back to the year 1820, it is a very easy matter for him to send to this Convention a copy of the work which has already been prepared and probably one hundred times printed for the information of the people of this State. But in this call it is entirely new and I think it is rather ungenerous for the Convention to press upon the Superintendent of Public Instruction, an inquiry of this magnitude. To be sure, he may send in his reply, and say that he has no records in his office by which he can go back to 1840, and he will be able to tell you, as no doubt the truth is, that for many years there was no such thing as any distinction between the children entitled to attend school, and the number of children actually in school and there is no possibility of giving you the ratio of the average taxation as to those numbers, in the year 1840. In saying so much I hope the gentleman who introduced this resolution will not imagine for a moment that I am opposed to the inquiry, but after the information from the Superintendent of Public Instruction, that it would be impossible within anything like a month, to furnish to the Convention such a mass of information as this, it seems to me to be reasonable and right in this Convention, at least to make some modification of a resolution of such vast scope and sweep, and I think this amendment is very proper as a matter of public duty and public interest, and if we are to get any information at all, we should get it within a reasonable time, so that it may come before the Committee on Education in time to be properly digested, and when the opinion is expressed by my honorable friend who introduced this resolution [Mr. Barto] that the Superintendent of Public Instruction is clothed with so much power by a recent legislature, that we therefore should weight his shoulders with the onerous duty of obtaining information from all these offices, I think it is rather adding unnecessary labors to his already multiplied duties. I therefore desire briefly to explain why I think the Convention should exercise a reasonable courtesy to a State officer situated as this officer is, and not leave the matter in the form of an imperative demand for so much impossible and impracticable information, but leave him to give us all he has in his power to give from the documents within his command.

Mr. LARREMORE—One of the objections urged against the adoption of this resolution, seems to be, that it will involve the expenditure of money to get the required information. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Otsego [Mr. Ferry] to a provision in the act authorizing this Convention to assemble: "and all public officers, boards and commissions shall furnish such Convention with all such information, papers, statements, books or other public documents in their possession, as the said Convention shall order or require for its use, from time to time, while in session." I desire this information, as a member of the Committee on Education, so far as the Superintendent of Public Instruction can furnish it. We ought to know how much our public education costs us, and if the Convention does require an impossibility from the officer spoken of, in calling for any information he has not in his possession, he can reply he cannot get it, and he can state his reasons, and that, I understand, is the purport of the resolution.

Mr. FERRY—I understand that the clause which the gentleman has read refers more particularly to those officers who have salaried offices. I suppose that this clause is drawn with reference to the public officers throughout the State, and especially those who are paid by a salary. I confess, I did not apprehend there was to be any charges following inquiries made throughout the State, especially from the several county clerks, etc., but I find that the charges are sought to be upheld in this way. Where an inquiry was made from any public officer in the State, where the office is one that is paid by a salary, for them to furnish information in their office, they would not attempt to make any charge. But it is said they are obliged to send abroad to others to procure the information, and various searches have to be made, and the clerks claim compensation for making these searches; bills are already sent in here for payment, and we shall have to pass upon this matter. I do not wish to decide, I am not prepared to decide whether this information is necessary or not. I simply state this information for the benefit of all the members of the Convention that they may judge what is better to do under the circumstances.

Mr. LARREMORE—I desire to ask the gentleman from Otsego, [Mr. Ferry] whether the Superintendent of Public Instruction is not a public officer, and whether his salary is not paid from the public treasury so as to bring him within the purview of this section.

Mr. FERRY—I supposed I had distinctly stated that so far as the Superintendent of Public Instruction had it in his power to furnish information himself, no charge would be made, but if he has to send throughout the State to various other officers or individuals, then those persons will bring their claims against the Convention.

Mr. ALVORD—I think sir, there is a very easy way in which this whole question can be settled without objection from any member of the Convention. I move to amend the original resolution by inserting after the word "Superintendent" last occurring, the words "before he proceeds to discharge the duty required by this resolution."

Mr. BARTO—I accept that amendment.

The CHAIR announced that the question was upon the pending amendment offered by Mr. W. C. Brown.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I will accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord].

The CHAIR announced the question to be upon the resolution as amended.

Mr. McDONALD — I move to amend the resolution further by adding at the end of the resolution the words, "and what portion of the information asked for can be obtained from the public officers of the State in this city, and what portion he will be compelled to obtain by inquiry from other officers, and how much will be the probable cost of obtaining such information from such other public officers not in this city."

Mr. BARTO — I accept that amendment also.

The question was then put upon the resolution as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. DEVELIN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the comptroller of the city of New York be requested to furnish this Convention with a statement of the amounts paid by him or his predecessors in office, to charitable institutions including juvenile asylums, and houses of refuge since the year 1847, with the names of the institutions respectively, to which such amounts have been paid and the sum paid to each.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. STRATTON offered the following resolution.

Resolved, That the comptroller of the city of New York, be, and he is hereby instructed, to make full report to this Convention of the net sums annually received from the several sources herein enumerated, and applied through the sinking fund for the redemption of the city debt during the years from 1847 to 1866, inclusive; and a statement showing the expenses incurred in each of said years in granting such licenses, collecting such fees, and in legal efforts to enforce payment or collect penalties for non-compliance to law or ordinance in each of such cases; whether such expenses were allowed by the mayor and common council of the city, or by the board of supervisors of the county, namely:

1. For licenses to pawnbrokers, and to dealers in second-hand furniture, metals and clothes.
2. For licenses for hackney coaches and drivers.
3. For fees of market privileges and market rents.
4. For mayoralty fees.
5. For fines and penalties.
6. For fees and fines collected by clerks of courts.
7. For tavern and excise licenses.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. BELL offered the following resolution.

Resolved, That the Committee on State Prisons, etc., be authorized to send for persons and papers to enable them to understand more fully the operations and abuses of the prison system, that suitable remedies may be provided by this Convention.

Which was adopted.

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That all laws relating to the excise on intoxicating drinks, and upon the regulation or observance of holidays of the week, month or year, shall be general in their provisions, and equally operative throughout the State.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. BELL called up the resolution offered by himself, as follows:

Resolved, That pending the discussion of the report of the Committee on Suffrage, etc., in the Committee of the Whole, the Convention will hold evening sessions, commencing at 7½ o'clock.

Mr. ALVORD — I move that, for the present, that resolution do lie on the table.

Mr. BELL — On that I call for the ayes and noes.

A sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Alvord, to lay the resolution on the table, and it was lost by the following vote:

Ayes—Messrs. C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Armstrong, Artell, Baker, Barnard, Barto, Bowen, Cassidy, Champlain, Clark, Clinton, Cochran, Colahan, Comstock, Corning, Curtis, Daly, Develin, T. W. Dwight, Endress, Evans, Ferry, Fowler, Francis, Goodrich, Hatch, Harris, Hardenburgh, Hitchman, Kernan, Ketcham, Krum, Larremore, Law, Magee, Mattice, McDonald, Monell, More, Morris, Murphy, Opdyke, Paige, Pond, Robertson, Roy, A. D. Russell, Seymour, Schell, Schoonmaker, Schumaker, Silvester, Strong, Tappan, M. I. Townsend, S. Townsend, Van Campen, Verplanck, Weed—61.

Noes—Messrs. A. F. Allen, Andrews, Archer, Ballard, Barker, Beadle, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. P. Brooks, E. A. Brown, W. C. Brown, Carpenter, Case, Cheritree, Chesebro, Church, Cooke, Duganne, C. C. Dwight, Eddy, Ely, Flagler, Folger, Frank, Gerry, Grant, Graves, Greeley, Gross, Hadley, Hale, Hammond, Hand, Hitchcock, Houston, Huntington, Hutchins, Jarvis, Kinney, London, Lapham, A. Lawrence, M. H. Lawrence, Lee, Lowry, Ludington, Merrill, Merritt, Merwin, Miller, C. E. Parker, Potter, President, Prosser, Rathbun, Reynolds, Rolfe, Root, Rumsey, L. W. Russell, Seaver, Sheldon, Sherman, Smith, Stratton, Tucker, Van Cott, Wakeman, Wales, Williams—71.

Mr. SHERMAN offered the following amendment to the resolution.

Add thereto the following:

"Such sessions to be for debate only in Committee of the Whole, on the subject now pending before it."

Mr. BELL — I do not see that the amendment changes the terms of the resolution, which were to confine the proposed evening session to the discussion of the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and under which, should we reach the termination of this debate this afternoon, the resolution would be inoperative; but as the amendment does not alter the terms of the resolution, I will accept it.

Mr. ALVORD — The reason of my moving that the resolution be laid on the table was for the purpose of avoiding any debate in regard to the question. It seems to me if gentlemen will reflect for a moment on the position we occupy in reference to our business here, they will not now vote for this resolution. Whenever any of the committees of this Convention, which are charged with certain duties, shall submit a report to this Convention, or shall be ready to submit a report, it will be well enough then to get through with the discussion of this question as soon as possible. But in the mean time, we are employing ourselves in the evening in discharging our duties in committees, and are thus better engaged than we could be listening to debate on this question. It seems to me eminently proper that until the time shall arrive when there will be further business prepared for us by committees of the Convention, we should not thus hurry in regard to this matter. For this reason and this reason only, I am against evening sessions. There are quite a number of committees and sub-committees who are compelled to hold their sessions outside the sessions of this Convention and those meetings take a large amount of time. In the case of the committees, of which I am a member, my labors are very onerous, so much so that I am compelled to be employed from four o'clock in the afternoon until twelve o'clock at night, and if I am not authorized so to do, I feel that I shall have to do work of that kind in the small hours of the morning, which are, at least, required for sleep. I, therefore, hope, while I shall be perfectly willing that evening sessions may be had for proceedings in Committee of the Whole, or that our sessions shall be lengthened out when the necessity exists, that we shall not now so tie ourselves up in reference to the business we must do in committee as to pass this resolution.

Mr. KERNAN — I concur fully with what the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], has said. The important thing for the successful progress of this Convention, it seems to me is, that the committees shall have an opportunity to deliberate upon, and perfect the propositions which they shall report; and until they do so, we have not a great deal to do, probably, in the Convention. The committee to which I belong is holding meetings in the morning and again in the evening and they desire to continue to do so. It is a large committee and whenever any committee is ready to report, this Convention has it in its power to shorten this debate upon the subject now before it. I think that for the present, one session a day to debate the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage is as much as can be profitably spent. We had better allow gentlemen of the committee to meet and consult and perfect their work in the evening, as I believe they are very generally doing it.

Mr. REYNOLDS — I voted against the motion to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] on the table, for the reason that I supposed the holding of evening sessions would tend to shorten the labors of this Convention, by hastening the conclusion of this debate. But if it is true that the evenings are required by committees, who have a large amount of labor to perform, then I shall vote against the resolution. Having myself no committee work to perform, it is entirely immaterial to me individually, but I should feel bound to vote so as to accommodate those gentlemen who hold the laboring oar in this Convention.

Mr. BELL — I do not wish, of course, to embarrass the action of committees; neither do I wish to protract our sessions beyond a necessary length. I offered this resolution for the purpose of facilitating and shortening the session of this Convention. It is stated by several committees that they will be ready to report as soon as this question shall be disposed of by the Convention; but during the long discussions that this question is likely to elicit, they of course, see no particular object for hastening their reports. It will occur to every one, from what we have seen during the discussion on this subject, that many gentlemen are still prepared to give their views on it, and that they have, as far as can be ascertained without hearing from them, prepared themselves to speak. It was for the purpose of enabling them to express their views, and of saying here what they desire, that I proposed evening sessions. In regard to the work of the committees, sir, this resolution does not interfere with their afternoon work. It is known that most of committee work is done in the afternoon—that committees meet mainly in the morning or afternoon, and with the exception of a few sub-committees, I do not know of any that hold evening sessions. In fact, it can be so arranged that committees may do all their work in the afternoon. It must be apparent that this Convention will not hasten its labors as it might do without holding evening sessions. I hope, therefore, that the resolution may prevail and that gentlemen may have an opportunity of fully expressing themselves on this subject. The terms of the resolution only require that evening sessions should be held during the pendency of the debate on this particular question in Committee of the Whole. Whenever this debate terminates, of course, the operation of the resolution will be terminated by its own provisions. Let us try it during the further debate on this question, and then, if it does not work well, of course, we can abandon it.

Mr. GREELEY — I desire to hear the resolution read as it now stands.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. GREELEY — I object to the resolution, because I am satisfied from the experience we had here last night, that it will accomplish no good end. Let this body advertise that no votes will be taken, and you will not have one-half of the members present, and gentlemen will decline to speak, as a gentleman last night did, because there was a want of a quorum, and your meetings will amount to nothing. It seems to me that most of our committees might well have reported before this time. I believe many of them are ready to report, and are about to do so, and therefore I move to amend the resolution by striking out, all after the word "Resolved," and inserting in place thereof, "That from and after Monday next, this Convention will meet daily at 9 o'clock A. M." I think it would be far better to have our debates in the morning, so that they may be reported and printed in the papers of the next morning, and that would give us time in the evening for committees. I trust most of the committees will report by next Monday, except one or two of the most important; and by meeting then at nine o'clock we can accomplish a good day's work, and not merely in talking but voting.

Mr. TAPPEN — I am at present opposed to any action at this Convention looking toward the holding of any extra sessions during the day or evening. I have found that my most profitable hours have been spent in the performance of committee work. It is there that we are obliged to learn the details of the business for which we are assembled. There we are to become familiar with the features of the institutions of this State upon which this Convention is to pass, and judging from the fate that seems to have met the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, it seems to me that other standing committees had better take some time in studying the subjects intrusted to them. I judge from the debate which has been had in this Convention on the report of that committee, that the committee hurried through with the business instead of properly considering it. Therefore, I hope this Convention will take abundant time for the performance of its duties in committees, and for that reason, I am opposed for the present to any meeting of the Convention earlier than 11 o'clock.

Mr. BARTO—I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], by substituting the hour of ten o'clock instead of nine.

The question was then put on the amendment of Mr. Barto, and it was declared lost.

The question was then put on the substitute offered by Mr. Greeley, and it was declared lost.

Mr. SILVESTER—I am very much in favor of expediting the business of this Convention, and for that reason I voted to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Jefferson [Mr. Bell] on the table. I understand the fact to be, as was stated by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Alvord], that very many committees are occupied very laboriously in the discharge of their duties, and that the time which can be most profitably occupied by them is in the evening. If we intrench upon that time, and force them to take other hours for the discharge of these duties, it will inevitably result in the postponement of their reports to a later day than the day that their reports could be presented if they can have the evenings to perform their work. I trust, sir, that the resolution will not be adopted, and that our sessions will remain as they have done until some of the committees are ready to report and then I am willing for one, as a member of the Convention, to commence our sessions in the morning at nine o'clock or ten o'clock, and continue until three, and to have an evening session as well, if necessary. But as long as there is no report from any other committee before the Convention, to be considered, it seems to me that the plan of holding evening sessions will only be a premium upon additional speech making.

Mr. CASE—I offer the following amendment: Strike out "half-past seven o'clock" and insert "four o'clock."

Mr. TAPPEN—I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. BELL—I rise to a point of order. Is it now in order to move to lay on the table after the vote having been taken?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair understands it to be a different proposition.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Tappen, and it was declared carried.

Mr. KBUM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the State be divided into forty-three assembly districts, as near as may be, equal in population, not dividing counties, in each of which three members of assembly having the largest number of votes shall be declared elected, but no elector shall vote for more than two members; the Legislature to provide by law for the case of a tie between the two highest among the minority.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the substitute offered by Mr. Murphy to the substitute offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight, which had been accepted by Mr. Folger in lieu of the amendment offered by him.

Mr. GERRY—Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Artell] has the floor.

Mr. AXTELL—I propose to discuss very briefly the question which is before this house on the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. I have thought that this discussion has been forced upon us prematurely, with all due respect to the gentleman, that it was an untimely amendment—the discussion of the proposition of submitting something before we had anything to submit. I am, however, against the amendment for this reason; first, because I wish this question closed. I wish this question in regard to the rights and privileges of the negro closed. It has been a subject of discussion for many years. The distinguished gentleman who was on the floor of this House by the courtesy of the Convention the other day [Chief Justice Chase], remarked to me, while the gentleman from Kings was advocating his anti-democratic proposition that twenty-two years ago he advocated the proposition of admitting negroes to the elective franchise on the same terms with the white man. Twenty-two years have rolled by with all their mighty events, and still this question in one of its forms and aspects is before us. If this Convention shall strike the distinction of color from the Constitution, if the members of this Convention of all parties, shall say, to-day, that this proposition shall go down to the people in the body of the Constitution, the question is closed. There will be no further discussion of the subject of negro rights and negro privileges in this State. Are gentlemen willing to do this? There has been a vast amount of discussion that I have heard by gentlemen of that political faith, and a frequent expression of their wish and desire that this subject should be closed. Now, I ask them to show their sincerity in this matter. I assume that they are sincere, and do wish the question closed. The gentleman must know that if this proposition is placed in the body of the Constitution, and the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] does not prevail, and if it does not prevail by the common consent of all parties there will be no further political issue on this question. I am in favor then of placing this proposition in the body of the Constitution, and against the amendment of the gentleman from Kings, because I want the question closed. I wish it taken from party issues. I wish that it be not confused by party issues. I wish that it be not confused by a separate submission. Who does not know that this proposition of separately submitting this question tends directly to confuse the whole subject. Gentlemen have stated here that a separate submission would relieve the subject from its embarrassments, and would place it distinctly before the people. But such is not the fact. That may be their theory. Sir, what is this question, this question that is to go to the people, if the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] prevails? What is it? It is a question whether the negro shall be relieved from the odious distinction of the property qualification, and whether he shall be admitted to the exercise of the elective franchise on the same terms as the white man. It is not a question of admitting the negro to the elective franchise. That question is already settled, and has been settled, too, by the vote of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] himself, for I have no doubt that he voted for the Constitution of 1846, and that he recognized the right of the negro to participate in the elective franchise. The question was settled long ago, not only by the vote of the gentleman from Kings, but before that day. Negroes have been admitted to the exercise of the elective franchise ever since we have been a State. But though that question is settled, who does not know that another question would be raised, that those gentlemen would go before their constituents with the cry that we were proposing to admit negroes to the exercise of the elective franchise. The gentleman himself has been confused in regard to the subject. He proposed an amendment in regard to this property qualification—an amendment which proposes to separately submit to the people the question of retaining in the Constitution an anti-democratic distinction, and then he goes off into a discussion of the subject of the inferiority of the negro—and the general subject of whether the negro should be admitted to the exercise of the elective franchise. If that gentleman, with all the acuteness of his intellect, and his keenness of perception is confused, what can be expected of those of us who are common people, but that we shall be confused? And so in regard to the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] who, on this same proposition goes off into a discussion of the terrible effects that are to be brought on society by admitting negroes to the elective franchise in the Southern States, and also in regard to the idea of social equality as did the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. These are the issues that will be placed before the people instead of the real issues, and here in a paper that has been laid on our desks to-day by the State Rights Association there is the same stale putting forth of this idea that we are proposing a new doctrine; that we are proposing to enfranchise the negro for the first time; that we are proposing to bring him into a condition of social equality. We say, then, that we oppose this amendment because it would confuse the people and tend to perpetuate these party prejudices and party strifes that have been injurious, to some extent, to the interests of the people of this State. Another reason why I am opposed to this amendment or why I am in favor of the converse proposition of this amendment is, that if this question is submitted to the people in the Constitution the proposition will certainly be carried. Is not that a good reason?—It will certainly be carried. It will not place in jeopardy any other interest, but the Constitution will be carried with this in it. The learned gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Comstock] the other day spoke in favor of this amendment, and the only salient point in his argument was a fact connected with the submission of the Constitution of Massachusetts to the people, in which he showed conclusively that the idea of separate submission is inconsistent ordinarily with the triumph of any proposition; The Constitution of Massachusetts was submitted in nine propositions; but every one of them was defeated. I ask if that is not an argument against separate submission? for there were undoubtedly some good propositions embraced in those nine propositions. Is not that a good argument why we should not make a separate submission of this proposition? We advocate this proposition because we think it ought to be carried, and we mean to give it the best possible chance of success. As I have said we want this question settled; we desire that the people act in the bestowment of the elective franchise, not upon a whim or a prejudice, but upon a great general principle, and that great principle the principle that has been acknowledged, with this exception, by those who act with the gentleman from Kings, as well as by those with whom I act—the principle of manhood suffrage, the principle of equal rights. I proposed a question to the gentleman [Mr. Nelson] who was discussing this subject the other day as to whether the people should be governed by a whim or a prejudice or by a great general principle in conferring the right to exercise the elective franchise, and he promised to answer it, but he really did not. However, I suppose that any gentleman will admit that the people should be governed in their political action by great general principles instead of prejudices or whims. But in the argument of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson], and in the arguments of all the gentlemen who have spoken in support of this amendment; in the arguments that have been made against extending the elective franchise, the only principle that has been advanced is the rule, or the whim if you please to call it so, requiring two hundred and fifty dollars to be in the possession of a colored man before he should be permitted to vote. The great general principle is this: Two hundred and fifty dollars in real estate, and the colored man is entitled to vote. This is the great general principle. Now, we propose to settle this question on the great general principle of equal rights, on the right of a man to vote, because he is a man. Now, perhaps, this may be said to be a point of honor—we admit that it is a point of honor with us to place this in the Constitution. But it is a point of honor which is founded upon our belief in a great general principle, and not upon a prejudice. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour] told us the other day that there were higher questions than this question; far higher and broader in their range, and yet, sir, I do not know of any question higher than the rights of citizens. I do not know of any question higher than the question of the rights of the men who obey the government and maintain the government, and are a part of the body politic. The gentleman at the same time showed his sensitiveness with regard to the rights of another class of citizens. He told us that if the rights of one man of a certain class were placed in jeopardy, or if we were by our action here to take away the rights of one man of a certain class, he would vote against the whole action of the Convention in every proposition of the Constitution. That, I suppose, is a point of honor with him. He believes in the right of the poor man, he tells us, and he believes in the right of a certain class that have not yet acquired full citizenship, and rather than the rights of one of those persons should be sacrificed, he says that he would live one hundred years under the present Constitution, and oppose all the great beneficent reforms that we hope to inaugurate in this Constitutional Convention; still, sir, I think that the rights of one class of citizens are equally to be respected with the rights of those who have not yet become citizens. We do not propose, and have not proposed, to make this a party question. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], the other day said, referring to myself and those who act with me, that the gentleman seemed disposed to make this a party question, but we do not propose to make it a party question. As I have already said we desire to take it from partisan associations and send it before the people with a fair chance to succeed, and to send it before them in such a way that no partisan issue can be raised upon it. Therefore, we are opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. It seems to me there has been a party question raised. I have thought that when this amendment was first proposed it was simply a graceful retiring from the contest, that it was sep to Cerebus or a tub to the whale, owing to the fact that these gentlemen in their political associations in other days, have been connected with this question, and that a large amount of their political capital has been invested in it. I supposed that simply out of respect to former associations and former prejudices, they had proposed and supported this amendment. But, sir, it seems to me that there is an attempt to make a party issue; to make a party issue on this single proposition of sending this question to the people separately from the main body of the Constitution. With all due deference to the gentlemen it strikes me that that is a narrow platform, a narrow plank, a rotten plank if you please to call it. Has it come to this that a great party with its grand historical associations, and its heritage of illustrious names is reduced to stand upon this narrow platform, of the submission of the question of property qualification, of the possession of two hundred and fifty dollars of freehold by a negro in order to entitle him to vote, to the people. That is their platform. Why then they will recite their political creed in this wise, and come before the people with their creed thus recited. I believe that the negro plus two hundred and fifty dollars of real estate is equal to the white man in political algebra; I believe that a negro plus two hundred and fifty dollars in real estate is a positive and not a negative quantity in the political equation. Is that the proposition? That is the proposition substantially. That is substantially the platform which they make. Has it come to this, that this grand old party, connected with the history of this State, and having an honorable record on most questions, is reduced to stand upon so narrow a plank as that? I believe that a negro man plus two hundred and fifty dollars in real estate—it must be in real estate—he may have a million, or as much as the national debt amounts to in his pocket, but if he has it not in real estate he is a negative quantity—I believe that a negro plus two hundred and fifty dollars in real estate is a positive quantity in the political equation. I am opposed to this amendment, it having taken on this party aspect, for the reason that this gentleman, and those who act with him outside of this Convention, are in favor of it, and that in itself is to me a good reason. It is a good maxim in war never to do what your enemies want you to do, and always to do what they do not want you to do, and this is one reason why I am opposed to this amendment. They want this separate submission, and why? Do they desire that the question should be separately submitted, for the purpose of carrying the proposition? Do they desire that it should be separately submitted so that it can be carried by an overwhelming vote? Is that the purpose? How many of these gentlemen upon this floor will vote for it if it is separately submitted, after it shall be sent down to the people, or up to the people as a gentleman said the other day? Certainly not the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], because he has already told us that he is opposed to the voting of negroes whether with property or without property, although he undoubtedly voted for our present Constitution with the provision in it permitting negroes to vote having a property qualification. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and most of the gentlemen on this floor who are advocating his amendment, will vote against extending the elective franchise to the colored man equally with the white, when the question goes to the people, if it shall go as a separate proposition, a few of them, however, will probably vote for it. But they will vote for it in any event. Do they advocate a separate submission out of respect to the people? The question is to be submitted to the people in any case. It is to be submitted to the people with the body of the Constitution, so that it does not argue any more respect for the will of the people to ask for a separate submission than it does to submit it in the body of the Constitution. I take it, then, that these gentlemen favor this amendment because they wish to defeat the purpose we are aiming at in endeavoring to strike the distinction of color from the Constitution. I trust, sir, that this amendment will not prevail; that there will be made a Constitution so good, that there will be a Constitution with provisions so wise that these gentlemen, by their own judgment, will be compelled to forego whatever prejudices that may have had, and to vote for it as submitted. I trust that the Constitution will be made so wise in its provisions that no gentleman who has any regard for his reputation, or for his record, will be found voting against the Constitution merely because of this old prejudice in regard to color. I have thought, as I have already said, that this amendment was merely a way of gracefully retiring, but by the course of this debate I have been led rather to the conclusion that this is the last spiteful flourish of the mob in the hands of the wrinkled, withered, toothless and powerless old hag of prejudice—the last flourish of the mob in the hands of this old dame, who has been vainly endeavoring to push back the Atlantic ocean.

Mr. GERRY—I have no intention to inflict upon this Convention an argument on the subject of the negro, his qualification for suffrage, nor his "equal" rights. I desire simply to offer a few suggestions upon the latter part of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] in regard to a separate submission of this question to the people of the State of New York. It certainly seems to me that a very large number of the honorable gentlemen, who have exhibited, unquestionably, a great deal of ability in the speeches which they have delivered before this body, have entirely overlooked the fact that its members are not in any sense vested with legislative powers. The people of the State of New York, by selecting them, in a certain sense, as their representative men, have simply directed that they should frame an instrument to be submitted for their consideration and adoption, if they deem it expedient, which shall be unobjectionable in feature, and which clearly should not present any of the objectionable features which formerly existed, even though the objections have now, as it is said, passed away. In fact, the position which is occupied by the gentlemen of this honorable body, and who compose it, is very nearly analogous to that of a member of the legal profession who has submitted to him by his client two previous wills for revision and necessary amendment. He finds, after a very careful examination of the memoranda and the instruments, that there is a gift which has been suggested by a previous legal adviser, but which has been objected to by the client, and rejected. He finds after a careful examination of the memoranda that this has been the case, not once but twice, at intervals, and that on each occasion his client has signified his dissent, and has refused, even by a codicil, to alter the original instrument, which did not contain it. The question then comes up, and I leave it to those gentlemen of the Convention who have the honor to belong to the legal profession, whether, without any other specific instructions from the client, they would feel justified or authorized in inserting in the new will, in case they were to draw one, this grant or gift which had been previously objected to, and thereby subject the entire instrument when presented for execution to the disapproval and rejection, or of the client whether it would not be more expedient and proper to present the will in a form which could not be objectionable, and then to offer in a codicil as a separate amendment to it, the one objectionable feature.

Mr. SMITH—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? In the case supposed, I would wish to enquire of the gentleman whether he would prepare for his client a will and a codicil at the same time and present them to him.

Mr. GERRY—If the original will was one of elaboration and certainly was unobjectionable in every other feature, and there could be no question raised about the propriety of the articles which from the memoranda were incorporated in it, and it was engrossed ready for execution, I should say it would be right, if the counsel had no other opportunity to communicate with his client, because the client could execute the will and the codicil, or either, as he saw fit and his rejection of the codicil would not as a matter of form affect the will. Now the people of the State at the time when through the agency of the Legislature they called this honorable body into being, had certainly some such view in mind; because by the act by which they expressly conferred power upon the Convention to assemble, they anticipated that some one or more of the various amendments which might be proposed to the original instrument, would be objectionable to a portion of their number, and therefore by this organic law, so to speak, they directed that the said amendments or the said Constitution shall be voted upon as a whole, or in such separate propositions as the Convention shall deem practicable, and as the Convention shall by resolution declare. In either case the Convention shall prescribe the form of the ballot, the publication of the amendments or of the Constitution, and the notice to be given of the election. In case the said amendments or parts of the said Constitution shall be voted upon separately, every person entitled to vote thereon may vote for or against any one or more of them. Clearly if there had not been some question, which like the present, has been agitating our country for a number of years, and which the people saw must unquestionably in some form come up before this body, and which if incorporated into the Constitution might defeat its adoption by the popular vote, they would not have instructed their Legislature to pass any such provision as this. Either this amendment providing for a separate submission has some significance, or it has none at all. It is either surplusage in the law, or it is an important element in it. By looking back to the instrument which has called us here together, we find instructions in reference to the subject of a separate submission, and which calls our attention to the fact that questions might arise which would require a separate submission. Can it be urged that this one single question of negro suffrage and so called negro rights which, has excited for years and years so much interest in the nation at large, and which is now presented in one of its manifold forms, is not one of those questions which it was contemplated might and ought to be so submitted. It has been said by some honorable gentlemen of this Convention that if we submit this question separately to the people, the same argument would apply to other questions—that it might as well apply to an amendment which may be proposed in reference to the limitation and restriction of the powers of the Legislature or changes which may be made in questions of finance. But can any of those gentlemen point to one single instance where any one of these questions, or can they refer to any other question which has such a paramount political importance, or which is of such paramount political interest to the State as the one now here presented, that has been before the people on two distinct occasions, and has been each time rejected by them. But it is claimed that there has been a great change in public opinion since either of those votes were taken, and, therefore, we risk nothing in incorporating such an amendment in the Constitution, permitting the negro to vote the same as a white citizen. I desire to answer that by looking at the question as it stands. Here is substantially the same question submitted years ago for adoption to the people twice and by them twice rejected, and a certain number of years has intervened between each submission. On each occasion it has been rejected in almost precisely the same ratio of votes cast against it. If the opinion of the people has undergone the change which is claimed by those who now ask the incorporation of this article in the body of the Constitution, then assuredly there can be no objection to permitting them to vote on it separately. But where it is already shown that they have twice rejected this very article, then the very grave question arises whether the entire labors of this Convention would not be imperiled—nay, absolutely lost in consequence of the rejection of a proposition which the people have already twice rejected. I submit to the consideration of this honorable body whether any instrument which we are about to frame, and which has cost the people of the State of New York a very large amount of money, considering the sums which they have appropriated for the expenses of the present Convention and whether our individual labors in framing this instrument should be imperiled by inserting in it a provision about which there is a grave and serious doubt. I, for one, should be willing to vote for any proposition submitting separately any question which the experience of the past has shown would necessarily or even probably jeopardize and endanger the instrument which we are about to frame, and that is the ground upon which I put my first reason for a separate submission of the question of allowing the negro the right to vote on an equality with the white man.

Mr. AXTELL—If the question were submitted separately to the vote of the people, would you vote in favor of doing away with the property qualification?

Mr. GERRY—It will depend entirely upon the way in which the proposition is submitted when the question comes before the people. I shall then make up my mind on the subject. If the negro is mentally and physically competent to vote equally with the white man, I see no just reason why he should be required to possess a property qualification as a condition precedent to his right to vote; but if not so competent I really do not see how the possession of property would endow him with intellectual ability. We are here, not as a legislative body, and whatever I may do as an individual—as one of the people—when the question comes to be voted on, I consider is entirely different from what I may do when the question is here before us. There is another consideration which I desire to present in favor of this separate submission. The Constitution, when revised by us and reported, undoubtedly will, as shown by indications already in this Convention, effect great vital changes in the government of our cities, in regard to the powers of the Legislature and other matters, which must and will strike a vital blow at the corruption which has flooded her entire State and people. There is not a man who will be injuriously affected by provisions which we may make with this end in view, but will be opposed to any Constitution we may frame, but, of course, the incorporation in it of this proposed clause, will be by them used as a strong argument against its adoption, whereas, if it did not contain this feature no objection to it could be successfully urged by such men against the adoption of the instrument and they would have no object in opposing the separate question. The only reason why kindred propositions, when submitted separately, have been voted down, is, because the people were opposed to them, and the results of such ballot show that the number of votes which were cast against them would have been sufficient to have carried them if the people had been of that mind. There has been another objection urged by gentlemen against a separate submission, and that was the "complexity" and "convolution" of those articles, as the gentlemen from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] termed them. I can tell the gentleman that there have been almost yearly elections in this State, in the city of New York where there are six or seven different tickets voted for as many different offices, and yet there is no difficulty in electing men to those offices. And if a Constitution be submitted to the people, with the submission at the same election on a separate ballot, of the question of the extension of negro suffrage as a separate question, there will not be many men in the State who will discard their ballot for want of understanding what they are voting for. It is an insult to the intelligence of the people. The gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] spoke about the responsibility of this Convention, resting on what he was pleased to call the political party in this Convention which held the majority. And I have seen it stated in the newspapers that there was a political party in this Convention which held the majority, but I have looked in vain in any action which this Convention has taken to indicate the existence of the members or that political majority. There is not a vote of ayes and nays now on file with the Secretary of this Convention where, on inspection, it will not appear that gentlemen who are marked in italics are just as numerous on the side of the ayes as on the side of the noes; and there has not been such a vote taken in which the gentlemen whose names are printed in Roman are not as often found on the one side of a question as those printed in italics. Assuming the honorable gentleman [Mr. Townsend] to be a leader of the political majority to which he refers; and I infer that he is, not being versed in the politics of the party to which he belongs, but assuming it from the positive import of his argument which he made the other day that he was one of its leaders, I do not really see that there is anything to indicate that that political majority as such, is disposed to cast its vote either one way or the other on this question. This Convention is not, in any sense, a political body. I do not know of any exception to the statement I have made. I do not know of a single other question of a political nature that can possibly arise in reference to an amendment of the Constitution. If this Convention is governed by a political body, it certainly is a little singular that the majority of that political body has not, so far as my information goes, held a caucus since the Convention was organized. There has been throughout our sessions the same line of argument pursued by gentlemen belonging to both the Republican and Democratic parties. They have voted harmoniously side by side, for and against the incurring of expenses, in reference to the subject of canals, and even for and against the rule of the previous question. They are now in this very Committee of the Whole speaking side by side for or against the adoption of this very amendment that is now pending before the house, and the views of the gentleman from Rensselaer in regard to political responsibility, I fear, strongly resemble his historical reminiscences of the State of Massachusetts, from which he was pleased to say the other day that both his ancestors and mine came. In answer to a question proposed by me, he said:

"I came from a State that was proud to call its great democrat, who held prominent position, by—the name of my friend who has just interrupted me [Mr. Gerry], and in that State, neither then nor now, have we ever had any jealousy of the negro; and neither his ancestors nor mine have ever felt any fear that, in a fair contest, the negro would get the advantage in the race of life. Now it is a little singular that in this very State of Massachusetts in the year 1788, on the 25th day of March—after the Declaration of Independence, there was an act passed entitled "An act for suppressing and punishing of rogues, vagabonds, common beggars, and other idle, disorderly and lewd persons." That law provided as follows:

"No person being an African or negro, other than a subject of the Emperor of Morocco, or a citizen of some one of the United States (to be evidenced by a certificate from the Secretary of the State of which he shall be a citizen), shall tarry within this Commonwealth, for a longer time than two months, and upon complaint made to any justice of the peace, within this Commonwealth, that any such person has been within the same more than two months, the said justice shall order the said person to depart out of this Commonwealth, and in case that the said African or negro shall not depart as aforesaid, any justice of the peace within this Commonwealth, upon complaint and proof made that such person has continued within this Commonwealth ten days after notice given him or her to depart as aforesaid, shall commit the said person to any house of correction within the county, there to be kept to hard labor, agreeable to the rules and orders of the said house, until the Sessions of the Peace, next to be holden within and for the said county." And this act remained upon the statute book, unrepealed, until the year 1834.

Mr. GOULD—Will the gentleman inform me what book he is reading from?

Mr. GERRY—I am reading from Mr. Moore's History of Slavery in Massachusetts, pages 228 and 231, the author being George H. Moore, who is the present Secretary of the New York State Historical Society. He has given references to the original volume being "the earliest classified edition of the 'perpetual laws of the commonwealth of Massachusetts.'" Even in 1780 the negroes were not allowed to vote, for in that year they presented a petition, in which they use this language:

"Your petitioners further show, that we apprehend ourselves to be aggrieved, in that while we are not allowed the privilege of freemen of the State, having no vote or influence in the election of those that tax us, yet many of our color (as is well known), have cheerfully entered the field of battle in the defense of the common cause, and that (as we conceive) against a similar exertion of power (in regard to taxation), too well known to need a recital in this place." But there was another part of the answer of the gentleman from Rensselaer in answer to my question, which seemed to be rather more forcible than it was delicate. He said,

"I said I was opposed to the mingling of the races, particularly in regard to its effect on posterity, and my friend puts that upon the ground of intermarriage. I will say to my friend [Mr. Gerry], another thing, I am opposed to that illicit concubinage practiced by that party at the South, to which my friend belongs, which has scattered a black and white posterity over the Southern States, until any field of the so-called African population, looks like a race of what are called skunk blackbirds. Sir, there is no danger of the intermingling of the race by a man who respects his own blood."

Unfortunately for the gentleman's argument, the State of Massachusetts by a law passed in 1705, Chap. 6. "for the better preventing of the spurious and mixed issue, punishes negroes and mulattoes for improper intercourse with the whites, by selling them out of the province." It is a somewhat singular fact that the State of Massachusetts as far back as the year 1705, should have set the example of "illicit concubinage" with negroes which the gentleman complains was only practiced in the southern States by the party to which he says I belong. What difficulty can there be in this Convention submitting separately any plain, deliberate, unqualified questions to the people of this State, such as the question whether the people of the State will or will not do away with the distinction of color. There would be one advantage unquestionably gained to those who favor—

Mr. AXTELL—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. GERRY—Certainly, but I would prefer the gentleman should wait till I finish this line of argument, I will then answer him with pleasure. I do not believe there will be a single objection made or a single vote given here against the question of separate submission. The advocates of negro suffrage will have the proposition presented to the people as an unanimous one, if this Convention submits it to them without objection or question, whereas, if they submit it inserted — this Constitution, no matter how vital or radical may be the changes made in the government of the State, it is, as previous history has shown at the risk of having the entire Constitution destroyed by the vote of the people. Indeed, if the principles which are here advocated by members of the republican party, and that party has a majority in the State, I, for one, am at a loss to conceive why their representatives here fear to have the proposition separately submitted to them. If, on the other hand, the body of the people are adverse to it, there is no reason to believe they will be persuaded to vote for an amendment or a Constitution which is objectionable, especially when as I have shown there are many men who will be injuriously affected by other changes, and who will undoubtedly use this powerful argument against the adoption of the Constitution, that contains this obnoxious feature—a clause which is sufficient to ruin it. It seems to me then that there is after all no valid objection to the submission of this question as a single, separate, and distinct proposition, to the people who have sent us here, and that it rests with them and not with us, whether the negro shall be allowed to vote on the same equality with the white man, and that the responsibility is not on this Convention, but on the people of the State of New York.

Mr. HALE — I would ask before I proceed to make any remarks, that the amendment now pending shall be read by the Secretary, that I may understand it.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. Murphy.

Mr. MURPHY — Will the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Halé] give way for a moment and enable me to make a verbal correction in the substitute offered by myself.

Mr. HALE — Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY — I inadvertently made use of the word persons, instead of the word men, in the latter part of the substitute proposed by myself. I wish to correct it, so that it shall read "then all men of color shall be entitled to vote," and add to the end "subject to the other qualifications and restrictions which are imposed upon other electors."

There being no objection the amendment was allowed.

Mr. HALE — Mr. Chairman, I called for the reading of the amendment, because in looking over the debates since it was offered, as I have been deprived of the pleasure of listening to them, I thought I discovered that gentlemen were taking a pretty wide range of debate, and that the subject which was properly before the Convention, was not the one which was discussed by many of the gentlemen who have spoken. I make this remark, not with the view of criticising the course of gentlemen of the Convention, but merely to state that I shall pursue a course which in my judgment is the proper one to be taken upon this discussion, and that is to confine myself mainly to the question raised by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kings. I am opposed to that amendment, but not for the reasons, however, that have been held by many gentlemen who have spoken here. I am opposed to it, because I dislike the form in which the gentleman proposes to submit this question to the people of this State. I am in favor of a separate submission. I am in favor of it as a friend of this change; and I confess that I cannot comprehend the motives which can influence gentlemen who entertain the same views I do on the main question, in opposing so strenuously as they do a proposition to give to the people of this State an opportunity to say distinctly, and without being compelled to vote upon any other question, at the same time, whether or not they will extend the elective franchise, or rather whether or not they will abolish the remaining property qualification. I say I am opposed to this amendment. The reasons for which I am opposed to it are these: this amendment proposes to embody the submission in the article of the Constitution itself. I think that is an awkward mode, and moreover, I think that is a way in which we are not authorized to submit it under the act of the Legislature by which we are here convened. By turning to the 5th section of that act I find that it is provided that "The said amendments or Constitution shall be submitted by the Convention to the people, for their adoption or rejection, at the next general election, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday of November next, and every person hereby entitled to vote for delegates may, at that election, vote on such adoption or rejection, in the election district in which he shall then reside, and not elsewhere. The said amendments or the said Constitution shall be voted upon as a whole, or in such separate propositions as the Convention shall deem practicable, and as the Convention shall by resolution declare" now the work of this Convention, as I understand it, is to propose a Constitution for the acceptance of the people of this State. It is not to propose to them simply a way in which they can alter the Constitution, but we are here, and it is our duty to express our opinions, and to embody our views in the Constitution to be submitted to the people, whether they will indorse those views or not. That is one reason why I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. Another is, as a friend of this measure, I am opposed to that form of this amendment because it would give the weight of the recommendation of this Convention against the proposed change. By it, as I understand it, he proposes that we enact that this old property qualification as respects men of color shall remain, and we give the people an opportunity by their votes to strike it out. My course would be just the reverse of this. I would say that we frame a Constitution which should leave this property qualification out and thus abolish the distinction which is made there between the white race and the black, and leave it to the people, if they choose to do it, to put it in again. I would leave the laboring oar where it belongs, with those who seek to retain in the Constitution a provision which this Convention believes it right should be stricken out, with those who seek to take an exception to the proposition which we make, and say that we will, while indorsing this Constitution as a whole, strike out one of its provisions. And another reason why I am opposed to the adoption of such an amendment now is the one that has been suggested here, that this discussion is somewhat premature. We certainly cannot decide with intelligence how we will submit amendments that we propose until we decide whether we will have anything to submit, or what we shall submit. I should not have participated in this discussion had not this question arisen; but as it has arisen, and gentlemen have expressed their views, and inasmuch as the views I entertain differ very essentially from those of most of those who advocate this change, I deem it proper to express those views. I propose to consider first the reasons why I am in favor of enabling the people to pass distinctly and separately upon the proposition. In doing this I shall first advert to some objections that have been made to such separate submission, and then give my affirmative reasons for my opinion, and after I have done that, I shall suggest, not for the action of this Convention, but for its consideration, a form by which, I think, all the objections, or most of them, which have been made to the form of this submission, may be obviated. The first gentleman who objected to a separate submission was the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage [Mr. Greeley]. As I find, from the newspapers—for I was not present when he made his remarks on the subject—he objected to it for reasons which I will read. He says:

"Gentlemen must be aware that such submissions tend not only to confuse, but to alienate the people. If we should go to the people with a Constitution submitted in pieces, it would almost certainly be voted down. I am opposed to all proposals for separate submissions, because, if the plan is adopted, the people will vote down the Constitution which we shall submit to them."

Here we have something which looks very much like a prophecy. The gentleman tells us that if we submit this Constitution separately, or submit a separate proposition, the people will vote it down. Sir, however great are the attainments of the gentleman [Mr. Greeley], and I do not question them, I have yet to learn that he is either a prophet or the son of a prophet, although I am aware that it is said that in many sections of the country the Journal with which his name is connected is regarded as equivalent to both the old and new Testaments; yet I have never been quite able to acquiesce in the correctness of that opinion, and I am inclined to think that the gentleman goes a little beyond the record when he says that this Constitution will fail if it is submitted separately. He states it with much positiveness and distinctness, but yet he states something that he does not know, and I take the liberty of believing that in that opinion the distinguished gentleman is mistaken. I think that if this Constitution is submitted as it ought to be—if it is submitted so as to give the people an opportunity to take what they like and reject what they do not like, that they will act in conformity with their opinions and principles. And I have confidence in the principles of the people of this State that they will sustain this change which we shall propose to be made in regard to the property qualification of electors. Again, the distinguished gentleman [Mr. Greeley] says that the people will say "If the Convention is capable of making a Constitution, let them present one, and we are capable of deciding whether we like it or not." I would ask the gentleman if he does not think that the people are capable of saying, "We like a part of the Constitution which is proposed, but we do not like the whole of it." I have more faith in the people than the gentleman has. I believe they are capable of distinguishing between the different parts and saying, "Some provisions we like, and some provisions we do not like." It is because of my faith in the people, and because of my belief that if this question is submitted separately, it will be decided affirmatively by the people that I advocate a separate submission. The gentleman also says, that he has known of Constitutions to be submitted in this way and that they have been defeated. Admitting the statement of the gentleman, which I have no doubt is correct, although I have no information in regard to it, I am not aware that it proves anything. It shows that the people, when the questions have been submitted, have disapproved of the proposed changes. If the gentleman would produce here the questions which have been submitted, if he could make us acquainted with all the circumstances attending the submission, and could show that the people rejected Constitutions which they desired and which they should have adopted, that is one thing; but the mere fact that the people have, in cases where there has been a separate submission, sometimes rejected Constitutions, is no indication as to what will be done in this case. All this prophecy of defeat upon a separate submission, is the most dictum in the world. It is not argument. It is a mere matter of opinion. If gentlemen believe as they profess to believe, and I think correctly, that the people of this State are in favor of abolishing this property qualification, which is left in our Constitution as applied to men of color, I cannot see any reason why they should raise this issue, why they should allow our opponents on this measure to place us in the false position of trying to deceive the people, or rather of trying to withhold from the people the power which belongs to them, instead of meeting the question squarely and saying we will make a distinct proposition—we will meet our opponents before the people at the polls, and as we trust, will beat them there. This question, Mr. Chairman, is one that has been considered before, and I propose to read a very brief extract from a work which I presume has been brought to the notice of all the members of this Convention—a work upon Constitutional Conventions which has certainly been prepared with a great deal of care, and which shows in it a great deal of discrimination, research and judgment. I know the author to be a gentleman of sound judgment, great learning, and eminently qualified for a work of this kind; I refer to the work on Constitutional Conventions by Judge Jameson, of Chicago. Upon page 469, § 515, he says:

"A Constitution may be wholly new, or it may be an old one revised by adding to its material provisions. It may, also, in a hundred separate subdivisions, contain but a fourth of that number of distinct topics, or each subdivision may be substantive and independent. It is obvious that the submitting body, weighing accurately the public sense, may determine whether the whole Constitution must stand or fall as a unit, or whether some parts, being adopted, and going into effect without the rest, the new system would be adequate to the exigencies of the State, and may submit it as a whole or in parts accordingly. But it is perfectly clear that every distinct proposition, not vital to the scheme as a whole, or to some other material part, ought to be separately submitted."

Then in a note at the bottom of page 470, is a quotation from the veto message of the Council of Revision of this State, in November, 1820, in which they objected to a bill providing for submitting the Constitution, because the proposition was to submit the amendments in a mass and not in separate articles. They object to the proposed bill:

"Because the bill contemplates an amended Constitution to be submitted to the people, to be adopted or rejected in toto, without prescribing any mode by which a discrimination may be made between such provisions as shall be deemed salutary, and such as shall be disapproved by the judgment of the people; if the people are competent to pass upon the entire amendments, of which there can be no doubt, they are equally competent to adopt such of them as they approve, and to reject such as they disapprove; and this undoubted right of the people is the more important, if the Convention is to be called in the first instance without a previous consultation of the pure and original source of all legitimate authority."

There may be cases with regard to the separate submission of a proposition, where it would be injudicious, as in the cases referred to by this author, where the Constitution is so interwoven with various provisions that you cannot separate one from the rest without marring the symmetry of the whole. This, I submit, is the only reason which can be given for not separating every important change or proposition. There are only two objections to such submission in any case: first, the one I have suggested, that it may be a part of a comprehensive whole, which, if one part is taken out and away from the rest, will leave the others imperfect. Second, that it will lead so much into detail as to cause confusion and complexity. As to the first objection, if it ever does exist, I think it is clear it does not apply to this case. A question as to who shall be the electors of the State cannot in the nature of things, be so interwoven in this Constitution, that a decision whether the amendment which we may make on that subject shall remain in the Constitution, will affect it as a complete and entire instrument. Certainly the submission of one proposition will not lead to complexity. I am not prepared to say there will not be others, as we have so many propositions for amendments and changes: there may be other provisions which this Convention will deem it best to submit separately to the people within certain limits, and it will be eminently proper, if the changes proposed shall be very radical and very great, that the people shall have the opportunity to pass upon them distinctly and separately. Another objection was made by the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. E. Brown] who apprehended there was danger that some might withhold their votes in favor of this change, from apathy. There is some force in this, but I think it can be entirely obviated by a proper mode of submission, and I shall suggest a plan before I get through, which, I think, if adopted will obviate any such objection. Another objection, raised by the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett]—if it can be called an objection—to this separate submission was that it savors of cowardice and compromise. I confess, sir, I am astonished that such an objection should be made to such a submission to the people—cowardice, to call upon the people to say directly and plainly whether they will or will not retain this restriction upon the right of suffrage? "Cowardice," because we do not require the people when they say that, to reject or adopt with it the amendment which is proposed to the judiciary system, or the amendment which is proposed for a system of finance, and to vote in the same way on them as on the suffrage amendment? It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, with great respect and deference to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], that if there is any cowardice, if there is any compromise, it is that which undertakes to confuse this matter, and compel the people to swallow the whole of what we give them, or to take none of it. Again, sir, my distinguished friend from Columbia [Mr. Gould] for whom I entertain the very greatest respect, made the remark according to the reports in the papers, that it would be an insult to the people to submit this proposition separately. I confess I cannot see how it is an insult to the people, to say to them, "Instead of having merely the opportunity of rejecting or adopting it all, you may, if you choose, select out what you wish and leave the rest." We generally, as individuals, regard it as a privilege if we are allowed to pick out and choose; and it strikes me that the insult is in undertaking to crowd everything we may see fit to put into this Constitution, down the throats of the people, or else to have them reject it all. Suppose we, as very likely we may, adopt some provisions which are distasteful to the people; suppose for instance, that the system of judiciary which may be proposed should be distasteful to the people; are we to say to them: "you must adopt this system just as we have given it to you, or you cannot extend the suffrage?" As was stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gerry] who preceded me, undoubtedly there are a large body of men in this State who will be injuriously affected by some amendments that are proposed to this Constitution; it is within the bounds of possibility that some distinguished gentlemen who now hold lucrative offices, will, by the action of this Convention, providing it is ratified by the people, find themselves without them. Shall we say to those men: You cannot oppose that part of the Constitution which injuriously effects your interests, unless you will at the same time forego your wish to extend the right of suffrage—if you have any such wish? Shall we invite the hostility of these gentlemen who are interested in retaining their offices—if there are any such—as it is most likely, judging by what we see of the operation of human nature, that they will oppose this part of the Constitution by which their office is to be terminated. Shall we say to them, in order to do that, you have also got to oppose us upon this question of the extension of the rights of suffrage. Such will be the inevitable result if you say this Constitution is to be submitted as a whole, and shall not be taken up separately and distinctly. Now, having considered these objections, I propose to state very briefly some of the reasons which induce me to think this is eminently a proper matter to be submitted separately to the people. The first reason is this amendment, unlike any other, probably, that we shall propose, is one which asks the sovereign rulers of this country, the legal voters therein, to surrender a part of their power. It strikes me with great deference to those gentlemen here who have argued so eloquently and learnedly on the natural right of suffrage, that that has nothing whatever to do with this question. The fact is we are here representing certain legal voters of this State. We are sent here by their votes, and whatever our action is, it has to be passed upon by them, and unless it is approved by them, it goes for nothing. Here is an amendment by which we ask these men whom we represent here, to admit into participation with their power, a certain class which has heretofore been excluded. I am, as I said before, in favor of such surrender and of giving such participation—

Mr. AXTELL—Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is conferring the franchise upon persons, who have not hitherto exercised the franchise, a surrender of power? And, when a young man comes of age and becomes an elector, does that imply a surrender of power on the part of the other electors?

Mr. HALE—If the learned gentleman would put but one question at a time I will endeavor to answer him more clearly. I would inquire which question the gentleman wishes me to answer first?

Mr. AXTELL—I think they both involve the same principle.

Mr. HALE—I differ with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. HAND—I wish to ask the gentleman a question. He has stated that the question of the qualities of the negro has nothing to do with this subject. Now, we propose to extend the suffrage to a class who have not hitherto enjoyed it, and we are met by the objection that they have qualities such as make it impracticable and wrong. I ask has that nothing to do with this discussion?

Mr. HALE—My answer to the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], will be, that in my judgment all the remarks which have been made with regard to the race or the capacity of the colored man, on both sides, have been irrelevant to the main question. My view is that the remarks made by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], trying to prove that the colored race were not the proper recipients of the right of suffrage, were irrelevant, for the reason that I consider that the people of this State are estopped from denying that colored men have capacity to vote. Men of color have always been allowed to vote in this State, and the question is a question of retention, or non-retention of the property qualification, and it is for that reason I think the remarks in regard to the natural right to vote, with great deference to those distinguished gentlemen who have discussed the question, and upon the distinction between the black and white races, were irrelevant. The State of New York has always admitted this class to vote, within certain limits, as I shall proceed to show more fully presently. Then, sir, to reply a little more fully to the question of my friend from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], it is clearly a surrender of power for us who now wield the power of this State to elect its officers, to say that another class who do not wield that power, shall come in and exercise it. And it is the same in the case of the young man coming of age. But that is one of the matters settled by our present system; we have all agreed to make that surrender to those young men who are following in our footsteps when they come of age. The Constitution already in existence provides that every male citizen, when he reaches the age of twenty-one, shall come forward and take his part in administering the government; it also provides that men of color, unless possessed of this property qualification, shall not have this right. I therefore insist that it is clearly a surrender of power, where those of us who now yield this power, to tell that class which has heretofore been disqualified, to come in and wield this power equally with us. Can there be a question more eminently proper to submit to the people than this? We are sent here, and our action is to be revised by those whom the Constitution now makes the legal voters—we are of that class ourselves. We have our views in regard to it. I think a large majority of this Convention are, and certainly I myself am, strongly in favor of making this surrender, and abolishing this qualification, which now excludes this class from voting. I say it is right, and I have yet to see the argument upon this question which has, to my mind, any basis of force in it, to show it is not right, that this question which has got to be passed upon by the people, should be passed upon separately as a distinct proposition.

Mr. BECKWITH—If the gentleman will allow, I will ask him whether the property qualification is a right or wrong principle.

Mr. HALE—I have already said that I am in favor of abolishing it.

Mr. BECKWITH—Is the gentleman in favor of submitting, what he regards as wrong, to the people, to say whether it is right or not?

Mr. HALE—I will answer the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Beckwith] in this way: We must submit this question to the people. It is not a matter of choice with us; no matter if the Constitution were as wrong as can be; no matter if it required a violation

A very few of the non-residents, we have heard, support the Constitution; we have seen also a few names who under the Amendment are the same names, and what other discrimination we may make, or whether if it were a universal and common sense required of every man, a universal and common sense, will be a universal and common sense, and they were sent us here and there.

Mr. HALE—Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? I understand the gentleman to say that what the electoral body is to do is to surrender a portion of its rights, the right of a citizen whose rights are to be surrendered, is to decide the question as to that surrender, and then whether upon the application of the people, when the Convention of 1821, gave notice of the right to vote, and whether a particular qualification, whether that class of our citizens whose rights were to be surrendered should not have been entitled by their own vote alone to pass upon the question.

Mr. HALE—I would say to my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] that the Convention of 1821, having not some years before I was born, I do not deem myself especially responsible for its action, and what it should, or should not have done, I do not consider a very proper subject for discussion here. I will say further, if I have read history aright, no man of color who was a voter before 1821 was deprived of his vote by that proviso which was inserted in the Constitution then. Prior to 1821 no man was a competent voter, for member of Assembly, unless he possessed real estate of the value of fifty pounds; he must possess a freehold of that amount, or rent an estate of the value of forty shillings yearly, and in addition pay taxes. That was the provision in the Constitution of 1777. And he could not vote for Senator under that Constitution unless he was possessed of a freehold worth one hundred pounds over and above all debts and liabilities. Therefore, as I said before, the Convention of 1821 did not deprive a single man in the State of the privilege of voting. The distinction was not until then made in the Constitution between black and white men. Still the property qualification which existed prior to that Convention, would exclude from the right of voting every colored man, as well as every white man, who did not possess the required qualification. But if it had made a distinction, I would say most emphatically to the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Andrews] that the legal voters under that Constitution were the ones to be consulted, and it was upon their vote and their vote only, that the change could be made.

Mr. ANDREWS—I desire to ask the gentleman whether the peculiar discrimination which now exists in respect to men of color in this State, was not first inserted in the organic law of the State by the Convention of 1821, and whether, for the first time in the history of the State, that Convention did not make a discrimination between white and black electors, and their qualifications as such.

Mr. HALE—I so understand it, but I fail to see how it bears upon the question I am discussing. The question which the gentleman [Mr. Andrews] first asked me, was whether the submission of that Constitution ought not to have been made to all those who were qualified voters, and he assumed in his question that a certain class of voters were, by the operation of that Constitution excluded from voting. I answered him by stating that it ought to have been, and it was, as I understand, submitted to the duly qualified voters of the State. The gentleman is mistaken in saying that by that Constitution any person was excluded from voting, although by the terms of that Constitution a distinction, which did not before exist, was made between the two races.

Mr. ANDREWS—The point was that the party called upon to surrender the power should determine upon that question of surrender.

Mr. HALE—The question now asked by the gentleman is different from my understanding of what he asked me before. I should say in principle, that the question should not have been submitted to the colored voters only (although, as I said before, I do not consider the discussion of the duties of that Convention of 1821, as specially pertinent to the question before us), because, prior to that time, there has been no distinction whatever of race, and the question only was whether a certain measure of relief—a certain extension of the right of suffrage which was made in favor of the white man should also be extended to the black man.

It was a question in which all the electors were equally interested and upon which they all should vote. I hope the gentleman [Mr. Andrews] will not understand me as expressing any approbation of the proviso which was inserted in the Constitution of 1821. If I had been consulted at that time (which by a mere oversight, I suppose was omitted) [laughter] I probably should have been opposed to the insertion of that proviso there; at least, such has been my opinion since I have entertained any on the subject. All of my argument is this; that this whole instrument, having to be submitted to the people, this is the provision of all others to be considered in deciding what portions of it, if any were to be submitted separately, because it is one, no matter what was done in 1821, by which is now proposed a surrender of power on the part of those who exercise the elective franchise. One remark further in regard to the inquiry of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Beckwith]. He asks whether it is right and just that there should be a property qualification. I answer him that I certainly regard the continuance of the property qualification as to the man of color, applying it to the white man, as eminently unjust, and I am in favor of abolishing it. But I have no doubt there will be many propositions made by the Convention which the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Beckwith], himself may regard as not just and right, or which involve questions of policy and not questions of principle—questions upon which he will concede men may properly differ, and in which they will concede that no great principle is involved. I will ask him and other gentlemen whether, in case of an amendment proposed to this Constitution of which they approve, if the Constitution should be submitted only as a whole, they will not be obliged to vote for the amendment of which they disapprove, if they vote for that which they regard as eminently right and proper. The fact of this being an amendment which he [Mr. Beckwith] regards as right and proper, does not affect the principle; and that is one reason, according to my mind, why we should be allowed to pass on this proposition distinctly and separately, without being obliged, at the same time, to vote for other measures which we may think are not right and proper. This is all I propose to say in regard to this question of the separate submission. It is a question upon which my own mind is very clear and I cannot forbear again expressing my surprise, that gentlemen for whom I entertain so high a respect and who hold the same opinions that I do, should be disposed to insist upon the submission of the whole Constitution together and object to a separate submission of any part of it. One great reason why I wish a separate submission, is because when I come to vote, as I expect by the blessing of God to do, if my life is spared, in favor of abolishing the remaining property qualification, I do not want to be compelled to vote for every proposition that this Convention in its wisdom may see fit to incorporate in the Constitution; because they may adopt something which in my judgment may be wrong.

Mr. KINNEY—I ask the gentleman if, in order to avoid the difficulty he presents of voting for propositions we disapprove, he would be in favor of referring all propositions of this Convention to the people for a separate submission, even though there were twenty of them.

Mr. HALE—That I will answer when we ascertain what the propositions are, to be submitted. But I will say this however, as there seems to be a disposition to put me through a course of catechism, that I should not be in favor of submitting twenty propositions to the people because I do not believe it would be proper and necessary that we should. My plan would be to take the leading articles of the Constitution as proposed to be amended—there would not be twenty—that would be considered vital propositions. There would not probably be more than three or four, and I would permit the people voting on this Constitution to accept them or not. And, now Mr. Chairman, I will pass to the consideration of the mode by which this submission can be made and obviate the objections which are urged to the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and, at the same time give every citizen in the State an opportunity to signify his acceptance of the part of the proposed Constitution without approving the whole of it. I will confine myself now to the question of the extension of the right of suffrage. What is the question? It is not, as I have stated before a question whether negroes shall be allowed to vote or whether they are competent to vote. I think the State of New York is estopped from raising that question. There has never been a time in its history when colored men have not had the right to vote. Under the Constitution of 1777, our first Constitution, there is no distinction whatever between the races. The property qualification was required of all voters. I have already stated what it was, a smaller amount for electors of members of the Assembly and a larger amount for the Senate. That continued up to the Constitution of the State from its adoption in 1777, until the adoption of the Constitution of 1821—a period of forty-four years. The Convention of 1821 abolished the distinction between Assembly and Senate electors, whether wisely or not, I cannot say—people have different opinions in regard to that—and they abolished the property qualification, except that they required that the man of color should have the same qualification now required, and they required all voters to be tax payers or persons exempt from taxation. When the report was made by the Committee on Suffrage in the Convention of 1821, the word "white," was contained in the proposed Constitution, but Mr. Peter A. Jay of Westchester moved to strike out the word "white," and after considerable debate it was stricken out; in favor of that motion you will find recorded such names as Kent, Van Vechten, Van Buren and Elisha Williams. The report of the committee was recommended and they afterward reported a clause containing the proviso which now exists in our present Constitution, and I think precisely in the same words, in substance, that no man of color should have the right to vote unless he had a freehold estate to the value of $250; and after a very animated debate it was finally adopted. The word "white" was not contained in the Constitution of 1821, and it has never been contained in any Constitution since. I was somewhat surprised that my friend, from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], in the remarks he made on Saturday, spoke of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight] as an amendment proposing to strike out the word "white" in the Constitution. I was surprised that a gentleman of his great intelligence and historical knowledge should speak as if there was any such word in the Constitution to be stricken out. In fact, it has never been in any Constitution of the State of New York that I have been able to find. As I said before, the Convention of 1821 retaining a partial property qualification, inserted this proviso in regard to men of color. In 1826, the question was submitted to the people as to whether the remaining property qualification as to white men should be stricken out, and the people voted by an overwhelming majority, in favor of the proposition, and since then we have had no property qualification except as to the men of color. We then come down to the Constitution of 1846. That Constitution submitted this question, substantially in the same manner as proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this historical statement shows that it is a question which it is eminently proper to submit separately. I know it is said, though I do not attach any weight to the fact—that it has been several times submitted to the people, and they have voted it down. But circumstances have changed, and I think the people of New York entertain different views on this subject from what they did in 1860,

But, if they are not so submitted separately it is in defiance of the legal authority of the people elected by the legal process and by the act under which we exist, approved to submit our work to them for their approval, whether be our private views, to say to the people, even if you don't want this amendment you shall have it, or have no constitutional voice on any subject. In favor, as I am, of doing away with the property qualification, still I say that it is not consistent with my ideas of duty and right, to say that we will deprive the people of the right to express their views separately on this question and to add that if their views on this question are not in favor with ours, they shall not have the benefit of these other reforms and amendments which they propose to submit to them. It was believed that we have a right to express a remedy like this upon the people, by offering it, that comes from the opinions of the members of this Convention. As I said before, there were many confidence that they would agree with the majority that this property qualification should be stricken out. I will not make a personal responsibility of a mode of submission. I think the adoption of it now is premature. But I will state what I considered a plan to give every person a vote to have his vote counted as he wishes to the adoption of the Constitution. I have three classes of ballots.
 The first is simply "for the amended Constitution," if that ballot receives a majority, the vote cast upon the question, the amended, in all its parts, as we then I would have another ballot for the amended Constitution." If that receives a majority, our whole work is defeated.
 We would have a third class of ballots "for the amended Constitution except as to the abolition of the property qualification," or "except as to the article on suffrage," or "except as to the judiciary article," or whatever exceptions the Convention in its wisdom should choose to provide for. The result of this plan would be that those who wish to preserve some parts of the old Constitution and reject amendments, would have the laboring oar. The apathy which the gentleman from Lewis [Mr. E. A. Brown] apprehends, which would prevent people voting on this suffrage question, would inure to the benefit of those to be benefited by the provision which we shall propose. The opponents of it would be obliged to have a majority of the votes—either of votes "against the amended Constitution," or of such votes added to those "for the amended Constitution except the suffrage article," in order to prevent the suffrage amendment from being adopted. I submit that that would be a fair and just proposition. Suppose there should be 800,000 votes cast in this State on this subject, 300,000 "for the amended Constitution," 300,000 "against the amended Constitution," and 200,000 "for the amended Constitution except the suffrage article," then the extension of suffrage would be defeated, and the rest of the Constitution which we frame would stand. Suppose another class of ballot was "for the amended Constitution except the judiciary article" or any other exception, with the relative number of votes I have stated, then the suffrage provision would be carried, because with 300,000 votes for the amended Constitution and 200,000 for it except the judiciary clause (and with no other exception) would give a majority in favor of abolishing the property qualification, but would defeat the judiciary clause. In conclusion, I submit that this plan, or one substantially like it, or accomplishing the same result, is to my mind, the only one which is fair and just, and will enable the people to vote freely and intelligently upon the amendments which we shall propose.

Mr. COLAHAN—It is with no little diffidence
 I rise thus late to participate in this discussion.
 Originally I did not intend to say anything upon the subject, but so many extraneous matters of prejudicial effect have been referred to by my previous speakers, that I feel constrained, upon the part of my constituency, to say something in support of my position, and in support of my vote upon the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

Mr. VAN CAMPEN—I now move that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that that motion cannot be made while debate is proceeding, unless the gentleman speaking will give way.

Mr. COLAHAN—I will give way.

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Kings
 [Mr. Colahan], having given way, the gentleman from Cattaraugus [Mr. Van Campen], moves that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Van Campen, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration, the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, and had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was then put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

On motion of Mr. AXTELL the Convention adjourned.

Mr. MERRITT—The committee sir, have decided not to report in writing, but to submit an article. They wish to reserve the right to submit a written report for the future action of the Convention.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the report as follows:

The Committee on the Legislature, its organization and the number, apportionment, election, tenure of office, and compensation of its members, have prepared and submit the following article of the Constitution, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of all propositions which have been referred to them by the Convention:

SECTION 1. The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly. Any elector of the State shall be eligible to the office of Senator or member of Assembly.

§ 2. The Senate shall consist of thirty-three members. The State shall be divided into eight senatorial districts. There shall be four Senators in each district.

The first district shall consist of the city and county of New York and shall be entitled to one additional Senator.

The second district shall consist of the counties of Suffolk, Queens, Kings, Richmond and Westchester.

The third district shall consist of the counties of Putnam, Rockland, Dutchess, Orange, Ulster, Greene, Columbia and Rensselaer.

The fourth district shall consist of the counties of Albany, Schenectady, Fulton, Hamilton, Saratoga, Washington, Warren, Essex, Clinton, Franklin and St. Lawrence.

The fifth district shall consist of the counties of Jefferson, Lewis, Oneida, Onondaga, Oswego, Herkimer and Montgomery.

The sixth district shall consist of the counties of Otsego, Schoharie, Delaware, Sullivan, Broome, Chenango, Madison, Cortland, Tioga, Tompkins, Chemung and Schuyler.

The seventh district shall consist of the counties of Yates, Seneca, Ontario, Cayuga, Wayne, Monroe, Livingston and Steuben.

The eighth district shall consist of the counties of Orleans, Niagara, Erie, Genesee, Wyoming, Allegany, Cattaraugus and Chautauqua. The whole Senate shall be chosen at the first election held under this Constitution; they shall classify themselves, so that one Senator in each district shall go out of office at the end of each year, and the additional Senator for the first district at the end of the fourth year. After the expiration of their terms under such classification the terms of their office shall be four years.

§ 3. An enumeration of the inhabitants of the State shall be taken, under the direction of the Legislature, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-five, and at the end of every ten years thereafter; and the said districts—except the first district—shall be so altered by the Legislature at the first session after the return of every enumeration, that each district shall contain as nearly as may be an equal number of inhabitants who are citizens of the State, and shall remain unaltered until the return of another enumeration, and shall consist of contiguous territory. No county shall be divided in the formation of a senate district.

§ 4. The Assembly shall consist of one hundred and thirty-nine members who shall be chosen by counties, and shall be apportioned among the several counties of the State as nearly as may be according to the number of inhabitants thereof, who are citizens of the State, and shall hold office for one year. Each county shall be entitled to at least one member, except that the counties of Fulton and Hamilton shall elect together until the population of the county of Hamilton shall according to the ratio entitle it to a member. No new county shall be erected unless its population shall entitle it to a member. The first apportionment of members of Assembly shall be made by the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, upon the enumeration of the inhabitants of this State, who are citizens thereof, made in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five. A like apportionment shall be made by the Legislature at its first session, after every such enumeration. Every apportionment when made, shall remain unaltered until another enumeration shall be made.

§ 5. The members of the Legislature shall receive for their services an annual salary of one thousand dollars, and ten cents for each mile they shall travel in going to and returning from their place of meeting by the most usual route. The speaker of the Assembly shall receive an additional compensation equal to one-half of his salary as a member.

§ 6. No member of the Legislature shall be appointed to any civil office within this State by the Governor, the Governor and Senate or by the Legislature during the time for which he shall have been elected, and all such appointments and all votes given for any such member therefor shall be void. Nor shall any person being a member of Congress or holding any judicial or military office under the United States, hold a seat in the Legislature. If any person shall, after his election as a member of the Legislature, be elected to Congress or appointed to any office and on military under the government of the United States, no acceptance thereof, shall vacate its seat.

§ 7. The elections of Senators and members of Assembly under the Constitution shall be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November, unless otherwise directed by law. The first election to be in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight. The Senators and members of Assembly who may be in office on the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, shall hold their offices until and including the thirty-first day of December of that year, and no longer.

§ 8. A majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business. Each House shall determine the rules of its own proceedings, and be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members; shall choose its own officers; and the Senate shall choose a temporary president when the Lieutenant-Governor shall not attend as president, or shall act as Governor.

§ 9. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings and publish the same, except such parts as may require secrecy. The doors of each House shall be kept open, except when the public welfare shall require secrecy. Neither House shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than two days.

EDWIN A. MERRITT,
Chairman,

ERASTUS COOK,
RICHARD U. SHERMAN,
CLAUDIUS L. MONELL, GEORGE BARKER,
NATHANIEL JARVIS, JR.

I concur with this report except as to the number of members of Assembly and their manner of election.
M. H. MERWIN.

The report was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERWIN, from the same committee submitted a minority report as follows:

The undersigned, one of the members of the Committee on the Legislature, its Organization, etc., in dissenting from the report of that committee, as to the number of the members of Assembly and their manner of election, presents the following as a substitute for Section 4 in that report.

§ 4. The term of office of members of the Assembly shall be one year, and their number shall be ascertained by dividing the aggregate of the population of the State, according to the last and each successive enumeration, excluding aliens, by twenty thousand, adding one additional member in case the fraction over exceeds five thousand; but such number shall never exceed two hundred and fifty. The members of Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties of the State, by the Legislature, as nearly as may be according to the number of their respective inhabitants, excluding aliens, and shall be chosen by single districts. The first apportionment shall be made at the first session of the Legislature after the adoption of this Constitution. The several boards of supervisors in such counties as may be entitled to more than one member, upon such apportionment, shall assemble at such time as may be provided by law and divide their respective counties into assembly districts, equal to the number of members of Assembly to which such counties are entitled by such apportionment, and shall cause to be filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and of the clerks of their respective counties, a description of such assembly districts, specifying the number of each district, and the population thereof, according to the last preceding State enumeration, as near as can be ascertained. Each assembly district shall contain, as nearly as may be, an equal number of inhabitants excluding aliens, and shall consist of convenient and contiguous territory; but no town shall be divided in the formation of such districts.

The Legislature, at its first session after the return of every enumeration, shall ascertain the number of members of Assembly and apportion them among the several counties of the State, in the manner aforesaid, and the boards of supervisors in such counties as may be entitled, under such re-apportionment, to more than one member, shall assemble at such time as shall be provided by law, and divide such counties into assembly districts, in the manner herein directed; and the apportionment and districts so to be made shall remain unaltered until another enumeration shall be taken under the provisions of the preceding section.

Every county shall be entitled to one member of Assembly, except that the counties of Fulton and Hamilton shall elect together, until the population of the county of Hamilton shall, according to the ratio, entitle it to a member. No new county shall be erected unless its population shall entitle it to a member.

My reasons for this are briefly, as follows:

The Constitution of 1777 provided that the Assembly should consist of not less than 70 members, and might be increased by a definite ratio to 300, as the population increased. The amendments of 1801 fixed the number at 100, with a provision for their increase by a certain ratio to 150. The Constitution of 1821 fixed the number at 128, which has since been unchanged. The population of the State in 1786 was 238,897; in 1800, 588,603; in 1820, 1,302,812, and is now about 4,000,000.

One of the great fundamental ideas of American polity is that the legislature should consist of two bodies, one of which, being more numerous than the other, should primarily represent the people, and the nearer it comes to the people and the more directly it emanates from them, the more in accordance it is with a republican form of government. Such a body stands in the place and stead of the people—it is theoretically and practically a representative body, its members are simply agents. The number of these is, in the first instance arbitrary, but the larger it is the more nearly it represents the people. The number should fairly represent the population and still not be so large as to prevent or interfere with the proper discharge of their legislative duties. As population increased the number should increase up to the limit of availability. If 128 was the right number in 1821, it should be increased now as a matter of right, unless there is some good reason for not doing so. The only objection to it that I know of is, that a larger number will interfere with the proper transaction of business. Is this true in fact? The House of Commons, in Great Britain, is composed of over 600 members. The legislative body in France was composed of 267 members prior to 1863, and since that time, of 383. The House of Deputies, in Prussia, has 350 members; and in Italy, 443. The House of Representatives of the United States has 244 members; the lower house in Massachusetts, 240; in Connecticut, 237. In all these cases, and others that might be cited, there has been no difficulty in transacting business. It seems to me, therefore, that we can safely provide for an increase of the Assembly, graduated by the increase of population, and if we can do it with safety it is our duty to do it. The public wants and feelings call for it. Many consider that a larger body will be less liable to outside influences, less subject to the temptation of mercenary motives. All shades of opinion or interest will stand a better chance of being represented in a larger body than in a small one. My idea is to lay down or establish a rule or principle which will admit of expansion, so that the Constitution in that respect will not need remodeling every decade. A ratio is preferred to a fixed number inasmuch as it will do justice to future increase and follows the precedent of the Constitution of the United States as well as our earlier Constitutions.

The ratio of 1 to 20,000 representative population commends itself by its adaptation to the smaller counties, and it will produce a gradual increase from the present number. This ratio will give now 172 members, and in 1875 about 200 but I think the numbers should never exceed 250.

Members of Assembly should be elected by single districts as now, because

1. No change has been called for in that respect by the people, or is needed by the necessities of the times. Prior to 1846 the people had elected by counties as now proposed, ever since 1777, and the experience of seventy years had convinced them of the necessity of single districts, in order to attain a correct and responsible representation. The larger the district and the more that are elected together, the less and more divided is the feeling of responsibility, the less direct is the accountability.

2. The people are more nearly represented, their feelings and views, more exactly expressed. Whether laws are local or general, each locality may have its peculiar views, or be peculiarly affected, and they have a right to have as direct an expression of their views as possible.

3. Minorities will be better represented. The question of the representation of minorities is an important one, and is attracting universal attention. All will admit its propriety and justice in a representative form of government. It is not a partisan question, inasmuch as the party in the majority this year may be in the minority next year. But the trouble is to fix on some system that will be practical in its operations, and understood by and acceptable to the people. The ingenious theories of Mr. Hare, are more adapted to the evils of the British system than to our own. His fear of the tyranny of majorities has not much foundation in fact with us. Still it is our duty to afford every facility possible for the proper expression in our legislative bodies of the views of all our citizens. The proposition that any one receiving a certain number of votes, wherever in the State they may be cast, is intepded to accomplish this result. But will it do this? If the people act, spontaneously, that is without concert or agreement, in the selection of their candidates, their number will undoubtedly be large, and but a few of the more known or popular will get the required number of votes. And then, in determining which of those receiving a less number, shall go to fill up the necessary number of the legislative body, as much injustice may be done to minorities as would be in any other system. If, to avoid this, a plan of union or co-operation, before casting the votes, is determined on, this would lead inevitably to the county or State Convention, which should fix or nominate the candidates for the several localities. This result would not, I imagine, be satisfactory, its evils would overbalance any good that might arise from it.

By the cumulative system, recommended by Mr. Mill, any elector, in case more than one member was to be elected in the district, instead of putting on to his ticket several names, might vote for one man, so that it would count for him as many as there were members to be elected, and thus cumulate the vote of his favorite candidate. This of course would allow a large minority to choose some of the members, and would to that extent be beneficial. Taking into account, however, the habits of our people, it is doubtful whether an innovation of this kind would be advisable, if the end can be approximately reached in any other way. As a matter of fact, minorities, as a whole, have always been fairly represented in the lower House, much more so than in the Senate, resulting entirely from the less size of the districts. Retain the feature of single districts together with the privilege, to any district, of choosing a citizen living in any portion of the State, and I think as much will be accomplished toward representing minorities as would be by any other plan.

4. Another advantage of single districts is that nominations will not be as much under the control of central, political regencies. In every large county, at its political center, there is a party power, that would in a great measure control nominations, if made at one time and place for the whole county. This is not right to the mass of the people, especially in electing the more numerous and popular body that peculiarly represents them. It is no answer to this to say, even if true (which I deny) that better men might or would be usually chosen. The same principle might leave it to a State convention, or to an Albany or New York regency to choose all our officers. The question is, how shall it be arranged so that the mass of the people can express their own views by themselves, and not through any self-appointed guardians or political managers. This is more important in view of the fact that the Senate, by the plan now proposed, is placed farther from the people, and will be a were confidential and independent body. We should not entrust it to this matter. The intelligence of the voters will be easily trusted. If improper communications are made, the remedy of disapproval is at hand to more effectually applied and better than to more easily chosen.

All which is respectfully submitted,
M. H. MERWIN.

The PRESIDENT—The report of the minority will be referred to the Committee of the Whole and will be printed. There being no objection the Committee will be discharged from the further consideration of all propositions heretofore submitted to it.

Mr. DEVELIN called up the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SPEAKER proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the city of New York be requested to furnish this Convention with a statement of the amounts paid by him during the year 1847, to charitable institutions or the purchase of lands for asylums and houses of refuge, and to the year 1847, with the names of the institutions respectively, to which such amounts have been paid, and the sum paid to each.

Mr. DEVELIN—My object in offering that resolution is to obtain information for the Convention as to the granting of moneys to charitable and sectarian institutions. I believe resolutions similar in substance, have been passed by the Convention, requesting information from the Comptroller of the State. It is well known that the city of New York has made large contributions to charitable institutions. I think the information called for by this resolution is quite as important as the one requiring information from the Comptroller of the State.

Mr. GREELEY—I only wish to know before we make this inquiry whether it involves a considerable expense. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses [Mr. Ferry] that we have already incurred an expense amounting in a single county to about $1,900, by moving this sort of inquiry. I certainly should not have voted for such an inquiry or patiently submitted to it if I had supposed it would involve expense. I should like to know from the mover of this resolution whether the answer to this inquiry would involve any considerable expense or not.

Mr. DEVELIN—I cannot answer the gentleman positively, but I can give the Convention and the gentleman who makes the inquiry what the experience and practice of that office has been heretofore. Different Legislatures have called upon the Comptroller and other city officials for information, involving as much labor as will be necessary to give this information, and no charge has ever been made by the city officials for the information thus furnished or the labor that was expended in obtaining it. I presume there will be no expense incurred at all in furnishing this information to the Convention.

Mr. FOLGER—I desire to know from the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, for what these charges are made—the $1,900.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentlemen that his inquiry is hardly relevant to the pending order of business.

Mr. FERRY—Perhaps I ought not to sit here in silence and hear remarks made which are incorrect. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] has received his information, not from me, and I do not know from whom he has obtained it. I have made no statement of that character, but I have no doubt, the gentleman received the information from some source. I have been informed by the clerk that bills of this character, to what amount I am unable to say, have been received by him, and that he has information from various sources that others are to be presented.

Mr. OPDYKE—I hope the mover of the resolution [Mr. Develin] will consent to enlarge the scope of his inquiry so as to embrace the value of the lands thus donated.

Mr. DEVELIN—I have no objection to that amendment if the gentleman will specify the time. If he desires to ascertain how much property has been granted to institutions of the Catholic Church, the colored orphan asylum, and other institutions in the city of New York, he would have to go back further than my resolution covers. My resolution only goes back to 1847. I think many of those grants were made thirty or forty years ago.

Mr. OPDYKE—I had no desire to change the period of inquiry embraced in the gentleman's resolution, but I wish for whatever period it may embrace, that the information should be in full.

Mr. DEVELIN—I will accept the amendment.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I have drawn a clause which I will submit as an amendment to the resolution, as follows:

"He is also requested to state what grants of land or real estate have been made by or under the authority of the city of New York, or executed by any officer therein, within the same period, to charitable or religious corporations or institutions, whether under lease or otherwise, and when under lease, to state the amount of rent reserved."

Mr. DEVELIN—I will accept the amendment of the gentleman if he will add to it as follows: "And the conditions or covenants contained in the grant."

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Certainly.

The question was then put on the resolution of Mr. Develin as amended, and it was declared adopted.

Mr. CURTIS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the Land Office be requested to communicate to the Convention their proceedings, under Chapter 481 of the Laws of 1866, authorizing the sale of lands donated to this State by the United States.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. A. D. RUSSELL offered the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, The creation of districts which are formed by the Legislature by connecting several counties together for certain purposes and confiding their interests, so far as connected with those purposes, to hands of the State officers is a proceeding of doubtful utility, and calculated to destroy the civil division of the State into counties, and has the effect, which is inconsistent with the genius or spirit of republican institutions of centralizing power in the State Government, which upon every principle of Democracy, should be wielded by localities; and

WHEREAS, It is invidious for the Legislature to assume that certain parts of the State, in reference to mere matters of morality, demand legislation, fundamentally different from that which is applicable to other portions of the State, and to enact laws adapted to and proceeding from such an assumption on its part; and

WHEREAS, The odiousness of such legislation has been strikingly exhibited in an act of the Legislature of this State, passed April 14, 1866, entitled "An act to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors within the Metropolitan Police District of the State of New York," which district is made to embrace the city and county of New York, as though their interests in that particular could not, with safety or propriety, be managed or controlled by officers appointed or elected within those localities under laws uniform in their character in regard to the other portions of the State; therefore,

Resolved, That a provision ought to be inserted in the Constitution of this State, as amended and proposed by this Convention, to the effect that the sale of intoxicating liquors within the different counties of this State, should be regulated (if at all) by legislative enactments, uniform in their character and applicable to every portion of the State, and conferring upon appropriate officers, appointed or elected within the respective counties of this State, the powers and duties requisite or incident to such legislative regulation.

Resolved, Further, that licenses to sell liquors at retail, granted in pursuance of existing laws, and for a specific term designated by law, ought to be deemed irrevocable unless for cause to be specified in the laws under which such licenses are issued, and ought to be regarded as contracts, within the provision of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a State from passing a law impairing the obligation of contracts—and that a provision, embodying this principle, be inserted in the Constitution of this State, as amended and proposed by this Convention.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. SCHOONMAKER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State report to this Convention, the number of leases or grants given by the State or Commissioners of the Land Office, which are still outstanding and unexpired, the names of the lessees or grantees, the rental, and a brief description of such property.

Which was laid over under the rule.

Mr. PROSSER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of the Auditor of the Canal Department, in response to a resolution of this Convention under date of June 26th, be printed.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that it will be printed as a matter of course, under the standing rule of the Convention.

Mr. PROSSER—This is different from ordinary reports. The Auditor during the recess of this Convention, after having prepared the report in response to a resolution of the Convention sent it down directly to the printer, and I am informed by the Auditor it requires the passage of this resolution to have the report already printed laid upon our table.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that the 41st rule provides: There shall be printed, as of course, and without any special order, 800 copies of all reports of committees on the subject of constitutional revision, and of all reports and communications made in pursuance of the order or request of the Convention; and 800 copies of the Journal; which number shall be denominated the usual number.

Mr. PROSSER—Notwithstanding that rule, sir, the report not having been sent direct to the Convention, but sent to the printer by the Auditor, I think it requires that resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The Secretary of the Convention will now send it to the printer, and it will be printed under the rule.

Mr. STRATTON called up for consideration the resolution offered by him yesterday.

The SECRETARY (proceeded to read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the city of New York be and he is hereby instructed to make full report to this Convention of the net sums annually received from the several sources herein enumerated and applied through the sinking fund for the redemption of the city debt, or to the payment of interest on the city debt during the years from 1847 to 1866 inclusive, and a statement showing the expenses incurred in each of said years, in granting such licenses, collecting such fees, and in legal efforts to enforce payment or collect penalties for non-compliance to law or ordinance in each of such cases; whether such expenses were allowed by the mayor and common council of the city, or by the board of supervisors of the county, namely:

1. For licenses to pawnbrokers, and to dealers in second-hand furniture, metals or clothes.
2. For licenses for hackney coaches and drivers.
3. For fees of market privileges and market rents.
4. For majority fees.
5. For fines and penalties.
6. For fees and fines collected by clerks and courts.
7. For tavern and excise licenses.

Mr. DEVELIN—I beg leave to ask the gentleman the object he has in view in asking for the information required by this resolution?

Mr. STRATTON—The resolution itself shows the reasons pretty plainly why this is called for. I am, aside from what is stated in the resolution as to the information itself, enabled to say that some of these items which are named are of such a nature that the report will show that the expenses of collecting them are twice and three times the amount of moneys received for the licenses, and that instead of furnishing a source of revenue for the sinking fund, they are really a source of expense to the city of New York. We want this information so that we may, in fixing the different departments of the city government, if they are to be fixed by this Con-

...to arrange these
...there may be derived
...to the city,
...a burden to the
...will show us what remedy
...without the information, it
...to determine

Mr. NELSON—I seem to me that the in-
...that resolution is entirely
...for the action of this Conven-
...these revenues mentioned in the
...are pledged by law in payment of the city
...and it would be a violation of public faith for ...this Convention to take any action by which the ...derived from those sources shall be di-
...from the object to which they have been ...pledged by legislation for nearly twenty years.
This resolution looks more like the appointment of a committee of inquiry and investigation, which might be proper in the Legislature, but certainly it cannot be necessary to put it in the Constitution and make it part of the fundamental law, how many licensees should be granted in the city of New York, and how the money received for those licenses shall be applied, and how the money received from the fees of market privileges shall be appropriated, or the money collected by the clerks of courts. All these things are inappropriate for the consideration of the Convention; but in order that it may take an intelligent direction and that we may have a report as to whether these things are necessary, I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Cities, for them to report to this Convention whether they consider the information requested by this resolution as important for the Convention and for their action.

The question was put on the motion of Mr.
Devlin, and it was declared carried.

Mr. NELSON—I desire to offer the following resolution. I wish to say that I am not the author of the resolution, but it has been drawn up by citizens of the county in which I reside, who wish to see if something cannot be done to relieve them of the burdens under which they labor by reason of the title of their lands being tied up by perpetual leases. I have left a blank for the committee to which it is to be referred for the very good reason that it did not occur to my mind which was the appropriate committee.

The SECRETARY proceeded to read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into and report as to the propriety of inserting in the Constitution a provision in substance as follows:

"The owner or owners of any lease or leases of any piece or parcel of land in this State, of fifty acres or more in extent, used for agricultural purposes, the lease or leases by which the same is held depending upon a life or lives, shall be entitled, upon the death of the person or persons upon whom any such lease shall have depended, to become the owner or owners of such lands so leased in fee simple absolute, upon paying to the person or persons to whom such lands would revert, at the expiration of any such lease, the appraised value of such lands exclusive of any increased value from permanent improvements hereafter made thereon by such tenant in fencing, buildings, and draining, and the Legislature shall determine the manner of the appointment of such appraisers and establish regulations for making such appraisal and payment.

Mr. VERPLANCK—I move that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. NELSON—I hope the Convention will not vote to lay the resolution upon the table. The history of the past, and the contest in this State—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that the motion is not debatable.

The question was then put on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. SEYMOUR—I think the subject alluded to in this resolution is a very important one, and one which certainly concerns the people who live in the center of the State. I hope it will be referred to the proper committee, and I would designate the Committee on Industrial Interests as the appropriate committee to which it should be referred.

Mr. WEED—It seems to me that the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper one to which a resolution of this kind should be referred. As I gather from the terms of the resolution, it proposes to dispose of certain interests in this State that are known as the anti-rent interest. It seems to me that this question is certainly one which should go to the Judiciary Committee in order to have the light of their judicial knowledge upon the subject before a report is made. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be upon the motion to refer to the Committee on Industrial Interests.

Mr. CONGER—I think that the suggestion made by my friend on my right [Mr. Weed], is one that should unquestionably meet the approbation of this body. It is not a resolution affecting simply the industrial interests of the State at large, because, in whatever view you may look at the plan which has been submitted, it is a question of right, and it is a question of right to be determined judicially. What is the proposition? Why, that in cases of leases for life, when a party who has the fee dies, then the question of the reversion is to be treated entirely as if it did not exist, and the interest of the tenant is to be treated as if the lease were a deed in fee instead of a lease for life. Is not that a judicial question? If this resolution had referred to the question which has agitated this State principally upon the subjects of grants in fee, reserving the lease—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will ask the gentleman from Rockland [Mr. Conger] to confine his remarks to the question of reference.

Mr. CONGER—It is my desire to do so, and I wish to show to this Convention without going into the merits of the question, that it is a judicial question, and not a question affecting merely the industrial interests of the State.

Mr. SEYMOUR—After the remarks of the gentleman from Clinton, [Mr. Weed], I will withdraw my motion and consent that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT announced the question to be upon the motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. FOLGER—Is the motion amendable?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds that it is not amendable.

Mr. FOLGER—May we not move to refer to another committee?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair holds not.

Mr. FOLGER—Then sir, I trust this motion will not prevail. In the arrangement of the business of the Convention which was adopted on the report of the Committee of 16, it will be remembered that a portion of the duties of the Convention were allotted to the consideration of different committees. This proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson], refers entirely as I understand it, to a subject that is alluded to in the Bill of Rights, Section 14.

"No lease or grant of agricultural land, for a longer period than twelve years, hereafter made, in which shall be reserved any rent or service of any kind, shall be valid."

That I think is more cognate to the matter of the resolution than perhaps any other portion of the Constitution. Section 15 "All fines, quarter sales, or other like restraints upon alienation reserved in any grant of land, hereafter to be made, shall be void," also refers to the same subject. These sections in the first article of the Constitution which were adopted, grew out of the same feeling and the same circumstances which have originated the resolution of the gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Nelson], known commonly to us as the anti-rent feeling, prevailing in this State. The Convention of 1846 took hold of the question, and pursued it to a certain extent, and their convictions upon the subject are embodied in the article of the Constitution which is known as the Bill of Rights. The proposition of the gentleman from Dutchess is to follow a little further in that direction, and to go still further with the question of the anti-rent matter in this State; in fact, to end it; so far to end it by the Constitution of the State that it shall no longer trouble the courts and no longer occupy the time of the Legislature. To my mind this is a question appropriate for the consideration of the Committee upon the Preamble and Bill of Rights, and therefore, I trust the motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee will not prevail. Taking what seems to be the arrangement of business as adopted by the Convention, and following the plan of the Constitution of 1846, I think that would be the appropriate Committee. It is an abstract question referring to constitutional right and the rights of the citizens, and taking away what might be called the vested right which cannot be taken away except by alterations of the Constitution. The Committee on the Judiciary has not to do with questions of constitutional right. It has to do with the arrangement of some body which shall decide those questions. That is all. The Judiciary Committee does not sit upon abstract questions, and propose to enlighten by their labor and reports this Convention as to abstract questions. It has only to determine and report to this Convention how a system shall be prescribed by which certain citizens shall be designated from the body of the population of the State to sit in court and dispose of such questions. This is a question of abstract right which should go into the Bill of Rights, and nowhere else, and should properly go to that committee.

Mr. PAIGE—It seems to me that the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper one to which to refer this question. As I understand it this is a proposition to consider how these leases should be extinguished. It is therefore a question of individual right, and the question arises how these leases are to be disposed of, and how the tenants are to be released from their obligations and payment on the lands for an equivalent. It is therefore a judicial question. If these parties under these leases on either side have a vested right under this contract, we have no power as a Convention to put in the Constitution anything to deprive them of those rights, for they are protected by the Constitution of the United States, and therefore I think the motion to refer to the Committee on Judiciary is a proper motion and the proper reference.

Mr. DUGANNE—I desire only to say that this entire subject, involving the anti-rent condition of affairs in certain counties, has been before the Committee on Industrial Interests, and has been examined by them to some extent, and they propose to submit a clause to go into the Bill of Rights, which they think will cover that subject. Propositions with regard to all matters which seem to appertain to that subject, might therefore properly be referred to the Committee on Industrial Interests, which already has charge of the subject.

Mr. McDONALD—I shall vote for the reference to the Committee on the Bill of Rights for this reason only. It is well known that the Committee on the Judiciary—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair would inform the gentleman that there is no such motion before the Convention.

Mr. McDONALD—Then, sir, I shall vote against the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the reason that that committee is already burdened, so to speak, with a full share of the labor allotted to committees of this Convention. I find on the Committee on the Bill of Rights such names as Mr. Evarts, of New York, and the honorable gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] and I am very sure if there is any question about any vested right they will be as able to consider it and to present it to this Convention as anybody on the Judiciary Committee; and I am also quite sure that their labors are not as burdensome or as great as those of the Judiciary Committee. I am therefore opposed to this reference to the Judiciary Committee for the reasons I have stated, and I think the resolution ought to be referred to either the Committee on Industrial Interests, who have already considered the subject, or to the Committee on the Bill of Rights who are equally able to decide upon this question.

The question was then put on the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it was declared to be lost.

Mr. C. C. DWIGHT moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Executive and the Bill of Rights.

The Convention then "united itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Rights of Suffrage and the qualifications to Hold Office: Mr. ALVORD, of Monticello, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the question to be upon the amendments offered by Mr. Murphy to the amendments offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight.

Mr. DELAHAN—It is with no little diffidence I rise thus late, to participate in this discussion. Probably it was not my intention to say anything upon this subject, but so many extraneous matters have been referred to by previous speakers that I felt, that on behalf of my constituency and myself I should say something in explanation of my position and in support of my vote upon the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Kings. In the course of this discussion some assertions have been made, that in my opinion were in very bad taste and out of place. I will take occasion to refer to them hereafter. It seems to me, sir, that the position of many democratic members on this floor (and I can speak positively for myself) on the suffrage question is very improperly understood, and that there is a pitiable effort on the part of some gentlemen on the other side, to identify those who oppose the extension of negro suffrage with those who opposed the abolition of slavery. For my part, as a matter of principle, I am opposed generally to property qualifications, for I believe the possession of property has much tendency in making owners use the worst influences on government in all countries, because the inducement is held out to them to advance their own private interests. I would much rather, sir, have submitted to the people of this State the question whether they wish the extension of the right of suffrage at all to the negro. Were this question to be submitted I don't hesitate in saying that I would most certainly vote No! But if the question of suffrage to the negro in some manner is already settled, I would have that suffrage free and unshackled. I believe that there are few gentlemen on this floor who support suffrage as a natural right, and that the fact of it being a political privilege is well understood. In the language of a talented and prominent abolitionist, the elective franchise is not a natural right, because it is political power, and political power is always a civil trust, never a natural right, and the State judges for itself to whom it will or will not confide the trust. The extension of the ballot is more or less a leveling of distinctions and classifications, a secret magnet that tends to bring together and unite more closely incongruous and natural differences in races. I believe, sir, that the white race politically, should have some superior and distinctive position; and that the black race, but yesterday freed from slavery, educated in ignorance, mentality and dependence; wallowing in contented obfuscation, and satisfied oblivion; not asking for, and entirely ignorant of the more than voluntary efforts of a party in this country to drive them to the ballot box—is no race that can command or justly deserve the suffrage from me, when the gift of that suffrage would of necessity injure my country and affect my race. This question, sir, is a question of expediency, a question of taste and association, and I oppose such an equalization, for the reason, sir, that you avoid obnoxious and dangerous company. It is said that we owe the suffrage to the negro for his loyalty, and that our Union would not have been saved were it not for the efforts of negroes. This, sir, is an insult to the American people, for I believe the white men of this country can control and prosper it, and I have never yet discovered an issue of intelligence, heroism, and loyalty to be born from the union of ignorance and slavery. I believe true courage, so necessary to the successful soldier, can only emanate from independence and mental and moral development. When in Virginia during the war I asked one of these slaves, who had been transformed into a Northern recruit and dressed in blue coat and brass buttons, who George Washington was; he said he knewed nuffin about him. Some other person asked him who was Jesus Christ, he scratched his head and laughed and replied, that he didn't care, for he was now goin' to take care of himself. No! it was not loyalty that made the negro fight in our ranks. He had no chance of knowing what loyalty meant; it was dread of hard labor and danger at home that drove him inside of our lines and inability to get other employment when he reached there. The negro north was induced by novelty and big bounties and no doubt the negro both north and south was generally very much influenced by remembrances of the harshness and sufferings of slavery; but loyalty never troubled either his heart or brain. I sir, always detested the institution of slavery and were any measure before this body tending to the destruction of a wrong or supporting the establishment of a right, no one would feel warmer in advocating the same than myself. I never could consent, however, to the destruction of this republic for the destruction of slavery, and in this respect differed with the humanitarians. I never could join their humanitarian choristers in singing:

"Tear down the flaunting lie,
Half-mast the starry flag;
Insult no sunny sky
With hate's polluted rag."

I wished, sir, while reprobating and regretting the existence of slavery in our country to preserve the republic, and to keep proudly to the breeze our honored flag, perfect and whole in its starry beauty. When the crisis did come the Democratic party did its duty, and when slavery was buried under the debris and ruins, and the republic safe, I thanked God, and so did the Democratic party. Humanitarianism cannot claim the victory in our recent struggle, the success of its cause was but incidental to the grand victory of the republic itself in sustaining its own shaken structure, and in planting itself on a firmer basis for the benefit and prosperity of mankind. It is well known, and it is had from the lamented Abraham Lincoln himself, that he would never have issued his emancipation proclamation were it not to enlist the sympathies of Europe in favor of the North in order to save the Union. In England, the extension of the suffrage has been a work of gradation, and very much weight is attached to the condition of the classes, as to their fitness for the proper exercise of such a power; and progress being slowly made as time and experience matures the classes for the just use of the ballot. Principle must sometimes give way for expediency, and though some of our republican principles may support the extension of the right of suffrage to negroes, still expediency and national prosperity to-day say no. Give the unrestricted suffrage to the negro in New York, and you form a precedent for dictation to the Southern States, or perhaps more correctly speaking, an aid to the systems of compulsion now being used to force the south in granting negro suffrage. In relation to the negro's qualifications for self-government I cite the following: Jamaica contains 6,400 square miles of the richest soil in the world. Before emancipation, in the year 1809, the value of her exports was $16,000,000. In the year 1853, and after emancipation, only $4,000,000. Assessed valuation of property before emancipation in 1843, $250,000,000. In 1852 it was only $37,000,000. In the same year the number of estates ruined were as follows: Sugar estates abandoned, 199, or 275,000 acres; coffee plantations abandoned, 162, or 493,000 acres. The Cyclopædia of Commerce says "that the negro is rapidly receding to a savage state." A Mr. Baird, one of the warmest advocates of emancipation said: Let a visitor see with his own eyes, the neglected and abandoned estates, the uncultivated fields, fast hurrying back into a state of nature, with all the speed of tropical luxuriance—the dismantled and silent machinery, the crumbling walls and deserted mansions, which are familiar sights in most of the British West India colonies; let him then transport himself to the Spanish Islands of Porto Rico and Cuba, and witness the life and activity which in these slave colonies prevail. Ex-Gov. Ward, of Ohio, an abolitionist, said, after visiting Jamaica: "Since the blacks have been liberated they have become indolent, insolent, degraded and dishonest. They are a rude and beastly set of vagabonds, lying naked about the streets, as filthy as the Hottentots, and I believe worse." Sewell, another anti-slavery man said: "There is not a house in decent repair; not a wharf in good order, no pavement, no sidewalk, no drainage and scanty water; no light. There is nothing like work done, all is wreck and ruin, destitution and neglect. The inhabitants taken en masse are steeped to the eye-lids in immorality. The population shows unnatural decrease. Illegitimacy exceeds legitimacy." So much for the negro's capacity for self-government, and I ask some gentleman to inform me what good could result to-day from the exercise of the ballot by such a race? This is a national question and not confined to the State of New York. The people of the State of Connecticut saw fit to vote against unrestricted negro suffrage, but a short time ago, and I believe the people of this State will vote against it if the question is submitted separately and vote against the other proposed amendments to the Constitution if submitted in connection with them. At some future time, sir, when the negro can be learned at least in the objects of our government, then I may be willing to extend to him the ballot, but to-day sir, in the unsettled condition of our national affairs I am of opinion it would be unsafe and unpolicy. I do not consider that the negro should be able to solve a problem in Euclid before voting, but I do think he should be impregnated to some extent with the amor patriæ, and that common reason should guide all classes that have control of the political destinies of this republic. These qualities the negro race does not possess at present. If the negro has remembrances of slavery, he also remembers that the scene of his slavery was in this republic, so that as far as the past is concerned he has no cause for affection. He has as yet, hardly tasted of the sweets of liberty, and is perfectly satisfied if let alone and permitted to do as he pleases. The white citizen knows his country's history and loves her for her beneficent government and because of her free and liberal institutions, and the foreigner lifts his eyes to the western sky, while bending under the shackles of European tyranny, and hopes for the time when he can become a proud citizen of the American Republic. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], spoke eloquently and truly when he spoke of the sufferings of that race whose blood courses in his veins and mine, but he spoke extravagantly when he sought to draw a comparison between the oppression of that race and the almost natural condition of the negro race. The sufferings of the Irish have no reflection in the condition of the negro, and nothing but a forced, sickly sentimentality could make any gentleman, because sympathizing with the efforts of the Irish people for liberty, arrive at the conclusion that having committed himself so far to the Irish race, he must then of necessity make negroes lords of the manor in this country. The Irish race is one plethoric in the finest quality of brain, brim full of poetry and prowess, the blood of which has streaked every battle-field under the sun. Its sufferings were and are the sufferings of liberty's longings, the labors of patriotic fervor to loosen the clutch of despotism. The negro race is a physically discolored and mentally inferior one, dependent, helpless and lazy. With no history of credit, and unknown to fortune fame and story. Complaining of subjection when they suffer bodily or when their selfish propensities are excited and never aspiring for liberty in its true sense, for the black man does not comprehend what liberty is. I was sorry to hear the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett] accuse the democratic party of proscription, because he, in my opinion, should be the last man to make such an accusation. If he chooses to-day to labor with the republican majority, if he elect to differ with the party to which the race from which he sprang is closely allied, I had hoped he would have remembered the past—the ready protection his father's countrymen found, when exiled, in the arms of the democratic party from proscription and intolerance. Know-nothingism has also been spoken of by the gentleman from Onondaga and by him connected with the democratic party. I say, sir, on information that there are some prominent republicans on this floor who have not yet forgotten how to signal an O. U. A.

When know-nothingism was rampant in full tide in Virginia it was a democrat that stopped its progress. Henry A. Wise in his famous letter in 1854 said among other things—"When we were as weak as 3,000,000 we relied largely on foreigners by birth to defend us and aid us in securing independence. Now that we are 20 millions strong how is it we have become so weak in our fears as to apprehend we are to be deprived of our liberties by foreigners? Verily this seemeth as if know-nothings were reversing the order of things or that there is another and a different feeling from that of the fear arising from the sense of weakness. It comes rather from a proud consciousness of over-weening strength. They wax stronger, rather, and would kick like the proud grown fat. It is an exclusive if not an aristocratic feeling in the true sense, which would say to the friends of freedom born abroad, 'we had need of you, and were glad of your aid when we were weak, but we are now so independent of you that we are not compelled to allow you to enjoy our republican privileges. We desire the exclusive use of human rights, though to deprive you of their common enjoyment will not enrich us the more, and will make you poor indeed.'" This was the language and spirit of the Democratic party on the subject of proscribing foreigners and Catholics. A word more and I have done. The gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett] has said it would be cowardice to submit this suffrage question by itself to the people. And, while speaking in this connection, I would allude to some remarks that were made by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] yesterday, in which he saw fit to introduce certain algebraical terms and mathematical displays, and I thought then, and do now, that his argument had as much to do with proving the expediency of this subject as the argument of the country minister when he sought to prove that our Saviour was the Son of God, and cited, as his argument, that if Judge Bowen and we were to run a race, and Judge Bowen got to the place before he did, it was not because he ran faster than he did, but because he got there faster, and, therefore, the Saviour must have been the Son of God. I consider the cowardice consists in conjoining this proposition with the other amendments, because it is evidently to obtain votes from the supposed popularity of these amendments. The separate submission was not cowardly in 1846. To submit this question independent of other influences, would be to evidence by this Convention, confidence in the people; a sense of justice to the question itself and to the remaining proposed amendments. It is the only fair means of learning the true wishes of the people, and for this reason, I support and will vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

Mr. MURPHY—I beg the indulgence of the committee for a short time—

Mr. RATHBUN—I believe, Mr. Chairman, there is a rule which provides that any member who has spoken once on a subject, shall not speak again, until all the rest have spoken—

The CHAIRMAN—The same rules that apply in Convention obtain in the committee, and the rule says that no member shall speak twice upon the same question, until all others have spoken who desire to speak. The Chair will enforce the rule if it is insisted upon.

Mr. MURPHY—My friend from Cayuga [Mr. Rathbun] if he hear my request will probably not object—I rose simply to ask the indulgence of the Committee, not to continue this debate, or to speak to the amendment which I proposed, but merely to reply to what I consider some personal reflections, or animadversions made during my absence by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight].

The CHAIRMAN—If there is no objection the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will proceed.

Mr. MURPHY—I was very much surprised, in taking up the report of the proceedings of this body on Saturday, after I had left for home, to find that remarks had been made by that honorable gentleman which seemed to reflect upon myself personally. I certainly entertain a very high respect for him and also for Prof. Lieber, from whose works I had made some citations, and I regard them both as public men of reputation and distinction; men adorning the institution to which I owe, perhaps, all that I am as a man. And, sir, I felt mortified, therefore, to read in the remarks of the gentleman that I was favored with the presumption on the part of the gentleman, that I was an honorable man. He charges me with having made some charge against Professor Lieber, which he was called upon in his position and from his relation, as a colleague of that gentleman, to rebut—that I had accused Professor Lieber, as I gather from his remarks, as being against the extension of the elective suffrage to the negro race. Now, sir, I made no charge; the language of mine which the honorable gentlemen quotes, contains no charge against Professor Lieber. I merely referred to a fact. I made a statement of fact which was in all respects true, and not tending in the least to animadvert upon Prof. Lieber, with regard to his opinions. I said, sir, as quoted by the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]: "There, sir, is a writer of distinction who is indorsed politically, [by certain parties] who maintains very distinctly the inferiority of the negro race in capacity." That sir, was my declaration in regard to Prof. Lieber. When I added [this is] the ground upon which many who oppose negro suffrage base their opposition to granting the negro the right to vote, I did not say that Prof. Lieber opposed extending the right of suffrage to the negro, or that he put his opposition upon any such ground. I merely stated, he, as a philosophical writer had asserted the inferiority of the negro race, and that in the opinion of many, such inferiority, was a ground for opposing the extension of suffrage to the negro. The committee will recollect that in this connection I gave no reason, why I myself opposed negro suffrage. I was arguing, as far as my ability would enable me to do, the question whether the extension of the franchise to this class should be submitted to the people as a separate proposition or not. Among other reasons I stated there was a diversity of opinion among the people irrespective of party, and I cited the opinion expressed upon this floor by distinguished gentlemen, that there were many democrats who in 1846 and 1850, and still were in favor of this extension of the right. On the other hand I said there were distinguished men in the party of the majority here and in the country who were opposed to the extension of negro suffrage, and distinguished writers who gave opinions which furnished the grounds of opposition to this extension. I cited the opinion, at one time, of President Lincoln, and of the patriarch of democracy, Thomas Jefferson. I quoted Prof. Lieber to the point that the negro was of an inferior race to the white, and I read from his book, as far as was necessary for this purpose without reading the further extract as the gentleman has done. I did not think it was necessary for the purposes of my argument to detain the Convention with the reading of the whole. And, sir, I can tell the gentleman that did so deliberately, and not as he would indulgently say, through precipitation. I did not do it, on the other hand, for the dishonorable purpose from which the gentleman would patronizingly shield me, of misrepresenting Professor Lieber. I quoted it because it was all that was necessary for the purposes of my argument, to show that the negro was, in the opinion of that distinguished man inferior in capacity to the white man, and I maintain still that the opinion of Professor Lieber as expressed in this volume, and which as far as I understand, is unchanged by any public writing of his, is that the negro is inferior, in point of capacity, to the white man. Let me call the attention of the committee to this passage again:

"Yet though the distinction between man and brute has thus been distinctly drawn, comparative anatomy and physiology are establishing daily, more clearly, the fact that all those beings comprehended under the vast term of human species, are not only morally or individually distinguished from each other, but in a very marked way physiologically, and as to their capacities by whole races, forming a gradual scale of superiority."

This is the proposition with which Professor Lieber starts, that notwithstanding the alleged unity of the human race (which I believe in, not only as a part of my religious faith, but as the result of my reading on the subject, and I presume such it is the belief of Professor Lieber also) there are differences in capacity among the different races of the human family. How those differences have been produced, whether by organization or whether by continued habitations in particular portions of the world, through the influences of climate and other causes of an extraneous character, I know not. It was not necessary for me to go into that inquiry. The fact of difference exists. It is stated distinctly by Professor Lieber, in the passage I have just read, and having stated the fact that there is a difference of capacity in the human race, he concedes and confirms the main position that men are not equal in capacity. For some causes, either natural, or temporal, or physical, they do differ, and do differ materially. He then goes on:

"The most peculiar skulls of the so called Pre-Inca race, found in South America, are so essentially different from ours, that they alone show an essential difference of that race from ours. The Caffres, Boushmanuas (Bushmen), the Hottentots, and the poor Papous, for instance, differ so materially in their anatomy and physiologic organization, from the races which comparative anatomy, as well as the history of civilization teach us, by conclusive facts, to consider as superior, that we should abandon all truth, were we to deny the difference."

Does not this language specifically assert that the negro is inferior in capacity to the white race? I would ask if the Caffres, the Bushmen, and the Hottentots, are not negroes, and if they do not come under that designation? Professor Lieber distinctly names these particular tribes without naming all the nations or varieties of the negro, which exist in Africa. It is not necessary for me to call the attention of this committee to the meaning of the word negro, either philologically or in the sense in which it is used in this debate.

Mr. BICKFORD—I would ask the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], whether in his amendment he designed to include negroes only—whether he intends to include in its operation the brown varieties of the Caucasian race, the Hindoos, the Copts, the Moors, the Chinamen, and the Mestizos of New Mexico, California, and Arizona? I wish a distinct enunciation from him as to whether his amendment is intended to include negroes only, or to include all other colored races, for instance, the black Jews—does he intend to include them?

Mr. MURPHY—The object of this interruption the gentleman [Mr. Bickford] himself best understands. I think there can be no doubt in any mind that it has no pertinency to the question which I have been and am now presenting to the committee. I shall be happy at the proper time to answer the question. I am now addressing myself to what I consider to be a personal matter between myself and the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. I therefore proceed and say that the particular races mentioned by Professor Lieber in the section which I have last read, were negroes, and that literally and truly my statement is fully maintained. But the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] says that in what Professor Lieber states in the latter part of the section in regard to negroes as they exist in the Southern States, who are understood, I believe, to have been brought from the more northern parts of Africa—from Bonim and other parts of the coast of Guinea—he contradicts the interpretation which I have given to the facts just read. Does he? In my view he confirms it. The point is the inferiority of the negro race to the white race. That is the position I took. The degree or extent of that inferiority I did not argue, nor did I present it to this committee. Professor Lieber, proceeds to say:

"We love to treat, in our theories and meditations, all men as absolutely equal; but truth is truth, however it may militate with beloved, nay, generous theories; and God is a God of truth."

There is where my extract ended. Then he continues:

"He must have had his all-wise ends in creating these different races, as he must have had his ends in creating those many tribes and races, who without light, without expansion of thought or cultivation, have increased and vanished, or who continue to people so many parts of the globe, yet do no more than people them, tribes which live without history, that is, without progressive change, interesting to the naturalist, but of no account in the history of mankind."

Is not that the true character of the negro? Does it not describe the negro perfectly? From whatever nation or whatever part of Africa the negro may come he has no history. He makes no progress. He is where he was thirty-five hundred years ago, as shown by the Egyptian monuments, and as he is fully described by Roman writers. Professor Lieber proceeds with the sentence which it is alleged contradicts my position: "Nor is it for us here to speculate how far these tribes, now so low and brutish, may be susceptible of organic improvement, which, it cannot be denied, has taken place with some races. The negro of Virginia is superior, as to the formation of his head, to the negro of the more southern States, because he descends from earlier imported generations. The negro of the most southern of the United States, again, has much more expression of intelligence than the newly imported negro in the West Indies. So has civilization improved the formation of the head in the Celtic race."

This comparison I conceive affords a distinct statement, by implication, that the negroes in this country are of different degrees of capacity of mind, all inferior to that of the white race. I suppose it may be urged in the same line of argument that the negro of the State of New York has a better formed head than the negro of Virginia. Professor Lieber does not say anything in regard to the capacity of this race having been improved—not at all. He is speaking craniologically and physiologically, if I may so express myself, in regard to the form of the head of the negro. He says, the negro head is improving in form in this country; but he does not attempt to contradict here the idea that the negro is inferior in capacity to the white race though he may have so intended. Now, whatever force this extract may be entitled to, I leave to the committee. What I have to say is, I did not present it as an absolute argument for myself in the consideration of this subject, but I presented it as I said before, for the purpose of showing that there were people in this country who considered the negro inferior in mental power. Now, Mr. Chairman, having said all that I proposed to do, that is, to reply to so much of the remarks of the gentleman [Mr. T. W. Dwight] as referred to my motives, and having, if I may so express it, put myself rectus in curia, I have nothing more to add at present.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I have no controversy, Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. What I said was simply this: that I thought the gentleman was precipitate in his action. I did not charge him with unfairness, as I distinctly said. After his explanation this morning it is evident that the difference between us is simply one of ethnology. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], insists that Caffres and Bushmen and Poor Papous are negroes. I claim, as a matter of ethnology that they are not, and, therefore, that he does not understand the subject as it should be understood, and for that reason he was precipitate. Now the substance of his argument amounts, it seems to me, to this, that every man who lives in Africa is necessarily a negro. But the fact that a man lives in Africa no more proves him to be a negro than the fact that a man lives in New York proves him to be an Indian. Very recent and reliable authorities divide the African people into five classes.

1. Semitic. Such as Abyssinian, including the sub-Semitic, as the Copts or Egyptian tribes.

2. Nilotic. The area inhabited by these people is the land drained by the Upper Nile. This group includes the Nubians, Gallas, etc. This is a transitional class.

3. Kafirs, or Caffres. These in some cases approach the negro, in others depart from that type.

4. The Negro.

5. Hottentot and Bushmen.

All of these are distinct groups, and in order to show this, I shall quote from some authorities. I have only to deal with the three last classes, the Kafirs, the Negro, and the Hottentots and Bushmen. Now, a high authority (Vol. 2 of the Encyclopedia Britannica, p. 222) says: "The Kafirs or Caffres, have been very wrongly classed with the negroes." Another authority, (Pritchard's Nat. Hist. of Man, p. 384) uses this language: "The complexion of the Caffres is of a lighter hue and much redder than that of the negro. By some, Caffres are reckoned of the red rather than the black races of mankind, and a late American traveler declares that they resemble the Indians of the American continent. They exemplify a type of features strikingly different from that of the Guinea negro, and this is the prevalent type among this nation." And then on page 385 this same authority says: "Caffres, in external form and figure vary exceedingly from the other nations of Africa. They are much taller, stronger, and their limbs much better proportioned; their color is brown; their hair black and woolly; their countenances have a character peculiar to themselves, and which does not permit their being included in any of the races of mankind above enumerated. They have the high forehead and prominent nose of the Europeans, the thick lips of the negroes, and the high cheek bones of the Hottentots." Now, as to the Hottentots and Bushmen, nothing is better settled than that the Hottentots and Bushmen do not belong to the negro race. They are entirely different from other races in Africa. The Hottentot race is entirely different from others in Africa. As authority for this I refer to the Encyclopedia Britannica, Vol. 2, p. 222. Mr. Brace in his work "on the Races of the Old World page 300" uses this language: "A remarkable ethnological problem is presented by a single race in the southern portion of Africa, entirely different from the South African family both in physique and language—a race of copper color and low developments, amid dark races of noble physical structure, and separated from them both by mental peculiarity and by a language presenting features exhibited in no other tongue." The Bushmen are of a dirty yellow color and resemble to some extent a Chinaman in appearance. These persons are of a very low order of beings. A very recent authority says that Bushmen and Hottentots have a better claim to be considered as a separate species of the genus homo than any other section of our kind. They are hardly more than four feet high, often live in holes in the ground and feed on vermin, which the desert, where they live, furnishes them. Though living side by side with other tribes of a higher order they do not change. They scorn all culture of ground and care of cattle. And now as to the "Poor Papous." Ethnologists tell us, that the poor Papous, or Papuans of Australia, are in many respects the most sunken of human beings. For this I refer to Smith's Natural History of Man, page 207. It was not strange that Dr. Lieber, looking on these degraded races should, as many Ethnologists have done, regard them as distinct species of men. In this I do not agree with him. Doubtless he would modify his views, for since he wrote, Christianity has elevated, even these low and sunken people, as I believe it is to elevate all people on the face of the earth. But the point is, does his language include the negro races, and I say, unquestionably, that it does not. These quotations which I have made are from books which may be found in the State Library, and if there is any incorrectness in them it can be shown. These men, viz., Pre-Incas, Caffres, Bushmen, etc., are not in any respect negroes, but of a different race of men. That is my first point. Now my second point is that, Dr. Lieber did not intend to include our negro race in his statement. He supposed that these races were not embraced among negroes. Shortly before this, he had edited the Encyclopædia Americana. In that work he distinguishes the Caffre and Hottentot from the negro. In volume 6, page 447, it is said that the Hottentots and Bushmen are two distinct families to whom the Caffres are related. The Bushmen in volume 2, page 344, are described as very low and do not even form societies. His opinion of the negro is found in the same work. "The negro character, if inferior to the European in intellectual vigor, is marked by a warmth of social affection, and a kindness and tenderness of feeling which even the atrocities of foreign oppression have not been able to stifle. All travelers concur in describing the negro as mild, amiable, simple, hospitable, unsuspecting and faithful. The opinion formerly maintained that they were of an inferior variety of animals, would not now find an advocate or a convert, even in the ignorance or the worst passions of the whites. Whether they are capable of reaching to the same heights of intellectual cultivation as the Europeans is a question which we need more facts to decide."

But I will quote from another volume.

Mr. MURPHY—Will the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], inform me from what work he quoted?

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—From the Encyclopædia Americana, Dr. Lieber's edition.

Mr. MURPHY—He does not there admit the equality in intellect and capacity of the negro with the white man.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—He does not say. But I will read from another work of Dr. Lieber's, his Letters to a gentleman in Germany, page 290. He says:

"Whether the African race ever will have among them a Shakspeare, a Charlemagne or Aristotle, I know not; nor is it necessary to know this, in order to settle the question as to their political capacity for participating in all civil rights and duties. There are many respectable colored persons with us, and I believe none will conscientiously deny that, when fairly educated, they stand on quite as high a level of mental development as the lowest of the whites, who are nevertheless admitted to a full participation in all political privileges: nor that the question under consideration would ever have been started, did the African race not differ from ourselves in color."

With this development and explanation, and this unfolding of Dr. Lieber's meaning, I say there is not a shadow of ground for believing that he entertains the view that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] insists he does. I did not blame the gentleman from Kings or charge him with unfairness, but simply say that he has not studied this topic as he ought, and therefore he was precipitate when he rendered his opinion. I must still, without the slightest imputation upon him, say that he was precipitate, and by precipitate I mean that a gentleman should never speak on such a subject without a study of it; and especially when he charges a philosopher—a man who devotes himself to this class of studies—he should study the subject before he charges such a man with inconsistency.

Mr. MURPHY—Does the gentlemen not understand from what he has read that Dr. Lieber maintains that the negro in Virginia and the Southern States is inferior to the white race?

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—No, sir, all I understand is that he needs more facts to decide the question whether he can reach the same height of intellectual cultivation as the European; but he has, in his opinion, sufficient intelligence to vote.

Mr. MURPHY—He is not satisfied that the negro has the intellectual capacity of the white race.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—Not fully.

Mr. MURPHY—That sustains my position. I did not argue that he should not vote. I argued that he was inferior to the white race.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—The statement of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] was that Dr. Lieber maintained "very distinctly the inferiority of the negro race in capacity, the ground upon which many who oppose negro suffrage base their opposition to granting the negro the right to vote." Instead of that Dr. Lieber says he has not fully made up his mind as to whether he can reach the same height of intellectual cultivation as the European, or not.

Mr. MURPHY—I simply quoted what Dr. Lieber had said in a published work, in which he claimed that the negro was inferior to the white race; what he may have written in the Encyclopædia Americana, I do not know. In what I read he gave reasons which are satisfactory to many minds why the negro should not vote.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—My answer to that is that he was not talking about negroes but Bushmen and Hottentots and Caffres. At the suggestion of a gentleman near me, I will again read the passage.

"The Caffres, the Boushuannes, (Bushman), the Hottentots, and the poor Papous, for instance, differ so materially in their anatomy and physiologic organization, from the races which comparative anatomy as well as the history of civilization

...by conclusion that, to consider as superior, we should attribute all truth, were we to attribute the difference. There is probably no reflection upon him who was not painfully startled when he first acquainted with these nevertheless degenerate truths. We love to treat, in our theoretical meditations, all men as absolutely equal; but in truth, however it may militate with our generous theories; and God is the author of truth. He must have had his all-wise ends in creating these different races, as he must have had his ends in creating those many tribes and races, who without light, without expansion of thought, or cultivation, have increased and vanquished, or who continue to people so many parts of the globe, yet do no more than people them; tribes which live without history, that is, without progressive change, interesting to the naturalist, but of no account in the history of mankind. Nor is it for us here to speculate how far these tribes, now so low and brutish, may be susceptible of organic improvement, which, it cannot be denied, has taken place with some races."

Mr. MURPHY—Will the gentleman [Mr. T. W. Dwight] read the next page?

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I will:

"The negro of Virginia is superior as to the formation of his head, to the negro of the more southern States, because he descends from earlier imported generations. The negro of the most southern of the United States, again, has much more expansion of intelligence than the newly imported negro in the West Indies. So has civilization improved the formation of the head of the Celtic man."

Now what I say is this that Dr. Lieber says that the negro can improve like the Celt. Even the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] will not say that the Celt is not fit to vote. I need have no controversy with him on that, because the negro is placed on the same plane with the Celt by Dr. Lieber. I know that he will not assert anything against the capacity of the Celt. Although at one time the Celt was low, he has been raised to the same plane as the elective franchise. All Dr. Lieber says in that passage is this: civilization raises the Celt, and so civilization will raise the negro. The former part of the passage read has nothing to do with the negro, but refers to an inferior class of persons.

Mr. GROSS—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. LIVINGSTON—Does not Dr. Lieber say that the negro needs more capacity to—

Mr. LIVINGSTON—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Livingston], that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gross] has the floor.

Mr. GROSS—After the eloquent and lengthy remarks which it has been my good fortune to hear, during a full week's discussion of the negro question, I should have deemed it superfluous to add a word of my own, if it were not for the fact that I find my views on the subject, to a certain extent, at variance with those advanced by gentlemen on either side of the House. Under such circumstances, it becomes a kind of a duty that I should define my position. The moment emancipation became a settled fact by the incorporation of the anti-slavery clause into the Constitution of the land, I was satisfied, in my mind, that political rights and full citizenship for the freedmen must follow sooner or later. I readily admit that, in certain States, this claim of new born citizens of the United States has, under a certain aspect, its alarming features, as it involves a more or less thorough revolution of the political and social state of the community, and works greatly to the disadvantage of the heretofore ruling classes of whites. If such unwelcome changes are among the fruits and consequences of treason and rebellion, who is to blame for it? Shall miserable prejudices carry us so far as to deny justice to the black man, who has proved true and remained faithful to the cause of the Union under the most trying circumstances, while those boasting of a great and patriotic ancestry stand convicted of the crime or fell into the criminal error of applying all their means and powers to destroy the inheritance of their own fathers? It must be remembered that the institution of human slavery, unfortunately existing in this country and at best to be tolerated only under a federal compact till otherwise ordered by the joint consent of the States, their representatives or the people thereof, that this institution of human slavery under the pressure of alluring material advantages became more and more aggressive every day, till it finally dared to commit high treason and to appeal to the sword. After a desperate four years' struggle slavery found itself routed, put to the sword and finally abolished. It is most natural that its advocates and defenders have now to accept the consequences of their crime, folly or error. It will not do for them, nor for us, to try to obliterate from man's memory or from the pages of history, the record of the events of the last six or seven years, and to fall back upon the record made by their fathers. They have written in blood their own record, and must be content to be judged by it. It is the most unpropitious and concealed position a man or party can take, if they endeavor to cover and hide the momentous present by an everlasting recurrence to a glorious past. This endeavor does not only place them in the wrong in the eyes of the people, who have sacrificed so much for the maintenance of the Union; it does not only cost them the respect of a progressive civilized age in which they live, but it makes them powerless to alleviate and mitigate, for the defeated and subdued, the cruel consequences of rebellion and war. However much we may hesitate or resist to acknowledge the overpowering influence of the events of the last decade on the future laws and destiny of the republic, it will nevertheless prove true that they will date much more from the surrender at Appomattox, than from that at Yorktown or the battle at New Orleans. The stubborn refusal by some of our leading men to read the signs of the times, to understand the temper of the people, and to assume a position at once to be followed by a return of the confidence of the people in their counsels is the main cause, that more moderate views and a more generous and forgiving policy did not obtain in our national councils. It is painful to me to indulge in remarks of this nature, but they have been challenged by the maintaining of positions, the responsibility for which I cannot share. Mr. Chairman, I am by no means an enthusiastic admirer of the black man. To me, who has had ample opportunity to study the nature, the habits, the virtues and vices of the once enslaved race, it sounds rather odd to hear the fulsome praise now-a-days lavished on the negro in certain quarters. It will be long before the black man will, in reality, come up to the standard prepared for him in advance by the prolific imagination of those who seem to know least of him. I do not deny intellectual faculties to the negro; my opinion of him in that respect is not quite so poor a one as that held by Thomas Jefferson, according to the quotations made by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], from Mr. Jefferson's works. Yet, however wide and extensive the intellectual compass of a negro brain may be, it is an undeniable fact, that in him the animal propensities are fearfully predominant, and that it will require long and careful training to make them subservient to a well-balanced mind and strong moral sense. As to the latter in particular, the black man is generally found woefully deficient, and it will go hard with him to place him under the same moral restraint as white people generally are, if only tolerably educated. For these and other reasons I should have preferred to educate the freedmen before placing them on a political equality with white people. Deficient as the education of a considerable proportion of white men may still be found, it is nevertheless the negro, if compared with them alone, who needs education most. Far more dangerous and hurtful, however, than the crude citizenship of a comparatively small number of voters of this State is to the public, will be the continued agitation of this negro question. As a matter of justice, and for the sake of good policy, I am therefore prepared to do away with this question now and forever. As to the particular mode to be applied toward so desirable an end, I have to say that the proposition of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] seems to me the most rational one, although I do not admit of the soundness of some of the arguments against the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. Bring this question to a final decision in either way, and I shall be satisfied. I do not apprehend any danger for the new Constitution if the property qualification is incorporated in it, nor do I see any harm in a separate submission of the question. Gentlemen on one side may as well assent as not, without fear of injury or loss, to a separate submission, while the gentlemen on the other side will do well to beware of the false step of making it the decisive issue. Partyism should have nothing to do with the decision of this question. Without indorsing some of his arguments I am willing to give the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] a fair trial before this body, and if possible before the people. Had I the least apprehension that the people of the State would so stultify themselves as to vote for the retention of that Bourbonistic freehold clause, I would not dare take this course; but I have a better trust in the intelligence of the people. Let me tell gentlemen who are haunted by the somewhat erroneous impression that the people of this State have uniformly and unqualifiedly voted down negro suffrage, that circumstances have greatly changed since that time. Seven, and twelve, and twenty years ago when such voting took place, slavery was a live institution, recognized and protected by the Constitution of the United States; then the compromise measures, the fugitive slave law and similar federal and State enactments were in full force, and many conscientious and law abiding men may have hesitated, in spite of their anti-slavery sentiments, to vote for a proposition so repugnant to nearly one-half of the states of the Union, and so much at variance with inter-State comity. At present the case stands differently, and the same causes being no longer operative in a balloting on negro suffrage, it is not likely that it will be attended with the same effect as heretofore. But as I stated before, it is altogether a mistaken assertion that the people of this State have voted to keep negro suffrage out of the organic law of the State; they have, on the contrary, uniformly voted negro suffrage into the Constitution, coupled only with a qualification clause upon the merits and value of which the whole question turns at the present time. Has a single gentleman on this floor raised his voice in behalf of a retention of that qualification clause? I am not aware of it, and certain it is, that the gentleman from Kings, [Mr. Murphy], has, with decision and emphasis, expressed himself against it. At a time when the State was greatly in need of stationary and permanent settlers, and when it required a very small amount of money to secure a freehold estate, there may have been some reason for appending such a clause to the section on the right of suffrage; but at no time should it have applied to the colored men alone. In this wonderful age of steam and electricity, however, and at a time when man's capacity, wealth, worth and usefulness are no longer measured by the number of acres of land he owns, such a clause is worse than meaningless and unjust; it is absurd, and its retention a stigma on the intelligence of the people of this State. But if we have to erase it from the Constitution, what shall we do? Shall we do less than we did at a time when negro slavery was in full bloom in nearly one-half of the States of the Union? Shall we still do honor at so late an hour to an obsolete slave-code and reject the negro as a man and citizen? Who is advocating this course? Let me therefore entreat gentlemen to give the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] a fair trial for the sake of impartiality and time-honored custom first, but if it should fail to secure a majority of the votes of this Convention, let us then adopt with unanimity the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger], thus recording ourselves in favor of unrestricted manhood suffrage in the Empire State, Mr. Chairman, before yielding the floor I ask to be indulged in a few remarks on the majority report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage. In the larger cities, and I believe in villages and settlements not less, it has become customary that the subject of naturalization from year to year does not excite any particular attention after the meeting of the political parties in State Convention and the placing of the respective tickets befor the people. The process of naturalization, that is, the taking out of the first as well as of the second paper is therefore principally reserved to the months of September and October of each year. My learned friend from New York [Mr. Daly], who is a judge of the court of common pleas, the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Barnard], and some others have fully explained the customary modus operandi in this process of naturalization, and have likewise pointed out the injurious effect of the proposed extension of time from ten to thirty days. It is therefore safe to say, that if this thirty-day clause of the majority report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage is retained, more than one-half the number of all those who in 1866 have taken out their first papers and are by completing their naturalization in the fall of 1868 under the law of Congress and the Constitution of the State entitled to vote in November of the last named year, will, under this thirty-day clause be temporarily disfranchised: they cannot vote before the year of 1869; plighted faith is broken to them, and federal law and State Constitution are ignored in order to satisfy a mere caprice, for the so called evil or abuse complained of is not removed by the proposed remedy, but diluted only, or extended over a longer period of time. This being the fact, I desire to inquire in all candor and friendliness of the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], whether in his opinion it is fair and just to ask several hundred thousand of naturalized voters, living in this State, to assist him to extend the right of suffrage to all the colored people in this State and at the same time to visit proscription, and temporarily disfranchise their own kinsmen? Has the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] any reason to expect that any naturalized voter, not entirely devoid of self-respect, will sustain his thirty-day clause? If there is no reason to expect such self-pollution on the part of the adopted citizens, will the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] nevertheless insist on his proposition and thereby take the responsibility upon himself of sealing beforehand the fate of the work of this body? Or does he not deem it better to accede to the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger] and thereby to do what is but just and right?

Mr. WAKEMAN—The immediate subject before this committee I understand to be the question of a submission of the question of doing away with the property qualification for the negro; but of the justice of a property qualification, and connected with the merits of the question, I propose, for a few moments, to examine the property qualification in its application. And just let us examine the property qualification as it stands. I suppose it has been adopted as a basis of intelligence, for it can be defended on no other principle; and as it has been recognized by the government of this State, that the colored man should vote, I take it that it was originally placed there as evidence of the intelligence of the voter when he should have acquired two hundred and fifty dollars worth of property. Originally, in 1777, it was applied to all men. In 1821, there were still restrictions on the white as well as the black man, but it was the same provision in 1821 as the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr.

Murphy]; I believe it is the same language. In 1826 the entire restrictions were removed from the white man; and left this identical proposition now submitted by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] in the Constitution as it stood. Now, let us look at it and see. On that principle a man that has two hundred and fifty dollars worth of real estate, free from all charges thereon, and who has been actually assessed, and paid taxes thereon, is a voter. Let us look at its operation. A class of men may be voters, and when the industrious citizen, under the Constitution of the State of New York, and by misfortune and by sickness he is compelled to meet his obligations like white men, and he mortgages that little homestead to fulfill the obligation he owes as a citizen, and as a man of honor, and when the assessor comes around, it turns out that his little homestead is not worth $250, over and above the incumbrances and charges thereon, here you have it that a citizen, that is a voter under the Constitution, by means of misfortune, has been disfranchised, not by his act, but by the Constitution of the State. More than this, in consequence of the prejudice against him on account of his color, the incendiary may apply the torch to his building, and commit the crime of arson, and also bring him below the standard, and when the colored man comes to the polls, will gentlemen tell me he is not as intelligent and not as capable of exercising the right of suffrage then as he was before? More than this, sir, if the assessor fails to perform his duty, then he will be disfranchised under this amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy]. Now, I know it is claimed by some that this right should not be extended to him, because he is inferior to the white race. Does it seem fair for us, if we claim that to be so, because he may be a little inferior than we are, to place a burden on him? Rather should we not lift him up to the standard of humanity, and try to bring him up rather than press him down. The farmers of this country don't treat their dumb beasts this way. If they have one horse weaker than another, they give the weak one the long end of the whiffletree. We will not reverse the order of things in this case. But the minority report and the argument of the honorable gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], does not pretend for a single moment to defend the property qualification, but they say inasmuch as the people of this State have again and again rejected it, therefore it should be rejected again. If you look back a few years, and but a few years, you will see there has been a revolution going on in this country—a revolution that men and parties cannot stop—a revolution, sir, that has carried State after State, and State after State, against the party then in power and which had been in power almost from the formation of the government. And the party now in power has struggled hard against it, and yet this revolution is going on, and it will go onward until this principle is recognized in placing the colored man, where he should be by enfranchising him with the white man. Now, how was it a few years ago, when the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. Colahan] referred a few moments ago to the poor, down-trodden slave in Virginia, that could not tell who George Washington was, nor who Jesus Christ was. Why did he reflect for a single moment, that at that very hour it was a crime in Virginia to teach the poor colored boy that his Saviour died that he might live? Did he know then, that by the laws of Virginia, a female would be imprisoned if she should undertake to teach the poor colored boy to read and to write? Why, Mr. Chairman, if the white race had then been in bondage as long, and had been treated as we have treated the slaves in Virginia, would the poor white boy be able to answer all the questions presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Colahan]? It seems to me not, I say there is a revolution going on and it will still go on. Sir, it was but a few years ago that the "old man eloquent," John Quincy Adams, used to stand up in Congress and present petition after petition, for what? Not from the colored men, but from the white men and women of this country. For what? For the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, the only tribunal that had jurisdiction of the subject, and yet, under the Constitution of the United States, where it states explicitly that Congress shall pass no law, abridging the right of the people to assemble together peaceably, and to petition the government for relief; and yet, sir, these petitions were received, it is true, after a while, but unread and unrefereed they were put under the table. The glorious old man lived to see that rule abolished, and when he said "this is the last of earth" he had the satisfaction of knowing that the odious rule which was called the "Atherton gag" had been abolished. Time moves on. In 1850 the celebrated compromises were made, by which there was a finality put to the slavery question, and so thoroughly were the people convinced of this that the two great parties of the country in their nominations of 1852 made it a finality. But this revolution which is going on would not allow it to be a finality, for when slavery had gained that particular point in the controversy, then it was that the compromise of 1820 was attacked, and when that was repealed the party then in power were overthrown by a party based upon this repeal and against the extension of slavery, and from that, along up to the commencement of the war, this question has been going on steadily, but as surely as water finds its level. In 1861, after having elected a President upon this question, the South made war on the Government of the United States for the purpose of destroying this Union. And when we went into that contest, after seventy-five thousand men had been called into action, and three hundred thousand more, once and again, we undertook to fight it out by entirely ignoring the colored man. We would not, in the first place, allow him to dig our trenches for us, and at last, being hardly pressed by the rebels, we thought we had something that would give us relief. What was that? It was that we should treat him as contraband of war. That is, by the rules of war, we have a right to appropriate the property belonging to the enemy for our own use, and for a time we treated him as contraband of war, and allowed him to dig our trenches in place of the white man. But time rolled along, and for more than one year the work progressed on this line, and yet our armies were not victorious. Why, sir? We had failed to recognize the existing fact, that the war was for the purpose of destroying the Union and establishing slavery as its chief corner-stone, and when the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln was proclaimed, it was not alone the Democratic party who were alarmed at it; many true and loyal men of the Republican party faltered on the wayside almost. They were fearful of its consequences upon the people of the North and of the South. Yet, sir, when that proclamation was made, and we commenced action under it, by allowing the colored soldier to take the place of the white man, and placed the musket in his hand, and when we called two hundred thousand of the black men and put United States uniforms upon them, then it was that the tide of battle set in in favor of the victorious North, and the Government. Until then, sir, we had the Bull Run defeats. Until then, the war being fought out on the other line was a failure. From that time, henceforward, we went right along from victory to victory, until the final triumph of the fall of Richmond. This shows to my mind that God still rules the destinies of nations. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the light of these facts, the facts of history, I ask whether public opinion is not prepared to-day to put the final finish upon this question forever. I ask my democratic friends on this floor, whether they are not prepared here and now to say that this question shall be disposed of. You can do more in this Convention in one day, if you will, than Congress, which is now sitting practically with this very question before them—I mean in the reconstruction of the government, for it involves that—for if the strong men of New York will only come up here along with us and say we now acknowledge the situation, and the question of reconstruction would be substantially settled. It would be said to those gentlemen who have acted with the gentlemen in the past that it is no use for us to struggle any longer, and we therefore acknowledge the situation, and they would most assuredly acquiesce in it. Thus by our action on this question we would encourage the loyal men of the south that they must submit to the situation, and seats that are now vacant in Washington would soon be filled. I was exceedingly sorry and felt somewhat pained, because I claim to be a humanitarian myself, to hear the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Colahan] speak on the subject of disfranchisement of the negro. Now let us see for a moment. I suppose that gentleman, coming from the old country, crossed the big waters to make it his home here in the land of his adoption. We have opened our ports; we have broad acres for the people of the oppressed nations of Europe to occupy and possess, and I was sorry to hear him take ground against the oppressed negro men, born on American soil, from enjoying the right of the elective franchise. I always extend to those men a welcome, without a thought of attaching any property qualification whatever. But it seems to me that if I had left my country and sought an asylum in another country under another government, I would be less than a man, if I were to raise my voice in a constitutional Convention against a native of that country from enjoying the same right that was accorded to me without a property qualification of two hundred and fifty dollars. I should rather feel like lifting up the oppressed I should find in the land of my adoption. You and I, Mr. Chairman, are proud of our country and our home. It is no merit of ours that we were born here. The man who comes across the waters to America, comes from choice and adopts it with all the privileges thereto belonging. It seems to me that if I was placed as those persons are, it would be my pleasure to speak in favor of the oppressed I should find in my adopted country. But let us look at the operation of the law. Suppose a foreign born citizen approaches the polls, and a preliminary challenge is made. What does he do? The question is asked, "Where were you born?" "Ireland, sir." "How long have you been in this country?" "So long." And they go on and ask him if he had been naturalized, and he produces his naturalization papers without any property qualification at all, and it appeared that he had been naturalized just ten days before the day of the election, when he had sworn allegiance to our government for the first time and had renounced his allegiance to his mother country. Well, sir, is that man admitted to vote? I say he is. He is, for my country gives him the right to vote when he is entitled to citizenship. But let us pursue this a little further. Suppose a colored man should approach the polls and offer his vote. And suppose, sir, the question was put to him: "Are you possessed of $250 worth of real property, and have you been actually assessed and paid taxes thereon?" "No, sir; but I was born in the city of Albany; I have been in the service of the Union Army; I was at the battles of Coal Harbor and the Wilderness; I was with Gen. Wadsworth when he fell pierced with rebel bullets, and I wiped the cold death sweat from his noble brow while his life's blood was moistening the sacred soil of Virginia." More than this—"Sir, I was with that colored regiment when they marched into Richmond and I there bore aloft the stars and stripes of my country; true, those stars and stripes had been tattered and torn, and stained with the blood of my countrymen, yet I was there and upheld them at the hour that the rebel capital fell." "This will not answer, Sir." Very well, then he takes from his pocket his naturalization papers and presents them with the broad seal of the United States marked upon them. It turns out, however, to be a certificate of pensions, granting him a pension for wounds received in battle in the service of the United States. By this time the inspector gets a little nervous, and he says: "Sir, I must inform you that the people of New York met in Convention in the city of Albany in 1867, and they there re-enacted and adopted the same provisions that had been adopted in the Constitution of 1821, a period of more than forty-six years ago, and that Convention, in order to get together the assembled wisdom of the State, went beyond all precedent and called into action of the Convention, thirty-two honorable gentlemen and statesmen of both parties in the State, so that we should have a Constitution presented free from faults, and that had some progressive features in it." What is the result? Why, these men being selected from the parties throughout the State to aid the district delegates, at last have brought forward the same identical proposition, and thrown it into this Convention for an action ignoring the great past, ignoring all past history, and when that proposition is placed here, there is not one of them that will defend the bantling at all. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] says. It is no proposition of mine. "I found it in the Constitution of 1846" or in other words, he found the bantling on his steps, and it has been there for the last twenty years and he throws it in here and says, I want to submit it to the people, — don't charge it upon me. I want that some one should father it before I am willing to submit it to the people as a separate proposition; for as the gentleman from New York [Mr. Gross] said he has heard no man defend the principle, nor can it be defended. The gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] says it cannot be defended on principle, and yet they ask us to submit it to the people. I cannot for one submit any such question as that, unless it has some principle in it, and one that commends itself to my heart and my vote. I, sir, am in favor of disposing of this question now—putting an end to it forever. It is a mere question of time. If we struggle against it, we shall soon be carried off and swept away with it; for I tell you, sir, this revolution is still going on and will go on until justice shall be done to the colored man. I remember a few years ago in my own district, just above Niagara Falls, a poor German had been lost overboard and had caught on a log or something just above the yawning gulf below; he struggled manfully, for a long time, knowing his certain fate, for no human aid could be rendered to him; finally he gave way and went over the precipice. Just so sure, sir, as that water rolls, we have got to enfranchise the colored man without any property qualification, and the men who struggle against it will be carried over the falls of public opinion and be dashed to pieces. Suppose in the Constitution we shall adopt we take manhood suffrage and put into it, saying nothing about white men and nothing about black men, but say all men—every man of twenty-one years of age, and with certain other qualifications, shall vote. Does not that look manly and bold, to recognize a man—a man is a man; and if the colored man is not a man, he cannot vote under such a Constitution. But if by reason of any prejudice, this Constitution should be voted down with that in it, the epitaph over it will be "not dead but sleepeth." Because it would be but a short time before it will come upon us again and again, until it is disposed of. We can then turn our attention to other questions of State. I am opposed to the separate submission of this question, because I believe it to be right to do the thing we are sent here for, and I believe the colored man has a right to demand at our hands that we shall abolish this qualification.

And I believe, sir, as we placed the musket heretofore in the hands of the colored man in the hour of our country's peril, we should now place also the ballot in his hands. I like myself to be called a humanitarian, I am willing that all men should enjoy every blessing of heaven that I enjoy myself, and there is something beautiful in the idea, if we make a Constitution in all its parts, recognizing manhood wherever we find it. There is something in it that suits my constitution exactly. Look at it. All men, sir, it is like the commencement of our Lord's prayer. "Our Father," not "my father"—I want to have a oneness and a singleness of purpose by which manhood everywhere can be leveled up and not leveled down. When we have disposed of this exciting question, and we can get the negro out of politics and all the questions connected with it, what a country we can present. Reconstruction will be complete. This country must ever remain one. That has been settled, sir, by the prowess of our arms. Look at it; what a glorious country if we could get this question out of it—the North and South, East and West all one country, and all of us recognizing as second only to God, the supremacy of our government, and the Constitution of the United States. Not subordinate to the State governments but each State coming in its place, forming a great arch, and carrying out the democratic theory of government. The various portions of our country all together presenting themselves, it would produce a glorious effect. My democratic friends, many measures of your policy have been adopted as the principles on which this government shall be administered, and they will stand forever. We want your counsel and aid, to help carry out this principle of self-government, and I believe if you will take hold with me and the rest of us, you can put the finish to this question now and forever. The men behind us, the voters behind you will do as you say, the strong men are here, the sachems are here. This Convention can give the final touches. Let us do it and finish it right here and then in a very short time we can live in one country and under one Constitution, and hope sir, but for one destiny.

Mr. WEED—I desire, sir, to make some remarks upon the subject, but as it is near the ordinary time of our adjournment, I will move that the Committee do now rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Weed, and it was declared carried.

Whereupon the committee rose, and the President resumed the Chair in Convention.

Mr. ALVORD, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that the committee had had under consideration the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, and had made some progress therein, but not having gone through therewith, had instructed their Chairman to report that fact to the Convention, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on granting leave, and it was declared carried.

Mr. BELL—I move that the Convention take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. FOLGER—I move to amend that by making it at four o'clock P. M.

Mr. ALVORD—I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Mr. M. I. TOWNSEND called for the ayes and noes on the motion to adjourn and a sufficient number seconding the call, the ayes and noes were ordered.

The question was then put on the motion to adjourn, and it was declared lost by the following vote:

Mr. GREELEY offered the following resolution: Resolved, That the debate in the Committee of the Whole, on the report of the Committee on Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office, be closed at one o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT—The resolution will be received at the proper time. The question now is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ontario [Mr. Folger].

Mr. BARTO moved to amend so as to make it seven o'clock.

Which was lost.

The question was then put upon the amendment offered by Mr. Folger, and it was carried.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Bell as amended, and it was declared to be carried.

On motion of Mr. AXTELL, the Convention took a recess until four o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at four o'clock.

Mr. ALVORD asked that the roll of the Convention be called.

The SECRETARY proceeded to call the roll of the Convention, and it appeared that the following delegates were present.

Messrs. A. F. Allen, C. L. Allen, N. M. Allen, Alvord, Andrews, Archer, Armstrong, Axtell, Ballard, Barker, Barnard, Barto, Beadle, Beckwith, Bell, Bickford, E. Brooks, E. P. Brooks, E. A.

Mr. GREELEY—I ask a suspension of the rules, if it be necessary to introduce this resolution: “Resolved that—

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman that the rules cannot be suspended except upon one day's notice.

Mr. GREELEY—Then I will ask the unanimous consent of the Convention to introduce this resolution: “Resolved, that the debate in the Committee of the Whole.—

SEVERAL DELEGATES—I object.

The PRESIDENT—By the rules, the regular call of the Calendar should be proceeded with until the order of unfinished business is reached. But there being no objection, this will be passed and the Convention will resolve itself into a Committee of Whole—

Mr. CONGER—I hope not, Mr. President. The Convention took a recess and not an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will state that the question was put to the Convention before the adjournment on granting leave to the Committee of the Whole to sit again and leave was granted. That order of business had been completed. By the rules of order the next order of business is special orders and then general orders.

The PRESIDENT proceeded to call special and general orders in the order of business.

Mr. TAPPEN—I move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Legislature its Organization, etc.

The PRESIDENT—That report having been made to-day, it is now in the hands of the printer.

Mr. ALVORD—I was just going to observe that I believed it would not be in order to consider the report of that committee in Committee of the Whole until it was printed and laid upon the tables of members.

The PRESIDENT resumed the call of the order of business.

Mr. DUGANNE presented the petition of Hugh Gardiner and 172 others, citizens of New York, in favor of prohibiting the donation of public moneys to sectarian institutions.

Which was referred to the Committee on the Powers and Duties of the Legislature.

Mr. ALVORD—I move that all other order of business except the unfinished business of general orders be laid on the table.

Mr. GREELEY—I object as I want to offer a resolution.

Mr. ALVORD—I made a motion, Mr. President, that all order of business be laid on the table except unfinished business of general orders.

Mr. DEVELIN—That requires a two-third vote, does it not?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will read the rule governing the order of business. It is as follows:

“The first business of each day's session shall be the reading of the Journal of the preceding day and the correction of any errors that may be found to exist therein. After which, except on days and at times set apart for the consideration of special orders, the order of business, which shall not be departed from except by unanimous consent, shall be as follows,” etc.

Mr. KERNAN—I rise to a question of order. When a recess is taken, are we not, when we assemble again, in the same position as we were when we adjourned?

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will hold that the order of business had been concluded when the Convention took a recess.

Mr. GREELEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending amendments be closed at five o'clock p. m. this day.

Mr. DEVELIN—I propose to debate that resolution.

The PRESIDENT—The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York [Mr. Develin] that the resolution can be now acted upon by the Convention, inasmuch as it relates to the business before the Convention and the business of the day.

Mr. E. BROOKS—If it be in order I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was then put on the motion of Mr. Brooks and it was declared carried. A division being called for, the motion was sustained by a vote of 53 to 28.

Mr. DUGANNE offered the following resolution.

Resolved, That the Committee on Currency, Banking and Insurance, and the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, Banking and Insurance, be directed to confer together and report upon the expediency of providing for the creation of a State Department or Bureau of Corporations to have jurisdiction over all proper matters involving the public interest in banks, insurance companies and other joint stock corporations organized under the laws of the State, by special incorporation or charter, and requiring that all such joint stock corporations shall render annual statements of their affairs to be embodied in a report to the Legislature.

Which was referred to the committees named in the resolution.

Mr. W. C. BROWN—I move that the debate on the pending amendments be closed to-morrow afternoon at 12 o'clock.

Which was laid on the table.

The Convention then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage and the Qualifications to Hold Office; Mr. Alvord, of Onondaga, in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN announced the pending question to be on the amendment offered by Mr. Murphy, to the substitute offered by Mr. C. C. Dwight for the clause reported by the Committee.

Mr. WEED — The question pending before this Committee has been so fully discussed that no member can take the subject up and give it a full consideration without repeating much that has been said; I, therefore, at this time, knowing that the Committee are wearied with the debate on this subject, shall not attempt to fully discuss the questions involved in the majority and minority reports of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage, and the amendments pending before the Committee to the article reported by the majority. I deem, Mr. Chairman, many of the positions taken by the different gentlemen who have addressed this committee entirely outside of the pending question. The range of discussion has been very broad, and many subjects that seemed to me to be more fit for party issues in a party contest before the people have been discussed than were pertinent to the question at issue before us. I regretted, Mr. Chairman, to see these discussions. I regretted to see political lines attempted to be drawn, and political issues attempted to be forced upon this Convention. I regretted it the more, Mr. Chairman, because for the first few weeks of this session we were so honeyed towards each other; we were to have no political difference; questions of party politics and party policies were to be thrown out of this Convention, and we were to meet here as men to discuss what was best for the State, and after a thorough and candid discussion to submit our deliberations to the people. We find, however, that upon the first question that presented itself to this body, certain persons in the majority have cried out that all men who have acted with the democratic party must be in the wrong upon this, and if we may judge from inferences, upon every other question that is before this Convention, have at once raised party issues. In some of these gentlemen I was not surprised. The youthful ardor of my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett] would lead his eloquent tongue off into such paths. The earnestness of my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend], and his continued discussions on political questions would lead him in that direction. And my friend and colleague from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] by his profession is naturally thrown into the confused pool of politics, and, naturally, led to indulge in political animosities and criminations; but that the humanitarians of this Convention should have taken political ground upon this subject, and made stump speeches, for political effect, upon this question did surprise me, and has surprised many, and it is with regret that I see those gentlemen avoiding the real question at issue before this committee, and attempting by sensation discourses to draw our minds from the pending proposition. I trusted that the provisions of these gentlemen—of all gentlemen upon this floor, made at the commencement of the session were in earnest. I have no doubt they were so intended, and I deeply regret that we have, any of us, departed from those professions. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I look upon this question, it is very simple — very simple indeed, and I will attempt briefly to show that it is simple, and I cannot for the life of me see how men sitting here in their seats, desiring that the people of the State should govern and control these questions, desiring a submission fairly, honestly and squarely, to the people of the State can come to but one conclusion upon it. The individual opinions, Mr. Chairman, of any member of this body, have nothing to do with the questions pending before it, and ought not, I suppose in strict Parliamentary law, in pursuance of a strict rule, to be forced upon this Convention; and if other gentlemen had not spoken their individual sentiments and opinion upon this subject, I should pass from the subject entirely, and I only refer to it now that I may be placed right upon the record, and that it may give more force to the position that I take with reference to this question of submission — as I had the pleasure to state before this committee some days ago in reply to an answer, to a question I put to the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould]. I am in favor of abolishing the property qualification that prevents negroes in this State from exercising the unlimited and unrestricted right of suffrage. I, in common with many other democrats in this State believe that the negroes of this State to-day are competent to exercise the elective franchise. I desire that the property qualification that prevents them from exercising it to its fullest extent may be swept from our Constitution. I desire to see at the polls in November, a submission of that question to the people, and I hope to see it carried by an overwhelming majority. From this point of view, believing, as I do, that the negroes of this State are entitled to vote by reason of their intelligence, that they are in this State, whatever may be their condition in other States of the Union, educated up to a proper amount of intelligence so that they are entitled to vote and can be safely allowed to participate in the government of the State. Believing in this position, I approach this subject of submission, as the only subject before us, without bias and only desire that it shall be submitted in the best possible manner. How then are we to submit this question to the people, that they may take it and determine it? And in discussing this question, I need but for a moment reiterate the statement made by so many, and so clearly of the position of the question before us. The pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] provides for an independent submission of this question to the people. It does not, as stated by the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman] incorporate any new element in the new Constitution. It does not pledge the party that the gentleman from Kings is an honored representative of, to a submission of a property qualification for electors to the people of this State. It is his idea of the mode in which this question should be submitted to the people. I am frank to say, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot support his amendment. I am as I have said, in favor of a separate submission. I desire and believe it is eminently proper, just and right, that a separate submission of this question should be made to the people of this State. But I do not like the form in which the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], puts it. It may be that the form of the proposition is simply a question of taste, supposing it to be submitted as a separate proposition; still I think that the objections to this form, taken by some who have spoken against the proposition of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy] may be a sound one; that it would tend to give the weight of this Convention against the proposition. I do not wish for one to have it placed in any such position. I wish a square independent amendment submitted upon this question of suffrage. I wish it submitted with the force of the majority of this Convention in favor of the principle—the majority in numbers I speak of, not political majority. I wish it so framed; and if some other gentlemen do not, when the proper time comes, I myself will offer such an amendment, submitting the question fairly, submitting a section with the property qualification left out, and providing that that should be the Constitution of the State of New York, upon this subject, if it is ratified by the people, and if it is not ratified by the people then, the Constitution upon this subject must stand as it is to-day. This must be the result, in whatever form the submission is made, if it is not ratified by the people. And in this view it seems to me, with this idea of separate submission, no gentleman upon the floor of the House can object. It would bring the subject in a simple form directly before the people. It would give any man, no matter whatever his views may be upon any other question submitted; whether he could or could not sustain the Constitution as a whole, whether he had a special objection to any portion of it, an opportunity to walk up to the polls and cast his vote upon the question intelligently, honestly and fairly. Let us see, Mr. Chairman, what the objections of the political majority of this Convention are to this proposition—to this separate submission. Why do they wax so eloquent against it? Why does one gentleman say that it would be cowardice in this Convention, cowardice in their political party, to make a separate submission of this question? Why do I see proscription of certain members of that party, who feel as I feel, that it should be submitted separately? Is there something behind this proposition to submit? If gentlemen are so anxious to defeat a separate submission that they will resort to their eloquence, that they will prescribe the members of their party who do not come up to their views, is there not something back of it that they desire? Do they desire to hold up some of their own peculiar plans and projects by this question? Do they desire to go before the people upon this question of suffrage, and compel the people upon this question to swallow other matters that may be submitted to them in this Constitution that would otherwise be defeated? Is it for the reason that there are party questions, that there are party policies, that there are local questions and local policies, that are proposed to be driven through with this question of negro suffrage? I believe that the great bulk of the political majority of this house believe that the negro suffrage question at the polls will be carried by a majority if separately submitted. I think if that question is submitted by itself, it will be carried, and carried by a large majority. And I am forced to the conclusion that the gentlemen in the majority upon the floor of this Convention believing so, with me, are actuated by some other motives, not acknowledged in this debate. I believe with the eloquent gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], that the people will extend the right of suffrage to the black man, and I am not afraid to submit the question to the people. I do not fear but that they, as well as the gentleman from Onondaga, will keep time to the music of the Union, as he says, upon this subject. They will go to the polls and decide this question for themselves, and it seems to me, I cannot separate it in my mind, that there is some hidden object, some reason that we do not see upon the surface, some reason that they do not give us openly and fairly, why the majority of this body are bound to submit this question in with the body of the Constitution. Either this is so, or, Mr. Chairman, it may be that the gentlemen composing the majority of this body fear that negro suffrage, submitted as an independent proposition, would be defeated by the people of the State. I am aware that the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], my colleague, takes that distinct ground, as a representative of the majority.

Mr. AXTELL— I beg leave to correct the gentleman. I have not taken the ground that it would be defeated, or very likely to be defeated.

Mr. WEED— I was prepared for the interruption for from the second or third speech that the gentleman made on this subject, I saw that he was taking in sail gradually, but I supposed he had not come to the point to deny, and I have before me the remarks of the gentleman which I will read on that subject. He says:

"I grant, sir, that if you were to submit this question as a distinct proposition to the people of this State it might possibly be defeated. And why? Because, sir, unfortunately, in connection with the principle of manhood suffrage which is imbedded in the public mind, and which will continue to be imbedded there, we cannot rule out certain criminal classes who will vote against extending the right of suffrage to the negro. That is all sir. The gamblers of the State will vote against it. All that class of persons who are notorious criminals, and who are always at the polls will vote against it. * * * But, sir, as I have said, there is a class of persons who have still a prejudice, and who deny to colored men rights that they would have themselves—are the class who murdered and burned negroes in the riots in New York in 1863. These are the men, generally, who, if the question were untrammelled by party and party influences, who would vote against the extension of the right of suffrage to the colored man."

He says then that if it is not put in the body of the Constitution, it may be defeated.

Mr. AXTELL—The gentleman said, as I understood him, that I had said that it would be likely to be defeated. That is not what I said, nor has he made that statement good, as I understand him.

Mr. WEED—I stated in substance what I have read from his remarks. I said that gentlemen on the other side of the House, and the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], has said that they voted for a submission of this question in the body of the Constitution, because it might be defeated if separately submitted, and proceeded to give the reasons why it would be likely to be defeated, and those were substantially the words used by the gentleman.

Mr. AXTELL—Will the gentleman allow me to correct him again? I submit to this committee that there is no such statement in my words, and no such inference can fairly be drawn, that I feared it might be defeated.

Mr. WEED—The technicality of the gentleman's words is, evidently, not a matter of interest to the committee. If the gentleman can deny that the legitimate conclusion of his words are that the reason he voted for putting the negro suffrage question into the body of the Constitution was that it would be more likely to be carried than if it was a separate proposition, I have no objection. If he will come up and say that he did not so state, and take back the words I have read, I will acquit him. If not, the words show that the reason that actuated him in his vote, was that he feared, whether he used the word or not, that it might be defeated if separately submitted. But I ask the majority of this Convention, for it seems to me that is the only rational reason that can be given (if they are acquitted of a desire to carry through other matters with this proposition), if they are prepared to assume the position of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell] as their position upon this question, that they, the representatives of a great party of great principles, as they call themselves, and believing in the people, dare not go before the people with a single proposition of this kind, dare not submit the question of negro suffrage to the electors of this State, without complicating it and twisting it up, and tying it up with other issues. It is in that unfortunate position that I see the political majority of this body. It is in that position that I regret to see them, because, as I have said, it is not a political question. I see them holding out to the world that they need other issues linked with this issue to procure its adoption. I see them holding out to the world the flag of truce, saying that they fear to come before the people of the State of New York upon this one distinct issue. I here see them saying upon this one issue alone we may be defeated, although we have a political majority in this State.

Mr. MERRITT—Will the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] allow me to ask him a question. What proposition is it proposed that the political majority of this Convention desire to carry through by submitting it in the Constitution? One other. Has it been proclaimed upon this floor? If so, I would like to be informed. I ask simply for information.

Mr. WEED—Mr. Chairman, it has been my habit in this world, when I see men going back upon themselves, when I see men refusing to "take" as I will call it by a very homely phrase, "the bull by the horns," when I see them failing to walk up and meet the issue distinctly, and trying to complicate it and mix it up with other issues, to suppose that there is some reason for it. I see the republican majority of this house in that condition. I see them fearing to take this matter squarely to the people, and I at once look for the reason. I don't know what that reason is, but I say this, it can be but one of the two that I have mentioned. If the gentleman, as I have no doubt he will, will deny that it is from cowardice that he refuses to submit this question separately, then I say here in my place that I cannot see any other reason, except it be to carry through with it some political or local projects, and I say that it is a direct consequence of that state of facts. I do not know what those projects are. I trust there are none. I hope the majority of the house and the minority together will submit this question separately, and by an unanimous vote, to the people. I trust that they will not, as I was about to say, place this question before the people in a way that speaks to the people as follows: we cannot trust you to decide upon this question for yourselves. I believe in the position taken by the honorable gentleman from Oneida, upon the question of the natural rights of suffrage. His argument upon that subject meets my views more fully than any other gentleman's upon the floor of the Convention. I hold that in the people of the State of New York rest to-day the right to say who shall and who shall not vote. I believe and have always believed that that right rested in the people of every State, and I hold that to be the democratic doctrine.

Mr. GREELEY—I would like to ask the gentleman who are the people that have a right to decide whether other people shall vote or not.

Mr. WEED—I am happy that the gentleman has asked that question. They are the people who under the Constitution of the State of New York have a right to the elective franchise. They are the only people—I do not believe in any higher law, and I do not believe in any political right above the rights that we as the people of the State, as the community, are entitled to. I believe the people of the State who have the right under the present Constitution, are the people, and the only people in a political sense, and every man it seems to me must, unless he cuts himself entirely loose from all Constitutions and from all laws—unless he says that I do not believe in any political or civil organization. It seems to me that there can be no doubt, but that the people who to-day have the right of suffrage in this State under the Constitution of the State, and the Constitution of the United States are politically the people of this State, and it is for them to say who shall vote, whether they will extend or restrict the election franchise, and I, as one of those people, simply express my opinion that that elective franchise can with safety and propriety be extended in this State to negroes. And I have more faith in the people of the State of New York than other gentlemen who have spoken on the other side. I have more faith than the gentleman who last addressed me [Mr. Greeley]. I believe, as I have said, that the people of the State of New York, if this question is fairly submitted to them, have made up their minds upon it and will decide it in the affirmative. If they do not, I would ask the gentlemen upon the other side, what is the remedy? Does the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] propose to appeal from the verdict of the people? And if in case this Constitution is submitted and voted down by the electors who vote at the next November election, does he propose that the negroes shall vote, whether the people say they shall or shall not have this right?

Mr. GREELEY—I would like to answer the gentlemen now. I propose that the black citizens shall vote this fall by the action of this Convention, on the ratification of its action, and that will be according to the precedent of the Constitution of 1821, which was likewise submitted to be ratified by the men whom that Constitution enfranchised.

Mr. WEED—I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he propose to allow them to vote in violation of statute?

Mr. GREELEY—I suppose that the Constitution is above the statute.

Mr. WEED—I suppose the gentleman does not care for the statute and if he was discussing the statute he would not care for the Constitution. [Laughter.] I am not above the statutes of the State, nor am I above the Constitution of the State. I believe that the people who, under the statute and the Constitution, have the right to vote, will determine this question and that they alone have the right, and when they have determined it, I suspect that the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] and myself, however much we may dislike it, will have to submit and abide by the decision of the people. And I tell him and the other gentlemen acting with him, that if he does not know now, who the people of the State are he will find out when they pass upon this question and it becomes a part of the organic law of the land. Let me say a word or two more in reference to the question he asks. Who are the people? Of course, in determining this question if we disregard the Constitution and the Statute, and do not refer to enfranchised citizens, then the people of the State are the living, moving, breathing human beings, and if that is what he means by the people, I wish to ask him the question, whether he proposes that the women shall vote upon the question of the adoption of the Constitution we are to frame for submission.

Mr. GREELEY—Certainly, if we decide to enfranchise them, I shall insist that they be allowed and authorized to vote on the adoption of this Constitution.

Mr. WEED—The gentleman goes deeper and deeper every step. Our action here cannot affect the right of the people. If women, then, because they are a part of the "people" are entitled to vote upon the question of adopting this Constitution, then they will have the self same right to vote upon it if we do not enfranchise them. We give them no additional rights by submitting to the people of the State a proposition that may emanate from us as a Convention, and the people of the State, to whom we are by law compelled to submit our conclusions, are the legally qualified electors and qualified voters of this State to-day, not the negroes or the women, because under the Constitution they cannot exercise the elective franchise. I return then, Mr. Chairman, to my proposition and say that there can be but one of these two reasons why the majority refuse to submit this question separately. Gentlemen ask: why not submit every other proposition by itself? Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it should be so, and believing as I do in the virtue and capacity of the people, I think that every proposition that can be fully and intelligently submitted to the people, every proposition not so complicated but that the people may walk up to the polls and vote upon it understandingly, should be submitted to the people of this State for their adoption, separately. But I see a marked distinction between this question and any other question, that can be or will be submitted by this Convention to the people. That distinction, Mr. Chairman, is this: we may not be able to disentangle from the Constitution we may frame here, the executive, legislative or judicial system; it may be framed by this Convention upon one great scheme, or in pursuance of one peculiar governmental policy, and so interwoven among themselves that it will be almost impossible to submit them separately—so interwoven that they will not harmonize if one is adopted and the other rejected, and for this reason it may be that we cannot submit these propositions separately. But when you come to this question of franchise, it has nothing to do with the scheme of State government: it has nothing to do with the formation of a Constitution under which we may carry on the government; it is entirely independent of it, and it covers simply the question as to who shall, under that Constitution, exercise the elective franchise, and participate in giving effect to its provisions, if the remainder is ratified, or if the remainder is defeated, then who shall exercise the right, under our present Constitution. In that view of the case, it ought not to be trammelled in any way by a joint submission with other questions. It cannot be affected except improperly, by any other clause in the Constitution. It must rest upon itself, and be an independent proposition, suggesting itself to every man's mind, whether or not he believes that the negroes of this State are sufficiently intelligent to exercise the elective franchise. If he believes they are, it is the duty, the right and the privilege of every man in the State of New York who is a voter in November next to deposit his vote in favor of that proposition. If he believes that they are not—honestly believes it—it is his right, his privilege and his duty to vote against it, whatever may be the effect upon the political organization that he may vote with. It is a right that he has to vote upon this question, yes, or no. Let us see if he has that right under a general submission of the provisions we may adopt in this Convention. I asked a question of the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould] the other day, which, it seems to me, is quite conclusive upon that subject. I asked him how he could, conscientiously, go to the polls and vote upon this question, if there was embodied in that Constitution, something that he could not give his honest assent to—would he not be put in the position of voting directly for that which he knew to be wrong, or else voting against negro suffrage, which he believes to be right, and to vote against which, I know from his remarks, would give him great pain. He wisely avoided answering that question—

Mr. GOULD—Will the gentleman allow me to explain. I was not at all aware of avoiding any question whatever. When I replied to the question, I was arguing that no intelligent democrat would desire to vote against that proposition. That was the reason I assigned why there should be no separate submission and the gentleman himself responded to me at once, that he would not desire to vote against it. I supposed, sir, I had given the most full and ample answer. If the gentleman still desires me to tell him why it is impossible to submit this question without a fraud upon the voters, I will do so now.

Mr. WEED—I shall be very happy to have the gentleman do so, unless he is going to repeat what he said the other day and take half an hour. If so I shall have to object.

Mr. GOULD—Five minutes will do it.

Mr. WEED—I shall be happy to give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. GOULD—Then I say, a separate submission is an absolute fraud upon the voters of this State, and let me take a single illustration, which, I think, will convince the gentleman himself. Suppose, sir, that the gentleman from Albany [Mr. Harris] should bring a proposition into this Convention, that the Baptist Church, of which he is an honored and distinguished member, shall be made the religion of the State, and suppose this Convention resolves that this question shall be submitted to the people of the State. How am I going to vote intelligently upon that question. I agree ex animo to every single line and letter of the Constitution as it stands and if nothing but this Constitution is to be enacted by the people, I agree to it most heartily and believe it is a very great improvement upon the Constitution we now have. But how am I to vote upon that provision of the Constitution, I do not want any Baptist Church as the State religion, or any other church and if that should be by any contingency be interpolated in the Constitution, it will be like the fly in the ointment of the apothecary, which shall cause every portion of it to stink in my nostrils. And if I desire to vote upon the Constitution which I fully approve, and believe that the intelligence of the people of this State will at once vote down this doctrine, yet I may find myself mistaken, and I may find, although I have voted for the Constitution, yet I have absolutely, by the contingency of the separate submission of that question, been voting to impose upon the people, a thing I utterly abhor. But let us take the very question before the committee. We all know who it is that opposes the "nagur vote," we may vote for it in Convention and we may submit the Constitution, we shall provide separately to their judgment, and they may labor under the impression that this negro suffrage question will be voted down, and under that apprehension they may vote for the Constitution as proposed, and it will be a fraud upon our Irish fellow citizens, for they will find themselves saddled with a Constitution which they might possibly have voted down but for that mistake and this error. It is for this reason that if we attempt to have a separate submission it must prove a fraud and a snare, which no honest man ought to desire to impose on the people of this State. That is the answer, sir.

Mr. WEED—I am again pleased, sir. If I wanted anything more to convince this Convention that there ought to be a separate submission, it must be convinced by the statement of the gentleman from Columbia [Mr. Gould]. The case he puts is put with so much more strength and vigor than I could put it, and must be so conclusive to his own mind and every body else's mind that I thank him for it and take the case as he puts it. Suppose we have a Constitution which is every thing a man can want, and if eighty-one members put a proposition into it that the Baptist Church shall be the reigning religion of this State, the gentleman says that it would be a fraud upon the people of the State to submit that question separately. It would be a fraud upon this people to give them a Constitution that would be the best they could live under in the world—it would be a fraud to give them all their hearts could wish as a people and give it to them separate from this question of religion, or should this religious question be submitted as a separate proposition to the people, that they might, as they would, throw it to the winds and take that which was so good, which was formed with such care and power, to themselves as their Constitution, and throw out that which they did not like. It seems to me that no position could be stronger, in favor of a separate submission than this, and I thank the gentleman for his explanation. He certainly made no such answer when I asked him the question the other day; and I thank him for it now. And I thank him for another remark—a remark that shows the feeling and sentiments of the gentleman and those with whom he acts; and it is when he gave the Irish intonation to the word "nagur." It shows that he in his humanitarian spirit, looks above any man with a white skin; it shows that he believes, from the bottom of his heart, the principle that he tried to inculcate in the Convention, that the negro was infinitely superior to the white man.

Mr. GOULD—The gentleman must not misquote me. I said no such thing as the gentleman says.

Mr. WEED—He said in answer to the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], that he knew of a black man who he said might not be the equal of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], but that he was the equal of every other man in the Convention.

Mr. GOULD—No sir.

Mr. WEED—I do not intentionally intend to misquote the gentleman.

Mr. GOULD—I was speaking then solely on the question of politeness, and not upon the question of intellect, when I said that, and on good manners. That is all, sir.

Mr. WEED—I cannot distinguish the different positions taken by the gentleman. I know some of his positions had reference to shin bones and others to intellect, for I heard him talking about negroes making almanacs, and asking if any member of this Convention could calculate an almanac, and I had to admit that I could not make an almanac. And I think I heard him talk about politeness, and I think that every one who heard him must be convinced that that black men referred to by him was in his opinion our equal in intellect and much our superior in politeness. I say I am glad that the gentleman gave the intonation that he did, for it accords well with the sentiments expressed by the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], my colleague, when he referred, the other day, to the democratic party as composed entirely, or substantially of those who were guilty of the riots in the city of New York.

Mr. AXTELL—I rise to a point of order. Is it in order to make political stump speeches in this session?

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WEED—I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, to disturb the gentleman, but when I heard the remarks of the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], and heard the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], I thought then, they should have compared notes beforehand. The one threw out the idea before this Convention and the people of the State, that the democratic party consisted of Irishmen who were ready to go into a riot at any time, and the gentleman from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], slightly intimated that we were politically, if not in fact, know-nothings. I think they do not agree.

Mr. CORBETT—If the gentleman will allow me to make a correction. I did not intimate it as broadly as the gentleman suggests, but I said there was a strong sprinkling in that direction.

Mr. WEED—There may be a strong sprinkling in some places, but it is not in my direction, and never was. I simply refer to it to show the arguments which are used, and I regretted exceedingly that gentlemen should utter such things upon a question of this kind, that they should so far forget the position they occupy here, as to try, by throwing slurs at the democratic party and members of that party, to carry through what I cannot believe to be right. Those are the arguments and I know they are the only arguments I have heard, in favor of the separate submission, and I refer to it to show that they are not arguments, but appeals to the passions of the members of this Convention. As I said before, the ground has been so fully covered, that no man can make a speech upon this subject connectedly without repeating many things which have been said, so that I shall confine myself to answering peculiar positions taken by gentlemen on the other side against separate submission; and right here in this connection (and I trust it is the last time I will refer to anything said by a member) I wish to take up the election scene so graphically portrayed by the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman] and follow it out a little further. He said, if I remember right, that when that negro who was scarred in his country's cause, presented his credentials at the polls with the broad seal of the United States upon them, showing that he had done service for his country, that he was told by the inspector that the people of the State, had kept the property qualification in the Constitution, and that for that reason he could not exercise the right of suffrage—that he had not the two hundred and fifty dollars. I ask him to go with me to that place where the inspector would tell the negro, "No, you cannot vote. The Convention assembled to reform the Constitution of the State of New York, in which Convention was a member from the county in which that lamented General lived, the death sweat from whose brow you so kindly wiped, determined for some reason I know not what, for some political or party reason, that the question as to whether you should be allowed to vote, should not be submitted to the people of this State by itself, and that that Convention hampered the question of your right to vote with a distasteful judiciary system, or with a distasteful canal system, or with a distasteful finance system, and it all went down together, and for that reason you cannot vote." I tell him that if he desires, or if any other man desires to extend the elective franchise to the negro in this State, they will submit it as a distinct, naked proposition to the people. If they desire to hamper it, if they desire to have it depend on this issue, that issue and the other issue, if my learned friend from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], desires it to depend on the question whether the people of the State will sell their canals, then they will submit it all together.

Mr. GREELEY—I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to know if the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed], did not himself in this Hall, last winter, want to enfranchise the blacks as I proposed to do it, by a simple act of the Legislature.

Mr. WEED—When the gentleman was up last I came very near answering that question myself, but it occurred to me that it was my private action, and not of interest to the Convention, and thought I would not for that reason say anything about it, although I wanted to. I have been waiting for the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] or some other gentleman, to ask me this question. I, as a representative upon the floor of the assembly in 1867, was called upon to determine who should cast their votes for the election of members to this Convention. The question came up then, whether negroes should be allowed to vote at that election. I claimed that a member of this Convention was not an officer within the meaning of the present Constitution, and, therefore, there was no prohibition in the Constitution that would prevent a negro's voting for members of the Convention, if the Legislature by statute gave them that right, and that, for that reason, the Legislature had a right to say who should vote at the election of such members. They had a right to say, by statute, who should vote to bring into existence delegates to this Convention, and for that reason, believing then, as I believe now, that negroes in this State have sufficient capacities and intelligence to vote, I voted that they might vote for the election of members to this Convention. The statute passed by the majority that the gentleman represents upon the floor of this Convention, said that nobody should vote upon the adoption of this Constitution, but persons entitled to vote for members of Assembly, hence I say that unless you violate the law, a man cannot vote upon the adoption of the Constitution that we submit, unless he be a qualified voter of the State, while in my view of the political status of a member of this Convention, negroes were not disqualified under the present Constitution from voting for that office, if the Legislature authorized them so to do; and I may state here that I was sustained, and ably sustained by the Attorney-General of the State of New York, a member of the gentleman's own party, and by a large number in both houses, in that position. That is exactly my position. There I claimed it could have been done according to law. Here it can be done only as the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] proposes to do it, in violation of law.

Mr. AXTELL—I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his permission. Does he regard the democratic party responsible for the riot referred to, and if not, with what pertinency, or with what justice does he charge me with having assumed that they were responsible for the riot?

Mr. WEED—Mr. Chairman, the question of the New York riots is a subject that has been quite fully discussed heretofore. The gentleman has been eloquent about it upon the stump, as others have. I myself do not, and never did hold the democratic party or any other party responsible for those unfortunate occurrences. I have heard it repeatedly attributed to the democratic party. The direct deductions from his remarks and the only application made by the gentleman, was substantially as I have stated. I have given his words. It was to be sure in connection with his idea, that all the gamblers would vote against him when he went to the polls, but nevertheless the direct inference from his remarks was that the democratic party was opposed to negro suffrage, and was composed of that element. I so understand it, and other gentlemen who heard him, so understood him. I am happy to know, as I do to-night, that the gentleman does not claim that the democratic party was responsible for that riot. It is the first time I have ever known a gentleman occupying his position in public, to admit it.

Mr. AXTELL—The gentleman misrepresents me.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], that he is not in order. If the gentleman desires to ask any question he must do so through the Chair.

Mr. WEED—I am willing he should ask me a question. I don't understand that the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], proposes to ask a question, but that he is going to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN—I must enforce the rules of order.

Mr. WEED—Mr. Chairman, I was attempting to show when I was fired into that there must be some good reason for the responsible majority of this House taking the position that they do, and I will close my remarks upon that subject by repeating that it must be one of the two reasons that I have given. It must be fear or it must be a desire to carry through other measures. I have said in answer to questions that the position of the Democratic party was that the people of the State alone could govern and control this question of franchise. Many of the statements made by gentlemen on this floor have shown that they have mixed the position that I take, that the people of the State alone, have the power and have the right to decide, with the policy that many of them advocate, to wit: that is, that the republican majority in the United States, have the right to force upon the people of the different States just what they please with regard to this question of suffrage. There is where they err. I do not think with them, that the Congress of the United States has the power to force negro suffrage upon the people of the States. I do not think that the slaves of the Southern States are to-day qualified to exercise the right of elective franchise. I do not think it would be just, proper or safe for any party to give them unlimited power to-day, politically, and I take the two positions, that of the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman] and that of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Colahan], to prove my position upon this question. I admit with the gentleman from Genesee [Mr. Wakeman], that it was an unfortunate state of affairs, I will say, a disgraceful state of affairs in the Southern States, that prevented the teaching of a black man to read and write. I admit that, with my voice, it never should have existed, but I can see what he fails to see, that whatever the cause, the mind of the great mass of blacks in those States is still ignorant, and until that mind is instructed, whatever may have been the cause of his ignorance, however outrageous it was upon humanity to keep him in ignorance, until he is educated, he is not competent to perform the duties of a citizen. That I believe to be the true position. That I believe to be the position of the Democratic party. I have no right to speak for that party. I simply speak for myself. I would say of that party, however, as it has been attacked by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill], that it may be led to-day by Bourbons, it may have been led for years by Bourbons, but he must remember that it was the red republicans, the Robespierres, the bloody rebels of France that overthrew the Bourbons, and that they deluged the country in blood when they did it, and that they left the people a worse government than the one they dethroned, yet they cried liberty, and humanity, and they kept step to the music of progress, as they thought, they lived for the future, they disregarded the past. It is because I cannot follow in the theories of my friend from Onondaga [Mr. Corbett], and keep step to his idea of "the music of the union," because I can't throw entirely behind me the past, and only look to the future, without any guidance from the experience of the past, that I am said to belong to a party led by "Bourbons." I am in favor of progress, not that progress that oppress a nation: that, disregarding the past entirely, is led by reckless enthusiasts, who, to gratify a favorite idea, would lead our land to ruin; but that progress, that seeks from the errors of the past to guide the bark of State safely in the future, that progress that careful thinking men approve, and that works out its benefits to mankind silently, but surely, I am not in favor of revolutionary progress. I know that some suppose the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Merrill], to have referred to another class of Bourbons. [Laughter.] I didn't so understand him. If he did I should have thought that he would have hardly called his own leader to account for leading the Democracy. I do not see any difference in that view, between Bourbon and Rye [laughter], for they are the same kind of leaders, and equally divided politically. But Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, these questions have nothing to do with the real issue: the question is one of how we shall submit this proposition, whether it is best that it should be submitted as a separate and independent proposition, or as a proposition in with the body of the instrument. I wish to call the attention of this committee to one other thing. Suppose we have but three or four amendments to propose to this Constitution in the end, shall we propose an entire new Constitution, or submit them separately. It would be the proper way, as it seems to me, with all these questions before us; and the only way to submit this question to the people, if we believe in it, is to submit it as an independent proposition. I wish to say one word upon the other amendments for the proposed extension, in regard to the registry law. The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley], and other gentleman have advocated that strenuously.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Clinton, [Mr. Weed] that that subject is not now before the attention of the Committee.

Mr. WEED—I supposed that the two questions before the Committee were the questions presented by this amendment, of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], which is proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

The CHAIRMAN—The gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] is entirely correct.

Mr. WEED—The question of Mr. C. C. Dwight's amendment involves the very question I refer to. It proposes to leave out as I understand it, the thirty-day clause. If I am mistaken about that the Chair will correct me.

The CHAIRMAN—The Chair will inform the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] that he is right; therefore it seems to me that it is properly under consideration. The Chair understood the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] as referring to the latter part of the report of the committee in regard to the registry law.

Mr. WEED—It was probably a mistake of my own. I said registry, when I meant to say "residence." It seems to me there is no necessity for that change, as has been ably argued by others here. I can add nothing to their arguments. We should make no change in the Constitution that has served us so well for twenty years, unless it is necessary, and I know of no complaint upon this subject. I agree fully with those who would strike out that portion of this report disfranchising paupers, for I look upon that as covering, as the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] has said, all those who have received temporary relief under the statute, within thirty days from an election; and we know that many old and enfeebled persons have to be relieved in that way under our existing statute. It is one of the best features of our State government that we have the power, and that we have officers whose duty it is to relieve the wants of such people, without compelling them to go to public poor-houses, and such people would be denied the right of voters, if the amendment proposed by the report of the committee, is adopted. Can it be that it is progress, to disfranchise the unfortunate—I trust it may never be done. In conclusion, it seems to me that the views of the minority report are right. This matter should be separately submitted.

Mr. MASTEN—I do not rise for the purpose of making any extended remarks on the question before the committee—still I desire to submit some observations. I have neither the information nor the resolution to enter upon all the subjects which have been explored by gentlemen during this debate. I shall make no attempt to photograph the colored man in his person, nor give the measurement of his moral, intellectual or social powers. Neither shall I attempt to draw any comparison between the white man with a brain, the result of centuries of culture, and the colored man in his present condition. I doubt not he is capable of culture. Nor shall I attempt on this occasion to discuss the merits of colored suffrage, because, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that my duty in this body calls upon me to do so. I shall endeavor to confine myself to two points—to express my opposition to the principle embodied in the first branch of the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], and to maintain that this question of colored suffrage should be separately submitted to the people for their consideration and determination. I am opposed, sir, to the principle by which the possession of property is made the test to vote. I have always supposed that the party with whom I have acted from my youth upward was opposed upon principle to the property test, and I regretted at the time, and I still regret, sir, that the gentleman's amendment sustained the first branch or clause, because, being an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], it is in effect a proposition to make in a certain case the possession of property a test to the right to vote. The gentleman, at the time that he introduced his amendment, stated that he himself was opposed to the property test, and I was at a loss to see how the gentleman was going to vote for that amendment until he subsequently explained. He said that he found the provision in the present Constitution, and he was willing to leave it there. Sir, if there be no other reason why the colored man should not be clothed with the elective franchise than that he has not a certain amount of property, then he should be clothed with it. If the only reason in favor of conferring upon the colored man the right to vote, is, that he has that amount of property, then he should not be invested with this manly privilege. I suppose, sir, that possibly another consideration may have operated upon the mind of the gentleman [Mr. Murphy], which he has not stated to us here. If the question was submitted to the people, whether or not the colored man should vote, and the result should be, perchance, against him, that he should not vote, then certain persons who now have the right to vote would be disfranchised, and it is possible that that may have influenced the gentleman in introducing this amendment. I would prefer that some other provision should be made than the property test in that case. I should prefer that some provisions should be made in the event of the vote being adverse to colored suffrage, that the colored men who now have the right to vote, should continue to have the right to vote during their natural lives, whether they continue to be possessed of property or not. I am sir, in favor of a separate submission of the question of colored suffrage. So much has already been said on that subject, and ably said by gentlemen, that I shall content myself with simply stating certain propositions without much argument or demonstration, indeed without any. I am in favor of submitting every distinct subject in respect to which there is any doubt as to the will of the people, and which if adopted or rejected would not render the instrument we shall prepare incongruous or defective. I am in favor of submitting this question separately, because we are acting here in a representative capacity, and it is our duty as I understand it, to express the will of the people, and not only that, but so to prepare and present our work, that those whose agents we are may adopt what they approve and reject what they disapprove. This question must be submitted to the people. I don't know that there is any desire not to give them a full opportunity to pass upon it. The people must pass upon it, and the question is, or should be, Mr. Chairman, how can it be submitted to the people so as to give them the best opportunity to examine it and to pronounce upon it an intelligent and sober judgment. Is there not doubt as to what the will or judgment of the people is on this subject to-day? How can the will of the people be so well ascertained as by a separate submission? What other way is so direct, so simple, so honest and so fair to the people? This question has been submitted to the people upon former occasions and passed upon by them, and if the expressions they then gave are any criterion by which to form our judgment now, it would be that the people are adverse to free colored suffrage, and that any Constitution which should contain a provision in favor of it would be rejected. But, sir, I am of the opinion that those expressions are not a certain criterion by which to judge of their present opinion or their present judgment upon the question. Great changes have taken place since these votes. The status of the colored man has changed, and the condition of things affecting this question also has changed. At that time there were millions of colored men in slavery, and but few free. The relations and obligations of the States to each other under the Constitution were such that the policy of making colored men part of the governing classes in this State was of exceedingly doubtful policy. Some changes have taken place. The gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight], told us that he voted against free suffrage on the former occasions, and has been converted. He told us of his conversion. I hope other changes have taken place. I certainly hope so, and I wish I could gather more encouragement than I am able to from the change of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight]. If he had told me that he had solved the matter out upon statesman-like principles, and had arrived in that way at the conclusions he has come to, then I should have hoped for more from it. For that is the way in which the people will examine this question; they are going to reason about it and determine upon statesman-like principles. But from the manner in which the gentleman was converted, knowing as I do that he is a gentleman of a logical mind and of fine acquirements, I cannot but regard his conversion as miraculous. There is another reason, sir, why I am in favor of submitting this proposition separately, and that is the importance of this question. The right to vote, although conventional, is a precious one. It is one of the highest rights possessed by the citizen. To be an elector is to be a member of the governing class, a component part of the sovereignty. I desire that my constituents, the people of this State, should have the opportunity of examining that question by itself. I do not desire, and, sir, I am not willing in order that my individual wish may prevail, to boost up this question, by connecting it with others, to the embarrassment of the people; nor am I willing that it should be voted down by being connected with questions which may prejudice it. I am unwilling to compel the people, in order to get what they want, to take what they do not want. I am unwilling to compel them to reject what they want, because it is mixed up with things which they find too unpalatable to take, or which they believe to be detrimental to their interests. There is still another reason why I think this question should be separately submitted. We are here at no little inconvenience to ourselves, and at some expense to the State. We shall doubtless present some very desirable changes in the organic law—changes desired on all hands by the people, as well as the members of this Convention—and I am unwilling that they should be rejected and our labor should go for naught, by being connected with any question in respect to which the will of the people is doubtful. Sir, there are several other reasons which I might state here in this connection, but which have been alluded to, and I shall not therefore detain the committee, because I see the committee is impatient to rise. At least one gentleman who has spoken some four or five times on this question, desires to cut off debate to those who have not spoken or had an opportunity to. It is quite natural now to ask why not submit this distinct proposition separately? No proposition can be placed so distinct from everything else. Its adoption or rejection will not affect or disturb any of the other parts of the instrument we will prepare. Why not submit it? The gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] says it will produce confusion. I am certain, whatever confusion it may produce in his mind or in his action, the people will have no trouble of that description about it. I believe the people have greater capabilities than he seems to think they possess. Another gentleman said it would be cowardice to submit it separately. That has been so fully and conclusively answered by the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale], that I will say nothing on the subject. There was another gentleman, the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Axtell], who said this question should not be submitted separately, because (I do not exactly remember his language) it might possibly be defeated because gamblers and other evil-disposed persons would vote against it. Now, that same gentleman during the debate to-day has spoken of stump speeches. Whether this was a stump speech or not, I do not know. But let us look at this reason and follow it out. I am opposed to submitting this proposition to the people separately, because it may possibly be defeated. The gamblers and evil-disposed persons will vote against it. Now, what is the plain English of that, Mr. Chairman? Is it not that the people are not to be trusted, or else they are not competent to pass upon this question. I hardly think the gentleman would be willing to say that, or that that was what he meant, but still is not that the argument when reduced to plain English? Something has been said also in respect to party. Now, sir, when I came to this Convention I hoped that we would not hear the subject of party mentioned in it. I hoped that we would come here and discharge our duties to the people and not to party only, and prepare a Constitution for submission to the people embodying the true principles of government. But it is said this is a party question. If by a party question it is meant that the democrats in a body are going to vote against colored suffrage, and that the republicans in a body are going to vote for it, both parties will find themselves egregiously mistaken. It will be found that many democrats will vote in favor of it, and I fear sir, it will be found that a great many Republicans will vote against it. One word more. I would like to have this question submitted to the people in this form: shall the colored man vote under such circumstances as the white can, or shall he not vote? That presents a broad question upon principle.

To guard against disfranchising those colored men who can now vote under the property test, in case the people should vote against colored suffrage, I would insert a provision that those who now possess it, should continue to possess it during their natural lives and I would not even as to them require the property qualification. I have an amendment which I shall offer on the first opportunity.

Mr. PAIGE—I rise sir, to explain my views on the subject involved in this amendment. One word in respect to this property qualification. This property qualification of a freehold of two hundred and fifty dollars as the condition of extending the right of suffrage to a portion of the men of color, it by no means an essential part of this amendment. That simply, as I understand it, is embraced for the benefit of the men of color having property to the value of two hundred and fifty dollars. For one, sir, I am perfectly content to strike the property qualification out and present the question fairly to the people, whether they will extend unqualified suffrage to men of color or not. In the Convention of 1846, Mr. Charles P. Kirkland, who was in favor of negro suffrage, introduced as an amendment this identical clause now contained in the Constitution of 1846, copied from the Constitution of 1822. He found, sir, from the opinion of the Convention, that they were in favor of retaining that clause, and that nothing more could be obtained. So, sir, he introduced it; and the amendment upon the division called was adopted by the Convention by a vote of some 63 to 32. In addition to the authority of Mr. Kirkland, no man having a higher reputation than he, his proposition was sustained by one of the ablest members of that Convention, Mr. Nicholas. He also, sir, was in favor of extending unqualified suffrage to the negro race. He was also in favor of submitting the question as a separate proposition to the people, and he sustained this property qualification in the interest of the men of color. For he said, if the vote of the people is adverse to the extension of unqualified suffrage to men of color, and this property qualification is not retained, they will get nothing. But if the vote is adverse to the men of color on the question of unqualified suffrage, this will be left to them. He also explains, sir, how this property qualification came to be inserted in the Constitution of 1822. He stated that he believed that the members of the Convention who adopted that Constitution had come to the conclusion that the man of color had not sufficient intelligence to exercise the right of suffrage; and that therefore, they proposed this qualification not as an element essential in and of itself, or as a condition of the right of suffrage, but as the evidence of sufficient intelligence of men of color to entitle them to exercise this right. He further remarks, that if that was all they could get, it would operate as an incentive and they would be stimulated to acquire a freehold, and thus become both men of property and voters. Now, sir, that provision in this amendment is entirely unessential to the presentation to the people for adoption or rejection of the unqualified right of suffrage, and if any gentleman prefers to strike it out and will submit by itself the simple proposition of unqualified suffrage or not to the people I am content. Now, sir, a few words, in relation to this question of suffrage to the colored race. I shall not go into the question whether the colored race are inferior or equal to the white race. I shall not go into the question whether they are sufficiently intelligent or not to exercise the right of suffrage. But what I contend for is substantially the proposition of the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale], that the ruling and governing power of this State is vested and deposited in the hands of the qualified voters of this State, and that before that power, the exclusive right of suffrage, can be curtailed by admitting to its exercise other participants, the question must be submitted to such qualified voters. It is essential upon principles and essential upon the principles of our government that the qualified voters shall be consulted whether they will consent to surrender a portion of their political power by extending suffrage to men of color. Now, sir, in that respect it becomes quite important to ascertain upon what principles the right of suffrage is claimed for men of color. Some gentlemen have urged that the right is a natural right, a natural right to participate in the administration of the government. Some have contended that the man of color was created equal with the white man; and some have contended that because slavery is now abolished, the free colored men should be admitted to the right of suffrage. The gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] presented another theory, that there were five pre-requisites to entitle a man to exercise the right to vote—intelligence, integrity, independence, interest and incorporation. In examining these different grounds upon which the right of the colored man to vote is to depend, another question presents itself. If it is a natural right, a right inherent in man by birth, then all persons belonging to the human family, both male and female, have this inherent right by their birth, the gift of the Deity, the right to vote. The gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] I believe did not rely upon this natural right. But he relied upon that clause in the Declaration of Independence which declares that all men are created equal; and he argued if the colored man is equal to the white man, and the white man is entitled to the right of elective franchise, so also is the colored man. Now, sir, the phrase, that all men are created equal, embraces the whole human family. It is not confined to males but it also includes females. When the word men or mankind is used as a generic term, it embraces all mankind, men and women. Under the doctrine of natural right to vote, and under the doctrine that all men are created equal, if the colored man has a right to vote, so has the woman. Under the theory of the gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] woman is also comprehended, for woman certainly is as intelligent, and as honest, and as independent, as the man of color, and she also has the two other pre-requisites of the gentleman; and if men of color under these five pre-requisites are entitled to vote so is woman. But the learned gentleman from Oneida [Mr. T. W. Dwight] on the question put to him said he excluded woman because she would or might arrest the progress of society, prevent its development and subvert it. The proposition, Mr. Chairman, strikes me, with due deference to the gentleman from Oneida, as preposterous. To say that woman, the humanizer of man; woman, that gives man all the polish and refinement that he possesses; that she would arrest the progress of society! Why, I must be permitted to use the term, it is preposterous. Now, sir, upon every one of these theories, natural right; that all men are created equal; and the five pre-requisites of the gentleman from Oneida, woman is embraced as well as man. If we stand upon either of these three bases, if we give the right of suffrage to the colored man, then we must give it to the woman. But, sir, my theory is a different one. There is a manifest distinction, upon the principles of the science of government, between natural rights, civil rights, and political rights. Natural rights are inherent in the man or woman by their birth. They are the gift of the Deity. Civil rights are the natural rights of a man when he enters into a political organized society, so far restricted as shall promote the general welfare of the public. They are natural rights transmuted into civil rights. To these you may add the other civil rights included in the Bill of Rights, passed by Congress—a right to sue, a right to be parties and the right to make contracts and to purchase and hold property. These are in addition to the rights given by nature, which are life, liberty and a right to hold private property and the pursuit of happiness. And what are political rights? In other terms, political liberty—political liberty is the security which the Constitution of the civil government gives to the citizen for the protection of his civil rights. Political liberty, therefore, is the constitutional security that the citizen has to protect him in the enjoyment of his civil rights. You may say that qualified voters have political rights, as a right acquired under the Constitution to exercise the right of the elective franchise. But what else, sir? In addition to political rights, there are political privileges, political franchises; the right of suffrage is a political franchise. When the question arises, shall the right of suffrage be extended to another class of persons, or to any other particular persons than the existing voters, it is a question of the gift of a political franchise. A franchise, sir, now exclusively in the hands of the present qualified voters, the ruling and governing power. Now, sir, how do these voters get this political power? I will refer you to the model Constitution of Massachusetts, adopted in 1780. It was prepared by John Adams. He had prepared it as a model Constitution for all the Colonies. It was adopted by the Colony of Massachusetts. When the citizens of Massachusetts seceded from Great Britain and adopted a Constitution of their own, they were in a state of transitu. And when they agreed to adopt that Constitution, that Constitution was a social compact; and a social compact, political writers declare, is the foundation of all governments. In some instances it is an express contract; in some it is implied. Now, sir, in that Constitution, the qualification of electors was defined and prescribed; and in that Constitution all the people of the Massachusetts Colony acquiesced. If it was not by a direct acquiescence in the choice of delegates, it was by a silent acquiescence. Therefore, that Constitution conferred upon the first voters the ruling and governing power, and there it has remained ever since. How was it here in 1777? The people of the Colony of New York voted for delegates to a Convention, authorizing them to ordain and establish a Constitution. They did so, and in that Constitution they declared who should be the electors of the State of New York, and prescribed their qualifications, and when that Constitution was completed and accepted, such electors became the holders and possessors of the political power of the State, and there it has continued ever since. When the Constitution of 1822 was adopted, it also prescribed who should be the electors. So in the Constitution of 1846; and therefore, the political power and the ruling power of the State is now in the qualified voters of the State. Now sir, these qualified voters have a right, having in their hands this franchise, the right of suffrage, to give it to other classes. If they choose to give it to men of color, they have a right to do so. It is a surrender in part of their exclusive governing power. If they choose to diminish the aggregate of that power by taking in other persons as participators, they have a right to do so, and if they think proper also to include and embrace women, or any part of them, they have the right to do that. Then, sir, we see the importance, we see the necessity, we see the absolute necessity, that the question of extension of unqualified suffrage to men of color, now before this Convention, should go down to the depositaries of political power for their action thereon. We are simply appointed and authorized to prepare a Constitution and present it to the qualified voters for their adoption or for their rejection. Its submission to them is essential. It is indispensable that it should go to the voters, as a separate and distinct proposition, as it involves the surrender of a portion of their political power. It strikes me, sir, from this cursory review from the beginning of natural rights, civil rights, and political rights and of the various theories of the right of suffrage, that the theory I have presented is the only true one that the principles of government and the science of government and sound sense and sound reasoning will justify. Gentlemen here have said it is an insult to the people to submit this question to them. Is it an insult to submit a question to the qualified voters whether they will surrender in part their political power by taking in associates, thereby diminishing the individual power of each one? Besides, sir, there is no other possible way to have the revised Constitution become an operative one, or to make the extension of the elective franchise, if granted, available to the men of color, except by sending the Constitution to the qualified voters for their ratification. Why should it not be sent down? It is believed that many of the individual electors are opposed to extending the right of suffrage. If the extension of this right to men of color is submitted to the voters in connection with the other provisions of the Constitution, they must either vote against provisions which they approve in order to defeat the obnoxious provision they disapprove, or they must vote for the obnoxious provision in order to carry the provisions which they approve. The very proposition seems to me, presents upon its face a conclusive argument why this should go to the electors in a separate form. We see at once that we impose upon the elector moral coercion; we compel him to vote against a proposition which he approves, or compel him to accept a proposition which he disapproves. Now, sir, I will refer the Convention to the Bill of Rights contained in the Revised Statutes which provides that all elections ought to be free. It also prohibits all devices by way of hindering or interrupting or interfering with the free exercise of the right of suffrage. Under the conjoint proposition, the election upon the subject of the extension of the right of suffrage to men of color will not be free. Physical coercion is no worse than moral coercion. Why, sir, in a court of law, the court is frequently called upon to set aside a moneyed security on the ground that it is obtained under duress. A man in imprisonment gives a bond for the purpose of acquiring his liberty; the moment he is free he goes into a court of justice and the bond is set aside, because obtained under duress. You deprive an elector opposed to any provision of the Constitution and in favor of another, by putting them together, of the freedom of election. You impose upon him moral coercion; it is no longer a free election; it is a tyrannous exercise of political power which the free institutions of our country will not tolerate, and it will be offensive to the friends of regulated liberty. Now, it seems to me that we ought not to have any difference of opinion on the subject of a separate submission. We ought to wish to have a free and unbiased vote from the qualified voters upon the propositions of this Constitution. In all probability all the other material provisions of the Constitution containing the frame of the government; the executive department, the legislative department and the judiciary, will give rise to so little difference of opinion between the delegates here that it can be reconciled. And there will be so little difference of opinion among the people, that you may submit the frame of the government so called in one proposition, and then you can leave this other proposition to be submitted separately. As to this proposition we know there is a difference of opinion; we know it has been controverted for years; it has been voted down twice. Some gentlemen say they presume now that the qualified voters have changed their opinion on this subject. They have no right to take that for granted. We should submit this question to them and let them speak for themselves. We have no right to speak for the people of this State, and say that they are not opposed to negro suffrage, they having so recently voted against it. Besides we would be unfaithful to our duty here as representatives of our constituents, sent here to prepare a Constitution if we do not submit it to them in a form to enable them to express an opinion upon this controverted question. We cannot ordain a Constitution. We must prepare it and submit it to them, and we must submit it to them in a form upon which they can exercise the freedom of election. What do we do if we do not submit the question of negro suffrage to the voters as a separate proposition? Why, sir, we violate the most solemn obligation imposed upon us as their representatives by compelling them to vote against propositions which they approve and in favor of propositions which they disapprove. I refer this committee to the section of the Bill of Rights which prohibits every person, by menace or otherwise, from hindering the free exercise of the right of suffrage. A conjoint submission will be a hindering of the exercise of the free right of suffrage. It will violate this provision of the Bill of Rights, in its spirit, not its letter. What further do we do? Why, sir, we assume the moral responsibility of defeating this Constitution. In all probability this proposition of negro suffrage may be carried. But in case it shall not be carried in the form of a conjoint proposition, and the whole instrument shall be thereby defeated, in consequence of this joint submission, what a fearful moral responsibility will this Convention have assumed! Why, sir, it is a responsibility that I for one am not willing to assume; and we have no right to say that the Constitution will not be defeated. We, in the first place, are not only bound to submit this proposition separately in order to give our principals the right of free choice, but we are bound also to avoid that possible calamity of a defeat of the whole, by putting the propositions into one instrument. It seems to me, therefore, sir, that this is the only way in which our duty can be discharged to our constituents, and have this subject settled, as it ought to be, satisfactorily to us and them. Now, sir, if we adopt this course, there will be no material differences of opinion here, at least none which cannot be reconciled, and we shall go on with all the other provisions of this contemplated Constitution, and complete them. A question has arisen here—suggested by the gentleman from Westchester [Mr. Greeley] that in case we include in this Constitution men of color or women, or both, they will have the right to vote upon the question of the ratification of the Constitution. Not only that suggestion is against the express terms of the Convention act, but it is against all the principles of the theory of our government which I have endeavored to present to this Convention. The idea is of itself preposterous and cannot be entertained for a moment.

Mr. COOKE—It has been suggested, sir, by gentlemen on both sides of the house, that this question of negro suffrage has divided the political parties of the country, and although it is to be regretted that any political or party division should prevail in this body, perhaps it is wisdom to accept the situation as we find it, and see whether the question derives any new aspect from that fact. The gentleman who proposed the amendment calling for a property qualification for the colored voter, justifies it on the ground, that he is opposed absolutely to negro suffrage under any circumstances, while the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] defends the resolution, or something equivalent to it, on the ground that he favors negro suffrage unrestricted. I do not allude to this circumstance for the purpose of indulging any doubt as to the sincerity of either profession, but as showing simply how intelligent men will differ in the adaptation of means to ends.

Mr. HALE—I would like to ask the gentleman a question, inasmuch as the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] is absent. I would ask the gentleman whether he does not understand that the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] distinctly said that he was opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy].

Mr. COOKE—I understand the gentleman from

Clinton to say to-day, that he is opposed to this particular proposition, and he expressed the disposition, whenever it was in order, to submit a substitute for it, but on this subject of negro suffrage I understand him to contend for the principle of the separate submission of this question to the people, differing only in form from the pending amendment, claiming and urging to-day as he did the other day, that he was decidedly in favor of negro suffrage without any property qualification. For the purpose of reaching the point at which I am aiming, I shall assume that the gentleman from Kings [Mr. Murphy], who proposed this amendment, represents more nearly the attitude heretofore held by the party calling itself the minority of this Convention, than the gentleman from Clinton, and the doctrines of that party as represented by the gentleman from Kings, as he has substantially stated it before the committee, is that the right to participate in the administration of government, is a franchise or privilege, and is conferred solely with reference to expediency and good government, and that the class of persons in question have no such qualifications as to render their participation desirable on the ground of expediency. The other party being in the majority in the Convention held, down to the time of assembling of this Convention, that to participate in the administration of the government, was an inherent right of citizenship, and could not be denied to any citizen, which is placing the right of suffrage on higher ground than mere expediency, and as we believe, beyond the reach of the argument of our opponents. If we degrade this right of suffrage into a mere privilege depending on expediency, we have presented for our consideration a question vastly different from that where we assert this to be an inherent right of citizenship, and that citizenship per se gives the right of the ballot. If we are only to determine whether our laws will be improved and our government made essentially better by calling to our assistance the class of persons affected by this amendment, who on this floor will undertake to demonstrate the justness of that proposition? If that be the question, in determining whether the elective franchise, as it is called, shall be extended or restricted, I tell you, sir, a proposition for depriving and excluding many of the class of citizens who now enjoy this franchise, will find many an advocate here and elsewhere throughout the country. Such was the position of parties in reference to this question until in an evil hour the gentleman from Richmond [Mr. Curtis] unmasked his battery and threatened the Convention with the nameless horrors of female suffrage, whereupon gentlemen, earnest advocates of manhood suffrage, stampeded from the ground on which alone the position was clearly defensible, and took refuge in the camp of the gentleman from Kings. The gentleman from Dutchess [Mr. Carpenter] declared that it was a fallacy to speak of the franchise as being a right, that it was a mere privilege. The gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] declared that he fully agreed with the gentleman from Kings in his premises, but differed from him in his conclusions, claiming that it was perfectly expedient, as he thought, for the negroes to vote, and the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] said that the gentleman from Fulton had spoken well on that subject and he fully accorded with his views, thus leaving my venerable friend from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend]—as I believe he consents to this designation—alone in his glory. I propose now, Mr. Chairman, without taking any precautions at this stage of the question, against the danger that gentlemen see lowering over yonder portion of this chamber, to predicate the action I shall take upon this question, upon the ground that suffrage is an inherent right of the citizen, and to put in a plea of misnomer to this whole matter of elective franchise as applied to a citizen of this commonwealth. I presume it will be pretty generally conceded that our government is based upon the idea that all sovereignty is inherent in the people. It is so declared in terms in every Constitution in the Union except three or four, and in those it is clearly implied. In Alabama, Florida and Kentucky, it is stated in this language: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded upon their authority, and instituted for their benefit, and that, therefore, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may deem expedient." In Arkansas it is stated as follows: "That all power is inherent in the people," and, otherwise, it proceeds in the same language. In Kentucky it is stated as follows:

"That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded upon their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness, security and the protection of property. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper."

I will not stop here to inquire how the people are to exercise the indefeasible, inalienable right to alter or reform their government, unless they have the indefeasible and inalienable right to bring themselves in contact with the government, and to participate in some way in its administration.

Mr. FOLGER — Will the gentleman from Ulster [Mr. Cooke] allow me to ask him one question? I would like to ask him if the people are all of one sex?

Mr. COOKE — I understand it not to be so. Perhaps my friend has different views from myself on that subject.

Mr. FOLGER — Then, if it is an inherent right in the people to take part in the government, how do we shut out the female sex?

Mr. COOKE — I take great pleasure in stating to my friend that if I succeed in expressing my views in regard to this question, he will find his question fully answered. The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] seems to think that this power, particularly this political power that these provisions in the several Constitutions say should inhere in the people, reside in that portion of the people only who find themselves qualified voters under the law, and that their power, I suppose, is sovereign; there is nothing beyond or behind it, but that all power is derived from them. In this connection, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of Chief Justice Taney in the celebrated Dred Scott case, to show what is meant by the term "people?" Who are the people in whom sovereignty resides.

"The words people," he says, "and citizens are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body, who, according to our Republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the sovereign people, and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty."

The gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] supposes that there is another organized existence, called "society," that somehow interposes between the citizen and the government, and in which body sovereignty resides, and between his argument and that of the gentleman's from Broome [Mr. Hand], I believe it is made out that this society uses government for the purpose of divesting or destroying the natural rights of the people, uses it as a sort of weapon with which to maul the people out of their rights. Society organized, with the government in its hands, the object of which is to destroy the natural rights of a citizen—

Mr. SMITH — Will the gentleman allow me to put him a question? I should like to know whether he is now professing to state my position, or whether he is merely giving his own inference from the result of my argument.

Mr. COOKE — I was endeavoring to get at the system that the gentleman was laying down, and explaining before the committee.

Mr. SMITH — If he is stating his inference, as the result of my argument, I have nothing to say about it; but if he is attempting to represent my position I must beg leave to correct the gentleman, for he misrepresents it.

Mr. COOKE — The gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] will understand I am not pretending to give his language but I am grouping his argument with that of the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand], trying to state the result as I understand it of the two arguments combined. I believe the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith] was very explicit in stating that society made use of government, or that government was the agent of society, and the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] followed on with this old notion about government gathering from the people, or the people when entering into the political compact surrendering their rights, and I believe in the little skirmish they had with the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] they pretty much agreed among themselves that the people could divest themselves of any right.

Mr. SMITH — If the gentleman will allow me for a single moment, I am very sorry to interrupt gentlemen in their arguments, but as the gentleman seems to have misunderstood the position I took, I beg to state it in a single word. My theory and position is this, that society is an institution of God, a divine institution; that government is a necessity of it, and pre-supposes the existence of society, and that society uses government as a power or instrument by which to regulate the civil conduct of its members, and secure their rights and their liberty; that government is an agent of society, not for the purpose of destroying the rights of man, but for protecting those rights, and securing the highest interests of man in his capacity as a social being, and a subject of God's moral government.

Mr. COOKE—And yet, somehow or other, through the instrumentality of government or the society of which the citizen becomes a member, I certainly understood the gentleman to conclude that he became divested of certain rights, that naturally and independent of government, appertained to him. But the language I have read from these Constitutions is that citizens or members of the State are the sovereign people, and I submit, if language can be made to mean anything, the Constitutions from which I have read excluded the idea of interposing any power between the citizen and the people or the government. Government, practically and theoretically, is nothing more nor less than society organized, and when, in the organization of society into government, it is provided that sovereignty shall inhere in the people, it will not do to say that the effect of the instrument is to take it from the people and deposit it elsewhere. What ground is there for saying that by entering into the civil compact the people divest themselves of their natural rights? I instance the right to the pursuit of happiness which includes the right to regulate one's own conduct, in other words, the right of self-government. I maintain that the object of government is to protect and regulate these rights and not to destroy or divest them. And if there is any government that tends in the direction of the destruction of these rights, rather than their protection and regulation, and to secure the people in the enjoyment of them, that government is not the government that is bargained for by these Constitutions. The Declaration of Independence has it, that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Blackstone, from whom a great deal of the doctrine of the gentleman from Fulton [Mr. Smith], as well as the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], is drawn, expresses it in this way: [1 Blackstone 124] "The principle aim of society is to protect individuals in the enjoyment of those absolute rights which were vested in them by the immutable laws of nature. It follows that the first and primary end of human laws is to maintain and regulate those absolute rights of individuals."

The government, by consent of the governed, in carrying out its object of protecting and regulating the natural rights of man, makes provision for a substitution or delegation of certain powers of the citizen, and suppose government, for convenience or other prudential reasons, should recall from one portion of the citizens and delegate to another, by the consent of the governed, the right, practically and for the time being, to participate in the administration of the government. This right, by that act, is merely substituted, and the body, or the class of persons who are allowed to exercise the right for the purposes of government, hold their power only by substitution and delegation from all the citizens in whom sovereign power is vested. Ultimate sovereignty remains in the people. The Constitution of Massachusetts adopted in 1780, Article 5, has this provision.

"All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government, vested with authority, whether legislative, executive or judicial, are the substitutes and agents and are at all times accountable to them."

I think it follows that notwithstanding authority is conferred on the agents of government over many of the rights of citizens, in many cases to their entire suspension, yet ultimate sovereignty remains inalienably in the citizens. Franchise is defined to be a privilege granted to a person or a number of persons by the sovereign. My objections to calling the right of suffrage or the right of a citizen to participate in the administration of government are, First, that the recipients of this privilege are the sovereigns. Sovereignty is in the citizens. It is in the people, which Judge Taney says means the citizens. Not that class of citizens who, by some statute, are allowed the right of suffrage, but all the citizens who would have the right in case of a dissolution of the government to form a new one. Second, the government agencies who, as is said, confer this privilege, are not the sovereign power. Any concession by society or by the government, in regard to any right over which it has any delegated power, is a mere surrender of the business of its trust or agency to the principal, and is no more a grant of privileges or powers than is the cancellation of a power of attorney between man and man. The ballot is the form prescribed by government for the exercise of sovereign power, which inheres in the citizen—the power or right the people already have, and the grant is of the form and not of the substance. True, this particular manner in which the sovereign power shall be expressed, is regulated by government, and so far as respects the form, it is political, but it is not accurate to say, it is a mere political right. Suffrage, or such equivalent as shall be provided by law, is designed to protect, and affects no less a right in the people than life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, which are both natural and inalienable rights. I therefore claim that the gentleman from Rensselaer [Mr. M. I. Townsend] was not so wide of the mark, in speaking of the right of suffrage as a natural and inalienable right, as those gentlemen by whom he was so roughly criticised were in pronouncing it a mere political right. These natural rights that inhere in the people, when they are committed to the hands of government to be regulated, protected and secured, are not surrendered or abandoned; and when the right of man to regulate his own conduct, the right of citizens to govern themselves, is acknowledged to be a natural right, and, when they come to enter into society, a government is called upon to regulate the exercise of those rights, when they say that the manner in which those rights shall be exercised is through the ballot, they are not granting the right to participate in government. They are only affording a means by which they can exercise a right that resided in them before. What ground is there for saying that this proposition must necessarily be submitted to the people separately? The Constitution under which we are now living allows two modes of amending and revising the Constitution. It provides in the first place that the Legislature may pass an act submitting any proposed amendment to the people, and on its passing two successive Legislatures, if approved by the people, on a submission to them, the amendment shall be adopted, and form part of the Constitution. This contemplates a case where there is some distinct amendment that can properly be adopted and form a part of the Constitution as it had existed. There is another case where the question is to be submitted to the people at the end of every twenty years, whether a Convention shall be called to revise the Constitution, not to propose specific amendments but to cast over the whole ground and see whether the whole instrument wants revision. I think, sir, that this provision contemplates that the Convention shall be called only in a case where the whole instrument wants looking over, or a considerable portion of it, and which cannot be improved or amended in the manner provided by the first section through the Legislature, and a submission to the people. And when a Convention is voted by the people to perform this duty, it is in contemplation that the Convention shall devise and perfect an instrument as an entirety, a whole, a thing that will do for the organic law of the State. If all that was required had been the amendment of that particular section, the proposition whether or not this property qualification clause should be stricken out, it would have been far cheaper, and not only that, it would have been more direct for the Legislature to submit that question directly to the people and let them pass upon it, whether or not that clause should be stricken out of the present Constitution. It is hardly to be believed that the people, in voting this Convention intended to send delegates here to do precisely what might have been done without the aid of this Convention. Here we are met on the very first proposition that is presented with this cry of a separate submission. A submission of what? We do not know yet whether we will have anything to submit, and it begins to look as if we would never reach a vote on this question. It is not so clear to my apprehension that we are going to have this proposition to submit either conjointly or separately. But, so it is, that in reference to the first subject that is started in this Convention, day after day is spent in a discussion as to whether or not, it shall be submitted by itself. I have nothing to add to what has been said by way of argument to prove that this separate submission is not called for, but I will remind the committee of one thing that the question that was agitated more before the people, and was put more directly to the people by both political parties during the canvass which was to decide whether or not this Convention should be called at all, was this question of negro suffrage, and on striking out the section relating to color from the Constitution. I can very well conceive that perhaps the people did not understand it fully then, but I recollect it very well. I have heard it argued to them against the calling of this Convention, that the object would be to incorporate this principle of negro suffrage and to strike out the property qualification for negroes. I apprehend that of the large number who voted against the calling of this Convention, a very large majority would give as a reason for voting against it to-day, that they thought the only object of calling the Convention was to reform the Constitution with reference to this very feature. They had it before them once, and if this question was not understood then, I do not know as it will be understood when it is submitted to them hereafter. I understand very well that they may have been in some confusion as to the terms of the Constitution as it was or as it ought to be. For we find my friend from Rensselaer [Mr. Seymour], making a slight mistake by saying that the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], was to strike the word "white" out of the Constitution, for that is the language he used in his speech as it is reported. It is the fact that it is the very reverse, for the proposition of the gentleman from Cayuga is to strike the word black or rather "color" from the Constitution, and that is also the proposition presented in the report of the majority of the committee. The Constitution as it is proposed to be amended either by the committee, of the gentleman from Cayuga [Mr. C. C. Dwight], has neither the word white nor black in it, and that is why we say that it is better than it was before, because it effectually ignores the whole subject, and a stranger reading the Constitution as it is proposed to be amended either by the report of the committee or by the substitute would never learn that there was a colored man in the State of New York. Now I think that although this Convention have the power, and although they may, if they choose, submit any proposition separately, yet presumptively the action of this Convention is not to be submitted separately. We are called here to present an entire Constitution, and it never could have entered into the contemplation of those who established this mode of effecting an amendment or revision of the Constitution, that in the case of a mere simple proposition standing distinct and independent, such as was contemplated in the first section, allowing amendments through the action of the Legislature, and submitting the proposition to the people, a Convention should be required. Separate amendments are proposed without a Convention, and the main object of this mode is to have a revision of the Constitution. This is a deliberative body. This Convention is not simply to write out a proposed amendment to the Constitution and submit it to the people. We have other functions. We have got to go through the instrument and examine its various provisions, and see that there is a proper correspondence and adaptation between them, and see if when altogether it will make a proper instrument to be adopted as the organic law; and after that is all done it goes to the people. Now, suppose we start right here and declare that this question of suffrage, which it is hoped is to be the first question passed upon in this Convention, and provide that it shall be submitted separately to the people. Then a committee reports a basis of representation. How will we know, unless we get an arranged system and put it together, how to fix a basis of representation. It is generally supposed, I believe, that the basis of representation ought to be the classes to which the qualified voters or electors of the State belong. We may go on and prepare a system, and may put together the several parts and make what we call a very good Constitution; but whether it is good or whether it is a perfect absurdity will depend upon the final question that the people have got to decide whether they adopt the proposition that is recommended in this amendment or not. And so with other portions of the Constitution. I was in hopes that my friend from St. Lawrence [Mr. Merritt] would call up his resolution to-day and get a vote upon it, which would determine whether we should not defer the whole question as to what parts of the Constitution should be submitted separately until we should find what kind of an instrument we had adopted and how many parts it should consist of, and then see how we could change or modify the several parts to answer the emergency of the people refusing to ratify some part submitted to them.

Mr. MERRITT—If the gentleman will give way one moment I will say that while I fully believe that the resolution which the gentleman has referred to was a very proper one, and that it represents the opinion and judgment of the majority of this Convention, it ought to have been adopted at an earlier stage of the session. I thought perhaps, that it might to a certain extent stop this storm of words that we have had. The gentleman seemed to have been very much exercised on the question of the submitting of this particular proposition pending, and has coupled it with the merits of the question to such an extent that it might be regarded as trenching in some manner upon the rights of the minority as they couple it with the merits of the question pending. This is the reason why I thought best not to call it up. On that account I propose to delay action on it, at least until the suffrage question is disposed of.

Mr. COOKE—I have already detained the Convention longer than I intended, and with these remarks I will close.

Mr. CASE—Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HAND—I want to ask the gentleman a question—

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—The gentleman from Madison [Mr. Case] has given way for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN—If the gentleman from Madison [Mr. Case] gives way, the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] has the floor.

Mr. HAND—If the right to vote is a natural right I would ask in what sense the women of this country exercise their natural right. Is the voting done for them by the consent of the governed? If so, how express it?

Mr. COOKE—If it is a natural right? I believe the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] has not yet come to vote by a natural right. My idea is that it is not altogether a political one; that voting is the means of participating in the administration of the government, thus exercising the natural right of self-government, but that the manner of exercise of that right is altogether political.

Mr. HAND—And that when some one exercises it for me without my consent still it is my right.

Mr. COOKE—I do not know that I understand the gentleman exactly. It is very difficult to understand upon what part of my argument the gentleman from Broome [Mr. Hand] predicated his question. He is naturally cautious himself, and sometimes, I think, his questions are slightly obscure.

Mr. HAND—There is no difficulty in any member of the Convention understanding me.

Mr. T. W. DWIGHT—I will only occupy a moment in explaining a misapprehension of the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige], who spoke in regard to my general position on the right of suffrage. I will simply restate my theory so as to make it clear, if possible, in a very brief space. My idea in a few words is, that there are two general grounds upon which persons may be excluded from the exercise of the elective franchise: the first ground is that of personal incapacity, and the other admits their personal capacity, but denies their admission to the elective franchise lest it might in some way tend to subvert society or to retard its progress. In treating severally of incapacities, I divided them into five classes, to which the gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] correctly referred. When the question was asked me by the gentleman from Essex [Mr. Hale] in what class I would place the right of females to vote, I said that if they were to be excluded on any ground (and whether they should be excluded I did not say) it would be because their admission to the elective franchise might tend either to subvert society or retard its progress. Not that they would willfully or deliberately exercise the elective franchise in such a way as to retard the progress of society, but that there might flow out of the fact that they were admitted to the elective franchise, some such influence upon the progress of society as would be injurious to it, as for example it might tend to subvert the family. If we should regard the family as being at the basis of society, then the admission of women to the elective franchise, if it would subvert the family, might tend to retard or submit society. That is what I meant.

Mr. BARNARD—I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. Barnard and it was declared lost.

Mr. McDONALD—I regard the vote which has been now taken by this committee is an intimation (and I know that is desired) that I should be as brief as I can in stating what my views on this subject are, and I will try and defer to that intimation. In order to get at a right mode of deciding these various questions as to what classes of persons should or should not vote, I think a different rule ought to be followed from any stated, and I will presently state what that rule is. It seems to me that as to the various rules that have been established here, the difference between them arises rather from the difference of definition of words used than from any difference in fact. If the gentlemen who are using the words "rights" and "privileges" will look into the Dictionary, they will find by the Dictionary one definition of "privilege" is "the exercise of a right," and the whole trouble, as I conceive, arises from this difference. As regards voting, I think the same rule should be applied to regulate it as if applied to any other exercise of right of participation in political or governmental affairs, viz., that everybody or every class of persons have the right so to speak, to vote, or in any other way participate in governmental affairs, whenever and only when the exercise of that right will not be an injury to the community, considered collectively and as individuals. And that is the theory that I would go on. That is the theory by which I would test everything. Let us apply that test to the question now before us. The question immediately before us is, would it be an injury to the community to allow persons of color who have not two hundred and fifty dollars of real estate to vote? A large majority of the gentlemen of this Convention, I guaranty, would say not! Then why are we discussing it, when, as appears, by what has been said in these debates, that a large majority of this Convention fully and honestly believe that this restriction ought not to be in the Constitution? I repeat, why are we discussing this question of a separate submission of such question? Suppose the canal policy comes up here for discussion? Will gentlemen ask the committee, or will anything be heard here except on the question as to what is the right canal policy for the State? Will gentlemen say that people have differences on that question which require a separate submission as to what shall be the canal policy of this State, and ask to have a separate vote at the polls upon it. Now, why not submit that separately as well as this? If the question of the judiciary comes up here, will we hear so much about what the people may think about this, or the people may think about that plan? Will any discussion be heard here except as to what will be the best judiciary plan for this State? Will any one ask that it be submitted and voted upon separately from the other articles which may be contained in the Constitution we shall frame? Now it seems to me that if gentlemen will remember what we are sent here for, and what our duties are, that we can decide this question as we ought to decide it. As the gentleman has stated, the Constitution can be only amended in two ways. It can be amended by the Legislature first passing on it, then another Legislature passing upon it, and then it must be approved by a vote of the people at the polls. If all three adopt it, it is a part of the organic law, but if either of these fail to adopt it, it is not a part of the organic law. After the people, by the first Legislature, and again by the second Legislature, have approved it, if the people at the polls say no, it is the end of it and it is not organic law, and so it is not if either of the Legislatures reject it. Why? Because the people as individuals at the polls or as represented by either Legislature have rejected it. But how is it as to ordinary law. Ordinary law is only ratified once, and then by the people in a representative capacity, and the minute it is thus ratified in that representative capacity it becomes law. It is the voice of the people of the State of New York through their representatives; but when you come to organic law, which is made, among other things, to restrict this power of passing ordinary law, it is regarded of so much more importance that it must be submitted to the people at least twice, and if it be by legislative action, three times, and unless the people each and every time ratify it, it is not organic law. Now, to those gentlemen who talk so much about being in favor of separate submission, I say I am in favor of separate submission here, and now. Here is the place provided for, and where the people have everything separately submitted. Why pass upon the Constitution by separate submission twice? Every proposition is separately submitted once. The gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] has a chance here to vote as he pleases, and when he votes he votes or can vote, not only for himself, but for the entire constituency he represents, on each and every clause and proposition separately submitted. He or any other member, of this Convention, after this opportunity, should be the last to ask for a separate submission at the polls. But again, if it be true that in order to make organic law the people must pass upon it at least twice, why then do we not act up to that position? Why stand here arguing whether we should submit to the people a thing that the people through us do not believe in—that we, as the representatives of the people, cannot indorse? That the people through us cannot approve, and hence which cannot be approved twice by the people. Gentlemen talk about precedent. I tell them there is no such precedent, and I hope never will be. The gentleman from Schenectady [Mr. Paige] has already told you that the Convention of 1846 was in favor of retaining that proposition. The people, in 1846, through them, as delegates, were in favor of that, and they thereby ratified it in that form. It was submitted to the people at the polls and they ratified it. It was thus ratified twice by the people, and it thereby became a part of the organic law of the land. If a delegated Convention had not ratified it, it never would have become law, it never could have become law; and I have that confidence in the Convention of 1846, and I hope to have it in this Convention, that they never would pass upon and approve a proposition that they did not honestly believe in. I ask the gentleman from Clinton [Mr. Weed] if to-morrow there was an extra session of the Legislature called, and this proposition was submitted to him as a legislator to pass upon, would he pass upon it as a legislator and send the people anything he did not believe in himself? He might as well, acting as a Legislator, pass any law in that way. As I understand, an honest legislator has only one excuse for not acting according to his honest conviction, and that is that his constituents are by a large majority of a contrary opinion, and he wants to represent them, that is the only excuse I ever heard for a legislator doing a thing that he did not himself believe in, and that excuse is removed in this case, for the reason that our work has to be finally submitted to the people themselves, to be ratified or rejected by them. This, I claim, is the great reason why we cannot submit this question separately, simply because we do not believe in it and cannot approve it ourselves. And I cannot see how this Convention, no more than if it were a Legislature, any more than if it were any other legislative body, can send down to the people any thing which they condemn and say themselves, ought not to become law. Again the gentlemen who favor separate submission state various reasons why this ought to be submitted separately. It has been called to their attention that if we submit this proposition separately, why not submit anything else separately? Why not submit the Canal question? Why not submit the Judiciary? Why not submit the Legislative? Why not submit all these and every other question separately? The last gentleman that spoke, claims that this ought to be done. Now it seems to me that if that is done, if you get half a dozen or more different propositions and submit them separately, you make a vote which practically cannot be carried out and get the true expression of the people. It is easy for men to talk here, but we must transfer ourselves down to the polls and if any man will go to the polls and have there half a dozen propositions to be submitted to the people, he will find that it is not practicable, that the people are not so well versed and are not so fully concerned with regard to what is being voted upon separately, that they will pay the attention that is necessary, and any man can go to any other friend and can get him to vote in this way or that way as he may ask, as a favor, on one or two of the propositions. I therefore claim that to submit all questions to the people, is not practicable, and that I do not think is claimed by any great number here at all. But those who advocate a separate submission in this case, go on and try to give reasons why this should be submitted separately, rather than other questions. The first reason they give is that it relates to who are to be the electors, who are to compose the future body politic of the State, and therefore it should be submitted rather than other questions. Let us test it by this reason: How many propositions are there here of the same kind? We have a proposition to exclude paupers. Why not submit that? That relates to a great many more voters than this does. We have a proposition here, that after two years we shall not admit foreigners to vote within thirty days after naturalization. That relates to the right of a great many more persons to vote. Why not submit that? We have a proposition here to apply the thirty days plan immediately. They tell you that they will exclude a great many thousand voters. Why not submit that? We have a proposition here in regard to the right of suffrage of the women of this State. Why not submit that? We have a proposition here in regard to the Registry Act. Why not submit that? We have a dozen propositions relating to the elective franchise. Why not submit each and every one of them? They all relate to the same subject-matter—to who shall compose the future body politic. If, then, you submit one, why not submit all? It is easy enough to talk about submitting this alone, and if this be the only reason, that it relates to the question of elective franchise, who are to be the voters? There is no distinction; none can be shown. All these other questions are like this and should be submitted with it. But there are certain reasons why I claim this question ought
